Charlotte Wiggins, a public affairs officer, said customers of the post exchange and commissary were being asked by Army officials to return all containers of Excedrin Extra-Strength capsules. The request echoed an earlier recall issued by the manufacturer, Bristol-Myers.

Cyanide-tainted capsules were found in bottles of the pain-killer at the homes of two Washington residents who died of cyanide poisoning this month. The bottles carried the lot number 5-H102, the same number on the bottles found Friday at Fort Leonard Wood.

Wiggins said the first bottle from the lot was discovered by a commissary worker who was checking the capsules after hearing stories about the deaths in Washington. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration warned Wednesday against the use of the capsules, and Bristol-Myers followed with a nationwide recall.

Chisholm says child day care major issue

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Former U.S. Rep. Shirley Chisholm said Monday that quality day care needs to become an important public policy because of the increasing number of mothers who work outside the home.

Many mothers go to work concerned that their children are not getting quality care, and children are left to fend for themselves, Chisholm said at a news conference at the 77th annual meeting of the American Home Economics Association. Solutions should include after-school centers for children who return home a few hours before their parents return from work, she said. Chisholm said the centers would give children the opportunity to continue to develop attitudes and values learned in their classrooms. The conference started Monday and runs through Thursday.

Man enters guilty plea in professor's death

LAWRENCE - Eugene Avis Jr. pleaded guilty Monday in Douglas County District Court to a reduced charge of second-degree murder in the death of a University of Kansas professor.

Avis, 25, of Kansas City, Mo., was scheduled to go on trial July 14 on charges of first-degree murder and felony theft in the death of George Hixson, a professor of interior design who was a member of the KU faculty for 22 years.

Hixson, 57, was strangled and beaten. His body was found in a closet of his condominium Dec. 2, and it was determined he had been killed Nov. 22. Avis was arrested Dec. 23 in Jackson County, Mo.

In a plea agreement with the district attorney's office, the felony theft charge was dropped in exchange for Avis' guilty plea to second-degree murder. Avis had been accused of taking a television and stereo from Hixson's home.

Judge James Paddock accepted the plea and set sentencing for July 22. Second-degree murder carries a minimum sentence of five to 20 years in prison and a maximum sentence of 15 years to life.

Avis told the judge Monday that he did not strangle Hixson and had not intended to

Murder charges filed in death of Kansan

BOISE CITY, Okla. - Prosecutors charged two Texas men with first degree murder Monday in the weekend death of a Liberal man whose body was found along a highway in the Oklahoma Panhandle.

The charges filed in Cimarron County District Court named Allen Kent Watts and Richard Keith Bartlett, a spokeswoman in the district attorney's office in Boise City

Paul Renfrow, a spokesman for the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation, said Watts, 19, and Bartlett, 20, both of Athens, Texas, were last seen in California. No arrests had been made Monday afternoon.

The two are accused of the shooting death of Robert Gummow, 55, of Liberal, Kan., Renfrow said.

Authorities said Gummow's body was discovered on the side of U.S. Highway 64 about 20 miles east of Boise City early Saturday. His car was missing. Authorities are waiting for the results of a state medical examiner's autopsy before releasing information on how many times Gummow was shot or the type of weapon used.

No murder weapon was recovered at the scene, and authorities said they had no motive for the killing.

Chase ends with bikes strewn on highway

MISSION - A chase between police and four people in a pickup truck suspected of stealing bicycles from a Mission bicycle shop ended after 10 miles Monday - but not before two police cars were damaged, one officer injured and bicycles were strewn along Interstate 70.

"All I saw were bicycles - and more bicycles - bouncing off the roadway," said Sgt. Gary Hines of the Mission Police Department. He gave chase after a motorist alerted him that bicycles were being loaded into a truck outside Turner's Schwinn Cyclery at 5:15 a.m.

Hines followed the truck into Kansas City, Mo., including a jaunt through the Country Club Plaza, before ending up on I-70.

A Kansas City police squad car not involved in the chase was heavily damaged when it ran over one of the bicycles in the highway, struck a median and hit a guardrail, authorities said.

Two adults and two juveniles were arrested after the truck wrecked in Independence. Police said burglary charges were filed against them in Mission, and other charges were pending.

Paris unveils restored Miss Liberty replica

PARIS - A 52-foot replica of the Statue of Liberty, restored to shiny health after a century of corrosion and war wounds, was unveiled Monday by Premier Jacques Chirac, accompanied by military bands and cheered by Parisiens lining the banks of

The bronze statue was a gift from Americans in Paris in 1885, one year before her more famous sister was placed on her pedestal in New York Harbor.

The Paris statue, which is about one-third the size of the New York one, also had a big gash in the right shoulder, apparently caused by a stray shell during World War

French officials are taking every opportunity to emphasize France's historic ties to the monumental statue and to the American Revolution, partly in an effort to soothe resentment felt in the United States when France refused passage to American fighter planes on their way to attack Libya last April 15.

The Paris replica, one of many versions of sculptor Frederic Auguste Bartholdi's giant creation erected around France, carries a book in her right arm with gold inscriptions showing the dates July 4, 1776 - same as on the Miss Liberty in New York Harbor - and July 14, 1779, marking the storming of the Bastille, the key date in the French Revolution.

Movie raises funds for American survivors

HONOLULU - Pat Morita, co-star of "The Karate Kid: Part II," attended a fundraising screening of the movie to benefit American survivors of the nuclear bomb attacks on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Proceeds from the screening and reception went to help Hibakusha, the Hawaii organization of survivors. 'The irony in their situation is that these were American citizens and our country has never recognized" that they too were touched by the bombing, the actor said.

'The Land' offers farming alternatives

Jon Piper, research associate, (left) presents a morning lecture in the classroom and office building.

About seven miles southeast of Salina, along the banks of the Smoky River, stands a farm — but not just any farm. This is the location of the world-reknown Land Institute.

"The Land," as it is known by its supporters, was founded approximately 10 years ago by Wes and Dana Jackson, native Kansans returning to their previous home via California.

When referring to "The Land," it is impossible to avoid intertwining the most publicly visible member of the founding team, Wes, with the institution.

Jackson's teaching experience includes two years as a high school biology instructor and assistant professor of biology at Kansas Wesleyan in Salina for four years. He has also served as an associate professor of environmental studies at California State University, Sacramento for two years, where he also spent four years as a full professor of environmental studies.

"The Land" serves eight to 10 students per session by providing training and research opportunities in alternative energy systems and sustainable agricultural projects. The sessions, lasting 43 weeks to follow nature's growing season, begin in mid-February and continue through mid-December.

The school has evolved from a 28-acre plot operating on a "shoestring" budget to today's near 200-acre total, with an annual operating budget of $300,000.

As a part of Jackson's search toward sustainable agriculture, Jackson said his primary goal for "The Land" is finding perennial grains, allowing no-till field preparation. This practice not only results in less soil erosion, but also reductions in productions costs.

But to understand why such a school was established, its founder's philosophy toward farming must be explained.

The real agricultural problem of today, Jackson said, is a "problem of culture at large. It's a failure of culture — not economics." But Jackson is not a dreamer in search of Utopia

Jackson said that in order for his goals to be realistic, a wider and more long-range vision is needed.

"We need to get people used to the idea that ('The Land') will still be here in 50 to 100 years," Jackson said. "People are not thinking big enough — there's a killing to be made on sustainable agriculture."

He said that even if the land grant universities were to enter the market, his school has a long-term future through its role in questioning and research.

"There's always a need for the outside, independent critic," Jackson said.

While "The Land" has gained both respect and notoriety during its short lifetime, Jackson does not expend a lot of energy to endear himself to the established, corporate agribusiness community.

In reference to the corporations, Jackson said he doesn't receive — or expect — much support.

Nor does he push others — unless requested or prompted — to conform or adopt his beliefs.

"I don't think that does any good,"

Jackson said.

But he doesn't limit his criticisms to "agribusiness corporations" — he also has time to take on governmental policies and the regulatory bodies involved with farming.

"The demise of agriculture as we know it," Jackson said, was caused by governmental policy. He cited the "fence-row to fence-row" planting programs of former Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz as a prime example. But he doesn't blame the individuals as much as the system, adding that changes in personnel have

"While the secretaries may come and go, the corporate and power structures that put them there are not (changing)," Jackson said.

little effect, even at the secretary's

"And industry isn't going to do anything either," he said.

Jackson said Pioneer Seed Co. is the only corporation "that contributes much" to the school.

But some areas of support are neither desired — nor sought — by Jackson, such as funds from the state or federal government sector. "I can't fill out the forms," Jackson said.

He said a large share of his motivation to start the institute came from a literal interpretation of the creed for the Future Farmers of America. But, he added, "a lot of people who have said (the creed) didn't insist that agriculture remain a way of life and let agribusiness subvert a way of "The term agribusiness is supposed to make ourselves feel better about ourselves," he said. "Society must regain the notion that farming should be regarded as a noble way of life and not educate persons to leave their communities."

Jackson said the school's best students are those "dissatisfied with the current structure of the country, idealistic and smart — and with a background in biology, if possible."

In addition to the different time structure for the institute, other differences from the "typical classroom" are readily apparent.

"Classes" begin with warm-up sessions from 9 to 10 a.m., with students meeting for informal exercises and conversation. Lectures, led either by Jackson, students or guest lecturers begin at 10 and continue until noon. Another difference is in the fact there are no "tests" at the school.

"We don't use the industrial model (for classrooms)," Jackson said. "We want them to learn."

Individual projects and asignments take up the remainder of the day, with students returning to their homes in Salina. The students typically use car pools or ride bicycles as a group to attend class.

Although the school has been open for 10 years, a surge in publicity the first part of this year has brought both good and not-so-good things to the school and its members.

In January, Jackson was featured in an article appearing on the front page of The Wall Street Journal. New Age magazine also told of "The Land's" mission in an article titled "The Re-Greening of America" in their March issue. "The Land" and Jackson have also been written of extensively in Mother Earth News magazine, including a "Plowboy Interview" with Jackson.

The increase in publicity has brought on extra work for the school's small office staff, composed primarily of Dana Jackson and Sharon Thelander, and on Wes Jackson, in the form of increased demands on his time for lectures and speeches.

Jon Piper, staff ecologist, said farmers who may be losing their farms are becoming interested in what the "alternatives people" are saying.

Piper, originally from New Hampshire, studied in Maine and at Washington State University before moving to Salina.

"People are seeing problems — and they are wanting a quick solution," Piper said.

One of the problems with stories such as those in The Wall Street Journal, Piper said, is that it "tried to be interesting," which also made it "sensationalistic."

Wildcat jumper Harrison takes skills abroad

By TIM FITZGERALD Staff Writer

To say former K-State track and field coach Steve Miller thinks highly of Kenny Harrison would be an understatement.

"I've coached some athletes who have been world record holders and I've coached some kids who have been some of the most outstanding athletes in the world, but Kenny Harrison is the best I've ever coached," said Miller of K-State's National Collegiate Athletic Association triple jump champion.

Today the young man who Miller said he will coach until the two can no longer stand each other, is headed for Europe.

After Harrison placed fourth in the triple jump at The Athletic Congress' meet in Eugene, Ore., June 21-22, the K-State sophomore was asked to represent the United States in a twoweek series of six meets across

The TAC meet was what Miller decribes as the biggest meet in the United States this year and he was pleased with his performer's response to the pressure.

"After the competition was over, we had a very large get-together of the Olympic staff and other coaches from around the world who had come to watch the competition," said Miller, who is now an assistant athletic director at K-State. "The consensus of opinion was two things - No. 1 is that Kenny Harrison is technically the best (triple) jumper in the United States and No. 2 is that he will be the world record holder and an Olympian in a very short period of time.

"That's really a mouthful of things to say, but you're looking at a sophomore who was the only collegian competing at that level and not only did he hold his own, but he looked better than anyone else even though he didn't jump as far. I think that is because he is a young kid and he's not strong enough yet."

Miller doesn't worry about Harrison not having the talent to compete with the best in the world, the only thing he worries about now is that all the success and attention might get in the way of the Brookfield, Wis., native's abilities.

"I'm just hoping he can keep it in perspective. It's a little tough sometimes. He has done a great job with that, but it's gonna get harder," Miller said.

But the soft-spoken Harrison says Miller doesn't have anything to worry about. To Harrison, Miller's leadership and experience are enough to ward off any problems he could have with a swelling ego.

"Being with Coach Miller, I've been able to keep things under control. It just makes things easier to accept. He has been around people (of world class caliber) and he has coached in Europe," Harrison said. "I think Coach Miller will keep an eye on me and let me know what to

The two-week trip will take Harrison to England, Finland, Northern Ireland and West Germany. Some might say six world-class meets in two weeks is a grueling pace, but to Harrison it is simply a break from every day training.

"I wake up every morning and work out, but (in Europe) I'll just be able to go out and jump. I'll be a little fresher for my jumps," Harrison said.

Miller knows that Harrison's trip to Europe is the best thing for the young Wildcat and the progress he has made this year will only continue in the future.

"He started the year off with a seasonal best of 54 feet, 1-1/4 inches and ended the season with a jump of 57 feet, 11/2 inches," Miller said. "That's a three foot improvement. His 57-11/2 is the longest triple jump in the NCAA this year and he also holds the longest long jump in the NCAA this year."

For Harrison, that success is beginning to breed big dreams. Dreams of representing his country in a much larger form of competi-

"I've been thinking about the Olympics for the last couple of weeks. I've had some good jumps I know could have been the world's record except for some fouls," Harrison said.

"I think it's a matter of me getting stronger and I'll be older in '88. There will be a lot of people who will be getting too old to compete in the Olympics in '88," Harrison said. "If I can just keep jumping the distance I have been, I think I should be OK."

But Miller has few doubts about Harrison's new found dreams.

"I think Kenny might be the best triple jumper in the world. I think the only thing holding him back is his age and experience," Miller said.

That's big talk. Talk that Miller believes Harrison is very capable of proving true and talk which Harrison is already beginning to back up.

'There is something else you need to understand - there are a lot of great athletes in the world, but there is a difference between a great

"He won the NCAA (triple jump championship) on his last jump and in the biggest competition of his life last week at the TAC in Eugene, he had the longest jump of his life on his do-or-die situation. He now looks forward to "hitting" his last jump.

"I'm starting to think about it now. It just happens that all of my last jumps have been in pressure situations and I've got it on my last jump - now I'm the most relaxed on my last jump," Harrison said. Harrison's ability to respond is the rest. "What that tells me is that this kid is not only gifted, but he responds. Some people under the stress of competition fold. Kenny under the stress of competition brings out the best in himself. He is one of those guys who will almost always come through," Miller said.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - George Brett and Lonnie Smith drove in two runs apiece to lead Kansas City past Oakland 6-3 Monday night, handing the staggering A's their 15th consecutive road defeat.

The A's, with a 28-43 record, are four losses from the American League record for consecutive road defeats.

Tied 3-3 in the sixth, the Royals took the lead when Buddy Biancalana hit a two-out single that pushed Steve Balboni, who had walked, to second. Willie Wilson followed with an infield single, loading the bases, then Doug Bair relieved starter Curt Young, 5-4, and walked Smith to force in Balboni.

Brett then doubled down the right-field line, driving home Biancalana and Wilson.

The A's had tied it 3-3 in the sixth on solo home runs by Carney Lansford, his seventh, and Dave Kingman, his 17th.

Smith singled, stole second and scored on Hal McRae's single for a 1-0 lead in the first.

death with cocaine usage during night

By The Associated Press UPPER MARLBORO, Md. - A preliminary investigation indicates "that cocaine was involved in the death of Len Bias," a state prosecutor said Monday.

Arthur Marshall, state's attorney for Prince George's County, said he was convinced that cocaine was present in the dormitory room where Bias collapsed early Thursday morning, just two days after he was selected by the Boston Celtics as the second player taken in the NBA

Marshall said field tests showed that a glassine envelope found in the car of the 22-year-old University of Maryland basketball star contained cocaine. He said the test, while not admissible as evidence in court, is usually accurate.

Marshall also said he has been told that traces of cocaine were found in a urine sample tested at the hospital where Bias was pronounced dead last Thursday.

The prosecutor said, however, that he doesn't know what caused Bias' death and doesn't know if cocaine was a contributing factor. Marshall said at a news conference held on the steps of the county courthouse that he will go ahead with a criminal investigation into the events surrounding Bias' death and will begin presenting evidence to the grand jury next Tuesday.

The investigation will intially focus on who supplied illegal drugs and who used them as Bias, his teammates and friends spent the early morning hours celebrating the realization of his dream to play with the Celtics, Marshall said.

If the state medical examiner determines that cocaine was responsible for the cardiac arrest, the prosecutor said it is possible that he might bring manslaughter charges against the person who supplied the

Maryland state prosecutor credits Bias'

Marshall conferred Monday with Alan Goldstein, a lawyer who represents David Gregg and Terry Long, two teammates who were with Bias in the dorm room the morning he died.

Goldstein said Long and Gregg will appear before the grand jury if they are issued subpoenaes and will testify if they are granted immunity. He would not say whether they will testify voluntarily.

Marshall said he is not prepared to grant immunity to anyone yet, but that he wants to talk to the two players and has discussed it with

He said police are trying to locate Brian Tribble, a longtime friend of Bias, and Tribble's roommate, Mark Fobbs. Some of Bias' teammates have said that he and Tribble drove to northeast Washington several hours before his death. A police official acknowledged that there were reports Bias had been seen early that morning in an area known for its onthe-street drug sales.

Marshall described Tribble as "a man who has been around for some time on the campus." He said Tribble has a criminal record involving minor theft, but does not have any recorded involvement with drugs. Marshall said there may have been a delay of 15 to 30 minutes before an ambulance was called, but that he doesn't know if a delay contributed to Bias' death He confirmed that the room was unusually neat, saying that everything was in place, all the beds made and "not a beer bottle to be found" when the room was checked.

"I don't think there is any question that the room where Bias died was sanitized," he said.

Drug paraphernalia was found in a garbage bin outside the dorm, Marshall said

Bias' tragedy needs to post notice to all fans

myself to believe it's really true that in a matter of two short weeks Norris Coleman and Bo Jackson have announced they would be playing for my two favorite teams.

The sudden death of All-America basketball player, Len Bias, quickly brought me back to earth and made me realize how much emphasis is sometimes put on athletes and athletic competition and how abruptly it can be whisked away.

Here is a young man who in the last several weeks undertook more physicals than a normal being receives in a lifetime. Each time he graded out in superior shape and was expected to be well on his way to starring on the World Champion Boston Celtics next season.

It's a shame that a 22-year old seemingly healthy No. 2 draft pick could suddenly succumb to a heart attack and die. That's not the way it

A few thoughts while pinching is supposed to work. Our fairy tale book of endings says that he goes on to team with Larry Bird, Kevin McHale and Bill Walton and brings more championship banners to the parquet floor of the Boston Garden.

What makes Bias' story more saddening is that the possibility of drugs played a role in his surprising death. More than 11 grams "of a white powdery substance" was found in Bias' leased Nissan 300 ZX sports car. The Washington Post and Maryland TV stations have reported sources saying that traces of cocaine were found in his urine upon being examined at the hospital where he was later pronounced dead.

What makes the situation even more intriguing is that the "friends" who accompanied Bias on the night of his death have suddenly disappeared and won't talk. It was also learned that Maryland Coach Charles "Lefty" Driesell summoned players to his house to discuss what should be released to the media and case investigators and what should not be told.

Paramedics also believe that Bias may have collapsed at around 3:30 a.m. They were not called to the scene, Bias' University of Maryland dormitory suite, until 6:30. Police were also questioning why the room was extraordinarily clean and tidy. The disheartening fact surrounding the entire case is that players today feel because they have signed big contracts with pro teams and even bigger contracts to wear one company's leather hightops over another company's court striders. feel the need to spend that money on "highs" that are unreachable from simply being the No. 2 draft pick on the world's best team. Drugs may or may not turn out to be the culprit in Bias' death. But American sports fans can't blame the dealer who sold him the illegal substance for his death, or even the "friend" who accompanied him to buy it. No one forced the 6-foot-8 twotime Atlantic Coast Conference Player of the Year to take part in the illicit activities.

After this entire tragedy is uncovered, the late superstar's death needs to be used as an example to our young and rising athletes. Get high on sports, not drugs

And, maybe, just maybe, some young aspiring court wizard out there will realize, drugs kill.

Norris Coleman very nearly became a close observer in the Bias tragedy. Maryland was one of five schools Coleman visited when he was freed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association to transfer and become immediately eligible.

After he elected to remain at K-State, the star forward said he would have attended Maryland, where Bias and Driesell gave him a red carpet tour of the campus on his visit earlier this month.

ATLANTA - The ingredients journalism, religion and politics were blended by a man with his eye on the White House, religious broadcaster M.G. "Pat" Robertson, before much of the country's press corps covering religion.

He said a big religious story is brewing, that it's not being adequately told, that it necessarily is getting more political, and that the odds mount that he may plunge into the thick of it with a bid for the presidency.

The story, as he describes it, is an "explosion of religious activity," a "sleeping giant waking up" and mobilizing forces to defend basic American values against pressures to "strip religion from public history."

About the Republican presidential nomination, he said, "I'm being urged by tens of thousands to go for it." He cites Michigan, where backers won a strong showing for him in primary preliminaries, as a "wonderful

"There is nothing in the Constitution and nothing in history to keep religious people out of political life, or religious concerns out of politics," he said.

Robertson, 56, founder and president of the Christian Broadcasting Network based in Virginia Beach, Va., and of CBN University there, addressed the Religion Newswriters Association, whose membership has more than doubled in two years to 225.

Made up of those specializing in covering religion for secular newspapers, wire services and news magazines, its annual meeting customarily is at an event of high news interest, this

It drew a turnout of 585 reporters, about 300 of them employed by secular media.

"We are in the midst of the most profound religious awakening in the history of mankind," Robertson said, but he added that generally it "is being ignored" by the secular media.

However, Helen Parmley of the Dallas Morning News, the newly elected president of the association, said its surging growth indicates secular media have recognized increased interest in religion and are stepping up

"They're taking religion out of the back pages and bringing it on to the front pages," she said.

Roberston said American liberty depends on religious-moral underpinnings.

The Constitution "assumes an inner self-restraint in order to have liberty," he said. Without that grounding, society "runs amok," he said. "We uphold law either by morality or by tryanny."

He charged that some court decisions have undercut religiousmoral premises of Americans generally on such matters as abortion, school prayers, marriage and family life without any basis in democratically representative legislation.

Group studies smoking code

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

Changes could be in store for smokers and non-smokers, depending on the outcome of a study of the current University smoking policy.

"I appointed a committee with the assignment to determine if the old codes were adequate, clear and appropriate," said George Miller, vice president for administration and "The committee was founded because of a number of people inquiring as to what the current codes are," Miller said.

"There was also a variability between buildings and different opinions between a number of people," he said.

The current smoking policy, adopted Dec. 1, 1983, states, "Smoking is not permitted in any classroom, laboratory, office, or other area where persons are compelled to be because of conducting or attending classes and labs and perforing work duties. If smoking privileges are requested in these areas in any buildings in which smoking is allowed and anyone objects, then 'No Smoking' shall be adhered to in deference to personal health concern."

The policy also states that to be in compliance with state fire codes, smoking is not permitted in any area of interior wood-constructed buildings, public buildings and buildings subject to explosion hazards, with certain exemptions. The new draft is now in the hands of Miller who is reviewing the legal and health aspects of the proposed code. He will then present the proposed code to a number of people representing various groups on cam-

If those people have any suggestions for revision, it will then go back to the committee for review. Then the draft will go back to Miller. When he feels the draft is satisfactory he will present it to the president and the other vice presidents. If there are no objections, the draft will become the new smoking policy.

"I want to stress that the draft is in a very initial stage. We are still collecting information," Miller said. 'There are a number of factors that need to be considered because of the wide number of people that it affects.' Policy committee members are John Lambert, campus safety director and committee chairman; Paul Nelson, sophomore in pre-nursing; Michael O'Neil, assistant professor of philosophy; and Luann Ingersoll, library assistant.

make "non-smoking the norm," last week announced a policy prohibiting smoking by its 781,000 soldiers and 450,000 civilian employees "except for designated areas. Last month the General Services

Administration proposed banning smoking in shared work areas, corridors, lobbies, restrooms, auditoriums and conference rooms in some 7,000 government buildings where 887,000 federal employees

Of the 423 surveyed private companies without smoking policies, 10 percent said they had considered them at one time but had rejected the idea. Reasons they cited ranged from anticipated enforcement problems and disputes with both smokers and non-smokers to questions about the legality of limiting employees' right to smoke.

Eighty-five percent of the 239 companies with smoking policies - or 31 percent of all companies surveyed said the policies had been introduced within the past five years. Sixty percent said their policies were less than 2 years old.

In at least one case, the farmer got more from the federal program than he paid for leasing the property.

In response to the report, the Agriculture Department largely agreed that better management of inventoried land is needed, but added that it planned no prohibition of planting of surplus crops because the impact of such production is minimal.

Here is a list of regional states, by state, of the current number of farm properties held by the Farmers Home Administration as of March 31, 1986, the total acreage for the state, and the estimated current market value of that land. States not listed had no reported properties.

Woman obtains 'right to die'

By The Associated Press

TOMS RIVER, N.J. - A judge ruled Monday that a terminally ill, 37-year-old woman can be disconnected from a respirator, as she has requested, because it would be cruel to sustain a life "so wracked with Superior Court Judge Henry H. Wiley issued his decision after hearing arguments in the case of Kathleen Farrell, who has Lou Gehrig's disease and has said through her husband that she is concerned about the effect her illness is having on him and their two teen-age

Wiley stayed any action in the case pending appeas, and an attorney appointed by the judge to represent the interests of the children, John Gerson, said he will file an appeal with the New Jersey Supreme Court on Tuesday.

Farrell, who learned three years ago that she was dying, was mentally competent to decide whether to continue her life, Wiley said.

"It would really be adding insult to injury" to force her to continue a life "so poor, so minimal and so wracked with pain," the judge said.

Earlier Monday, Farrell's husband, Francis, told the judge she had vowed not to die after she learned she had the disease but when an experimental treatment program for her was stopped in November, "she told me she was going to die.'

"She made the decision on her own free will," he testified.

Farrell, 37, had asked Wiley to appoint him as a special medical guardian with the authority to disconnect the respirator.

Farrell also sought a declaration that his wife is mentally competent to decide whether her treatment should be continued, and that if she should die as a result of withholding treatment, he and anyone who helps him be exempt from criminal or civil

Farrell has said his wife is concerned about the effect her illness is having on him and their two teen-age

Wiley visited Mrs. Farrell last week after her husband's attorney, Joseph Purrazzella, filed the court complaint.

Kathleen Farrell suffers from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, a progressive neurological disease commonly called Lou Gehrig's disease. It causes the fluid in the spinal column to harden and muscles to shrivel.

Farrell, who is attended by nurses at her South Toms River home, lost her ability to swallow several weeks ago, but has refused to allow doctors to insert a stomach or nose tube for

Farrell testified that his wife takes liquids through a syringe nurses put in her mouth, but said she sleeps most of the time and has trouble talk-

Her physician, Dr. John Pino, said all of her muscles, except those that control her lips and eyes, are paralyzed, and there is no chance she will recover.

He estimated she will not live another six to 12 months.

Leak in pipe cripples air conditioning plan

SCOTT SEWELL Staff Writer

Many buildings on campus were without air conditioning Monday because of a break in a chill-water line.

Jack Watson, physical plant supervisor in University Facilities, said the break occurred either sometime Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

Watson said, as a result of the leak, the entire system had to be shut down until the leak could be

'We had to start eliminating buildings, shutting off buildings, one-by-one until the pressure started coming up, because we didn't know where it was leaking," he said.

'We have a leak somewhere between Kedzie and the student Union, and it's all under concrete and dirt," Watson said. "We don't know where it is.'

Once the leak's general site was located, the pipes that were working were filled with water, air was bled from those lines, and the chillers were turned back on to chill the water, Watson said. But the system had not been fully repaired. "You just don't throw a switch on a chiller and walk away from it. We will probably be with it (the chiller system) until midnight, 2 o'clock in the morning, making sure that the system is functioning as designed," he said Monday afternoon.

Some of the buildings affected by the leak were Calvin, Cardwell, Ward, Ackert, Durland, Denison, Holt and Kedzie halls; part of Seaton Hall; Lafene Student Health Center; the Union; and Farrell Library.

Watson said all buildings, with the exception of Kedzie, should have access to the chill lines and air conditioning, today.

Station seeks approval

KSDB waits for FCC review

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

Some say the waiting is the hardest part. Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and faculty adviser for KSDB-FM, has found this cliche to be only too true for the past year.

On May 21, 1985, Buller applied for a new license from the Federal Communication Commission to allow the campus station to change its frequency and increase its power. But the license has yet to be approved.

Once granted, the license will allow KSDB to carry out major improvements. The station's power will be increased from 125 watts to 1,400 watts. The frequency will be changed from 88.1 to 91.9. The site of the transmitting tower will also change, from the roof of McCain Auditorium to three miles southeast of Manhattan, Buller said.

"Right now (the license) is in its second-to-last hurdle," Buller said. He said once the license request clears a legal review by the FCC, it must be reviewed by the FCC engineering department. After this,

it will be set aside for 30 days for

Buller said the legal review is to ensure the station has been following standard legal practices and the engineering review studies the feasibility of the request and checks for acceptable engineering practices. He also said the 30-day waiting period is standard procedure to see if any negative comments about the station come from any source.

"It's (the granting of the license) not going to happen in August like we thought," Buller said. "But it will happen sometime in the fall."

Buller said he believes budget cuts due to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings act, the bureaucratic nature of the FCC and the fact KSDB is not a commercial station are to blame for the delay

Buller said he believes applications from commercial stations are given priority over non-commercial stations. He said he didn't know whether the FCC handles license reviews on a first-come, first-served basis, but he said he believes the process is incredibly slow

"The FCC has gone through manpower cuts to reduce its budget," he said.

Buller said there is a growing broadcasting industry and a shrinking bureaucracy to handle it. This leads to a backlog in the work the

FCC has to do. "We have all the money to do the project," said Buller, referring to the change of frequency and the increase

'The entire project will cost around $30,000, give or take a couple of thousand. You can't really scope the whole cost of a thing like this," he

KSDB will not actually spend any of the money until it receives the construction permit with the FCC license, Buller said. However, he did say the station has placed a down payment for a custom-built transmitter from the Harris Corp. in Quincy, Ill., contingent on KSDB being granted the new license.

After the company toured the station last fall, it offered the station a package deal for equipment, Buller

"The package was worth well over $30,000 but we're getting it for about $25,000," he said.

Buller said the package deal will not only include the new transmitter, but also a radio-to-site broadcasting system and a remote-control device.

He said the radio-to-site system will allow KSDB to broadcast its signal directly to the tower site without having to use telephone lines. The remote control will enable the station to turn the power at the site on and off from the studio in Mc-

Once the FCC approves the license, Buller said it will take at least 60 days before KSDB receives the transmitter and other equip-

He said after the station receives the transmitter it will take a week to 10 days from when the station signs off at 88.1 and signs back on at 91.9.

Tuttle fault system remains stable

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegain Reporter

The mere mention of faults in the earth seems to bring earthquakes to mind. But although a fault system is located near Tuttle Creek Dam, the danger is not believed to be significant, said Jim Underwood, professor

'There's a myth that seems to circulate every year that the dam was built on a fault by engineers who didn't know about it. That's absolutely false," Underwood said. "In fact, the Corps of Engineers studied it extensively, took drill samples and found no evidence of movement in geologically recent time.' Geologically recent time is defined as within the last 10,000 years, he

The primary fault, which is north of and roughly parallel to the dam, can be viewed from the parking area east of the dam on the north side of Kansas Highway 13. The closest approach to the dam by the fault is about 370 feet northeast of the spillway, he said.

In conjunction with five other minor faults in the area, it is known as the Spillway fault system. Underwood said the fault system also doesn't lie beneath any part of the dam or the control gates of the spillway.

The fault system is in a zone two seismic risk area. A Hazard Zone Two designation means that "moderate damage could be expected in any time period of several decades or more," said Don Steeples, associate director for research at the Kansas Geological Survey in Lawrence.

Steeples said the largest recorded Kansas earthquake hit the ManhatMercalli Intensity Scale of seven, which is severe enough to make chimneys topple, foundations crack and "causes everybody to run outdoors," he said. Since then, approximately 31 more earthquakes have occurred in Kansas, five of which were in Geary, Riley and Pottawatomie counties.

Since 1977, the Kansas Geological Survey has been detecting micro earthquakes in the Kansas/Nebraska area by using a network of 15 monitoring stations. One of the stations is located on the U.S Army Corps of Engineers' property at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, Steeples said.

"A micro earthquake is an earthquake that's too small for people to feel," Steeples said. "Close to 150have occurred (in the two-state area) in the last nine years." However, he said there has been no record of activity along the fault at Tuttle Creek. This suggests that the fault is inactive, he said.

By definition, a fault is a fracture along which rock layers have been measurably displaced, but a fold is a bend in the rock layers. A major fault is considered to be one that crosses several counties and has several hundred feet of displacement, and a minor fault is anything smaller, Underwood said. The Spillway fault system is relatively minor because of its limited extent and relatively minor displacement of the rock layer, he said.

"The San Andreas fault in California is considered major because it's approximately 600 miles long, spanning the length of California. It's a different type of fault from the one here because its movement is horizontal. where movement on the Spillway tan area in 1867. It had a Modified fault is nearly vertical," Underwood

The Spillway fault is approximately 12 miles long and has a displacement of 23 feet. Because most fault movements are measured in inches to a few feet per event, this 23 feet of disturbance probably occurred over many episodes, he said.

Underwood said the fault displaced rock of the Permian era. The Permian Period spanned Earth history from 290 million to 240 million years

"The rocks in the area are approximately 270 million to 280 million years old, so the fault must be younger than the rock it displaces,"

"There is nothing rare about the fault itself, but it is of special interest because of where it is and because of the exposure resulting from the dam's construction," Underwood said. Good exposures of faults in Kansas are rare, because the rock layers in Kansas are almost flatlying, he said. Additionally, the fault system is located on federal property, thus making it accessible to the public for easy viewing.

Underwood and Allyn Polson, senior in geology, have just completed a study of the Spillway fault system, as one of 22 sites being described in the Kansas section of the Decade of North American Geology Field Guides. The DNAG Project is sponsored by the Geological Society of America as part of its centennial celebration, and the Field Guides should be published next year, Underwood

UPC adapts program to drinking-age law

Workers find old cemetery

By The Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council hopes to fill the social void caused by the legislation to raise the legal drinking age.

"UPC has always been an alternative program. It is just more in the limelight now because people under the drinking age don't have any place to go," said Sylvia Scott, UPC administrative officer.

UPC consists of nine committees that work together to provide the campus with quality entertainment including films, art and special events. UPC sponsored dances for the first time last year following the first drinking age increase from 18 to 19 in July 1985. By state law, the drinking age will rise to 20 Jubecause the students can't go to Aggieville," Scott said. Eclectic Entertainment, one of the nine UPC committees, will sponsor the first big dance of the year Oct. 30. The dance will be in the KSU Ballroom and will feature The Verandas, a regional band. This is one of many activities that will be co-sponsored by Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services.

Sandy Winter, senior in journalism and mass communications and Eclectic Entertainment chairwoman, said UPC is working with Alcohol Education, Greek Affairs, and the Association of Residence Halls to provide alternatives for students who can't drink or choose not to.

'We are trying to get an influx of freshmen into UPC activities early in the year," Winter said.

Tax plan receives 'lopsided approval'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate on Tuesday gave lopsided approval to the biggest tax-overhaul bill in at least three decades, a plan that makes deep cuts in tax rates while reducing or eliminating a variety of popular exemptions and deductions. The vote was 97-3 — a margin as striking as the bill itself.

"This is a moment of pride for the Senate, a victory for America," exclaimed Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance Committee and chief author of the measure. He choked back tears as he thanked colleagues who helped to produce the President Reagan, who had endorsed the legislation, added his congratulations. "The Senate has voted on tax reform and the score is: taxpayers 1, special interests, nothing. The Cinderella team came out on top," he said in a written statement.

"This may very well be the best revenue bill that has been passed during the 38 years I have been privileged to serve in the Senate," said Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., the senior tax-writer in Congress.

"This will begin to restore confidence in government," added Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., whom Packwood praised as the bill's god-

The dissenting votes were cast by Democratic Sens. Carl Levin of Michigan, Paul Simon of Illinois and John Melcher of Montana.

The bill would reduce taxes on most individuals, by an average of 6.4 percent — about $215; raise taxes on 25 million people and shift $105 billion of the federal tax burden to corporations over the next five

More than 6 million working poor would be taken off the income-tax rolls, while some rich investors and profitable companies making big use of legal deductions would become taxpayers for the first time in years.

The measure, a top priority of Reagan's second term, will go next month to a conference committee, which will draw a compromise between the Senate bill and a lessradical plan approved by the House last December. A key issue: treatment of the middle class, which some lawmakers say would be shortchanged in the Senate bill.

"A monumental tax bill," said Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., adding that it will "reverse the cynicism about the fairness of the tax system."

But voices of dissent were raised. And several who praised the measure said they will count on the conference committee to make some improvements.

"On balance, this is a bad bill for rural America," Melcher protested, saying it would clobber farming, mining and small timber operators.

"This bill takes unacceptably high casualties in its attempt to win battle of tax reform," said Levin. "It will increase the taxes on many time that it gives extraordinarily

U.S. becomes largest debtor

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The United States became the world's largest debtor nation last year, surpassing the developing nations of Brazil and Mexico for this dubious honor, the government reported Tuesday.

The Commerce Department said the deficit at the end of the year was $107.4 billion, a dramatic deterioration from the previous year when the country had a small investment surplus of $4.4 billion.

The country has not been a net debtor since 1914. Simply stated, this means that foreigners now own more U.S. investments than Americans have in foreign investments.

The new report said that American investments overseas totaled $952.4 billion at the end of 1985, an increase of 6 percent over 1984. Foreign investments in the United States, however, soared 18.6 percent during the same period of time, to $1.059 trillion at the end of 1985.

The change means that the country has moved in just three years from being the largest creditor in the world, with an investment surplus of $136.2 billion in 1982, to the largest debtor.

While analysts for some time had estimated the United States crossed over the threshhold to become a net debtor in 1985, none were forecasting that the country's investment position would deteriorate as quickly as it did. The U.S. debt of $107.4 billion surpassed that of Brazil, the previous debt leader at $103.7 billion, and Mexico, with a foreign debt of $97.7 billion.

Some economists predict the U.S. debt will hit $250 billion by the end of the year and will easily top $500 billion by the end of the decade.

Economists are divided on how serious an economic threat the country's new status is. Some contend that the country can't be classified with Third World debtors because the U.S. debt represents a much smaller percentage of the country's overall gross national product.

President Reagan has dismissed the change as a non-event, contending that it just shows how attractive U.S. investments are to foreigners.

But many private analysts have expressed worries that the U.S. economy could be held hostage to the whims of foreign investors.

"We have moved from being the largest creditor in the world to the largest debtor. The pace of the deterioration has been incredibly rapid," said C. Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics in Washington, and a former assistant Treasury secretary.

Some analysts have expressed fears that if foreigners' excitement at holding American investments begins to fade, then interest rates needed to finance the huge U.S. debt will begin rising and such a change could plunge the country into a reces-

They also said that the transfer of more and more U.S. wealth into the hands of foreigners to meet interest payments threatens to reduce the American standard of living.

The only way the United States will be able to reduce the debt is to begin to run surpluses in its merchandise trade account. The huge trade deficits of recent years are the reason the country is now a net debtor, as billions of American dollars flowed into foreigners' hands in return for imported cars, televisions and clothing. The United States was a net debtor through much of the 19th century as European investment helped America develop the new continent. A study by the Brookings Institute showed the country last had a foreign debt of $2.2 billion in 1914.

This debt was erased and a surplus built up starting in World War I.

IRS investigation pays off

Federal grand jury indicts 3

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - Three men were indicted by a federal grand jury on tax charges Tuesday as the result of a two-year investigation of alleged improprieties in the aircraft industry.

Indicted on four counts of filing false personal income tax returns were Donald M. Cunningham, 58, of Salina, a former Beech Aircraft Corp. warehouse worker; and Gene L. Wilson, 48, of Derby, a purchasing supervisor at Beech.

Each faces a possible maximum aggregate penalty of 12 years in prison and $210,000 in fines if con-

Melvin E. Hillier, 53, of Wichita, former purchasing director for Gates Learjet Corp., was charged with three counts of tax evasion. He faces a possible maximum penalty of 15 years in prison and $120,000 in U.S. Attorney Ben Burgess said Hillier was to be arrested by IRS agents. Cunningham and Wilson arranged to surrender through their attorneys, he said.

A fourth man, Elmer Dean Aimes, 52, of Derby, a former buyer for Cessna Aircraft Co., was quietly charged April 15 and pleaded guilty May 30.

Sources close to the Internal Revenue Service probe told The Associated Press that Aimes cooperated with investigators in return for a recommendation that he receive a lenient sentence. Aimes is scheduled to be sentenced July 24. Aircraft companies weren't targets in the investigation, Burgess said. Each company contacted for help cooperated, he said.

The probe began in November 1983 when someone contacted the IRS claiming some buyers in the aircraft industry were accepting kickbacks in exchange for awarding contracts and purchasing agreements they controlled, Burgess said.

The U.S. attorney said he didn't know from whom the initial tip came. He refused to identify the companies that allegedly paid kickbacks.

Burgess said Cunningham allegedly obtained aircraft parts and hardware such as rivets and bolts and sold the materials to manufacturers and vendors. He did most of his business through a company called Cunningham Sales, with Hillier's company, Ace Distributing Co.

When Burgess was asked whether Cunningham stole the items he sold, the federal prosecutor said: "The indictment doesn't say they were stolen. But there is no evidence he manufactured the parts."

Hillier and other vendors to whom Cunningham sold in turn resold the items to Beech and other aircraft manufacturers.

Wilson allegedly received $38,000 in kickbacks for raw materials purchased by Beech, Burgess said. The indictment charges he failed to report that amount in returns filed for tax years 1980-83.

Cunningham was charged with failing to report gross sales of $600,547 by Cunningham Sales in 1979-82. He reported his income for the four-year period at $51,024, according to the indictment against

Hillier was charged with failing to report $593,968 in gross sales by Ace Distributing for 1980-1982. About $168,000 of that amount would have been taxable, Burgess said. Hillier reported his taxable income for the three-year period at $57,298, according to the indictment filed against

Parking space decreases; quality improves

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

The number of parking spaces on campus will be decreasing over the next couple of years, but the quality of parking is improving, said Charles Beckom, superintendent of the KSU Police Department.

"We're getting better utilization of space, and a better quality of surface," Beckom said. He attributed the benefits to the practice of phasing from angle parking to 90-degree parking whenever possible, and the use of concrete surfaces instead of asphalt for lots when financially feasible. Several parking lots on campus are currently being renovated by the University or are affected by construction of buildings on camThe affected parking lots are: A1, A6, A8, R114, B1, and C3.

Lots A1 and C3 are both undergoing major renovation and will have concrete surfaces when finished, Beckom said. Lot A1 is an asphalt lot located on the southeast corner of campus, near Aggieville. Lot C3 is the asphalt lot at Edwards Hall.

"The surfaces of lots A1 and C3 have deteriorated to the point where it was not feasible to do patchwork or repair," he said. "Both lots have drainage problems, and this compounds the problem by eroding or deteriorating the parking surface

Abe Fattaey, engineer in Facilities Planning, said the construction cost of A1 is $100,950, excluding landscaping and irrigation.

The cost of construction at C3 is $144,750, he said.

For estimating purposes, the life expectancy of concrete is 30 years, as compared to a life expectancy for asphalt of 15 years, Fattaey said.

When finished, A1 will contain 112 parking spaces. "Surprisingly, we'll only lose five spaces, Beckom said. "In A1 design, we went from angle parking to 90-degree parking, and the turn islands have been reduced (from six) to two." He said removing several islands would decrease maintenance costs on the lot by making snow removal easier and in turn more cost effective.

With better utilization of space in A1, several rows on the south side of the lot will be removed, Beckom said. He noted this would provide the opportunity to carry the greenbelt through that section of campus to enhance the University's appearance.

Beckom said Lot C3 at Edwards contained 166 parking spaces. After construction on the lot is completed, there will be 131 vehicle spaces plus 16 motorcycle spaces, for a loss of 35 parking spaces, Fattaey said.

"On C3, the surface was totally gone," Beckom said. "The lot was redesigned to provide a suitable parking surface, but also to eliminate buildup of surface moisture and to facilitate drainage." He said the redesign would also improve access to the west parking area, which had almost a 60-degree slope on the drive in and out of that area. "We're not doing a band-aid program to make the parking lot look nice for a couple of years. For the next 20 years, we hope to have a good, suitable surface that can be maintained with a small budget," Beckom said. "This will allow us to use the maintenance budget more appropriately in other areas."

Parking at Weber and King halls is also being decreased due to building construction. Lot B1, the asphalt lot immediately east of Weber, contained 152 parking spaces, Beckom said.

"Currently, there's about 40 spaces available," Beckom said.

Fattaey said there will be 95 parking spaces available when the Weber addition is completed in the fall of 1987, for an overall loss of 57

Three parking lots are affected by the construction of the new chemistry/biochemistry building. Lot R114, the small gravel lot east of Willard Hall, is "totally lost," Fattaey said.

Lot A6, the gravel lot north of Dickens Hall which contains 63 spaces, will be closed for two years during construction, he said.

"We don't expect to lose those spaces permanently until the second phase of construction (on the chemistry/biochemistry building) starts," Fattaey said. "Eventually, we'll lose all the spaces."

Lot A8, the gravel lot on the east side of King, will be gone, he said. Once the construction in the area is completed, he said plans include building a small concrete lot con-

Hall of fame honors teacher

By PAT REDMAN Collegian Reporter

Hilma Peterson Boyer spent a lifetime teaching and caring for others. Recently, she was inducted into the Kansas Teachers Hall of Fame in recognition of her efforts and abilities.

"It's OK." she said about the honor. "But I got my satisfaction when the students I taught went out and made something of themselves. I'll always feel I had an influence on their lives.'

Boyer, who recently celebrated her 98th birthday, was born May 9, 1888, in Farnhamville, Iowa. The daughter of Swedish immigrants, she was the fifth of nine children. Her parents, Maria and Justus Peterson, immigrated to the United States in 1880. In 1892, the family moved to Stockholm community in western Kansas where they lived for two

"In those days, land was given away," she said. "My father had an uncle who lived in western Kansas and he had some land for us, so we moved. After two years, my father was unhappy there so we moved about 40 miles east, to Page City.'

Boyer's teaching career began in 1907. She spent six years teaching in rural schools in Thomas and Logan counties.

"In those days, they were all county schools and all you had to do to teach was take a test. I flunked the first time, but the second time I passed with flying colors," she said.

After spending the next five years teaching high school in and near Hays, she herself returned to school. She attended Fort Hays Kansas Normal School where she received her bachelor's degree in education in 1920. Upon graduation, she returned to Logan County and taught high school for an additional six years.

In the late 1920s, she attended the University of Colorado where she received her master's degree in English in 1929. She then taught at Augustana College in Rock Island, Ill., for seven years and one year at Clifton Junior College in Texas after which she returned to western Kan-

"I was too far away (and) my mother and brother needed me," was the reason for her decision to return to her widowed mother and handicapped brother on their farm in rural Logan County.

Upon her return, Boyer was soon asked to teach in Page City. She agreed, and taught the middle grades and then high school for 10

"The seventh, eighth and freshman grades are the toughest to teach," she said. "You have to be one or two steps ahead of them all the time."

After 37 years of teaching, she retired in 1947, in order to see to the increasing needs of her brother and mother, she said.

"I never regretted going back to teach in western Kansas," she said. "I was pretty hard on some of my students sometimes - but I got them to do things they never thought they could. I always said you have to love them with one hand and spank them with the other."

During her years of retirement she gave lectures and encouragement to students preparing to teach.

Known by her students as "Miss Peterson" she became "Mrs. Boyer" in 1971, when, at the age of 83, she married for the first time.

"I didn't care what anyone thought about it," she said. "I had no responsibilities, no one would get hurt, so I got married."

She and her husband, D.O. Boyer, moved to Manhattan, where they lived together until his death in 1981.

While living in Manhattan for the past 15 years, she has given talks to elemetary, high school and college classes on her experiences in frontier Kansas. Currently, she gives English lessons to others from foreign coutries and even translates the Swedish language.

Other than education, Boyer's chief interest has been needlework, particularly piecing and quilting patchwork quilts. She has also done oil paintings for many years and has a een interest in art and design.

"If I would have been a boy, I would have been an architect," she said. "I love the design of old buildings; they are so beautiful."

13-hour siege ends

Three die in hostage crisis

By The Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. - A gunman arrested after a standoff at a Rodeo Drive jewelry store murdered two of his hostages, and a third captive apparently was inadvertently killed by police while the gunman was using him as a shield, authorities said Tuesday.

The gunman, who was arrested after the 131/2-hour siege ended at 11:30 p.m. Monday, had previously been sought in a Nevada jewel robbery and had been convicted in a burglary, police said.

"We are dealing with a ruthless mad dog, a killer who had no compunction to do what he did," Police Chief Marvin Iannone said at a news conference Tuesday.

The siege, which stemmed from a bungled holdup, ended as the gunman tried to slip out a back door of Van Cleef & Arpels using three hostages, bound and covered with a blanket, as a shield.

One of those hostages, the store manager, was killed as deputies tried to block the gunman's

"At this point one shot was fired. we believe by a sheriff's deputy, and a hostage was killed," Iannone said. Asked if it had been determined if the deputy shot the hostage, he referred questions to the sheriff's department. Sheriff Sherman Block acknowledged that the gunman did not fire a shot during the escape attempt, and said it was possible that a deputy's bullet may have struck the hostage.

Inside the store, police found the bodies of a man and woman, both store employees. They had been bound and were lying face down on the floor.

The man had been stabbed within 15 minutes after the siege began, and the woman was shot in the back of the head sometime in the afternoon, Iannone said. Police recovered a handgun and knife outside the store.

The gunman was identified as Steven Livaditis, hometown unknown, whose age was given as 22 by Beverly Hills police and 27 in Nevada court records. He was booked for investigation of multiple murder and robbery.

Livaditis was in the jail ward at County-USC Medical Center in fair condition Tuesday with burns on his hands and face, said Los Angeles County sheriff's Deputy Sam Jones. He apparently was burned by two "flash-bang" grenades detonated to distract him as he tried to escape.

"Special weapons team members threw two 'flash-bang' diversionary devices during which time one shot may have been fired by the suspect," a Los Angeles County sheriff's spokesman, Deputy Sam Jones, said today.

'During this time one hostage fell to the ground and the special weapons team member in the long rifle position fired one round from his rifle. At this time we do not know if that round struck a hostage."

Livaditis was wanted by Las Vegas, Nev., police investigating a February robbery at a Zale's store by a well-dressed bandit with a large-caliber handgun, said Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Lt. Paul Conner.

Last year, he was convicted in a 1984 burglary in Clark County, Nev. While in custody, he escaped and was recaptured.

Rodeo Drive was open for business Tuesday afternoon, but Van Cleef & Arpels was shuttered. Trade in the expensive boutiques was stopped Monday while a special weapons team from the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department surrounded the store.

Park director to tour tallgrass prairie area

By The Associated Press

PAWHUSKA, Okla. - The director of the National Park Service will tour the tallgrass prairie of Osage County this week as proponents of a national preserve reorganize in an effort to win congressional approval of the plan.

William Penn Mott will tour portions of the prairie west of Pawhuska with representatives of the National Wildlife Federation, Nature Conservancy, Audubon Society, National Parks and Conservation Association and the Sierra Club.

A plan to set aside in a federal preserve thousands of acres of the rolling grassland has been the center of controversy in Osage County for several months.

in Oklahoma and Kansas have not said.

won approval in past years.

In March, Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., said he would oppose the plan because of complaints that it might restrict cattle grazing and oil and gas drilling in Edwards' opposition effectively killed any chances the preserve had in Congress.

Edwards said he might consider a scaled-down version of a preserve that would not conflict with the interests of oilmen or cattlemen in the area.

"We understand that this is going to be a compromise at best," said Bransford Shoemake, a Pawhuska attorney who is president of the Tallgrass Prairie Preserve Association.

"We were so close to getting Similar proposals for preserves everyone on board," Shoemake

Paulsen entertains appreciative crowd

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Some people never change.

While most of today's popular comedians have offended, insulted and cussed their way to fame, some have to rely on wit and charm to pull off a good show.

Comedian, entrepreneur and 1988 presidential hopeful Pat Paulsen resurrected a form of funny which hasn't been around for a while. Paulsen was the main attraction last night at Bushwacker's, 531 N. Manhattan Ave.

Paulsen was able to establish a great rapport with the audience by laughing at everything from Preparation H to Social Security. He made fun of himself more than anyone else, and even played his guitar.

Paulsen is best known for his contributions to the 1960s show, "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour." He hasn't changed much since then. Of course, he has more wrinkles, but he's still talking about Richard Nix-

"I lost to Nixon in '72," Paulsen said. "That's when you thought he'd be a better president than me."

He has decided to run for president again. This time he thinks his chances are better.

"Look who's president now: Ronald Reagan - an actor," Paulsen said. "That could start a

The 100-plus crowd, basically baby boomers and a handful of University students, relished Paulsen's singing and guitar playing as much as his perspectives on government, politics and growing older. Neither his singing nor his perspectives would have been considered very good if he weren't Pat Paulsen. Not many other people could get a laugh by doing bad impressions of James Stewart and John Wayne. Paulsen got away with a lot.

He sang about meeting a girl in a bar in Greenwich Village. He had to go home with her because his finger got stuck in her nose.

"Boy, I sure know how to pick 'em," Paulsen sang.

Although the show was mostly entertaining because everybody expected to be entertained, he did come up with some genuinely worthy

222 N. Sixth

Drugs aren't part of his life, he said. He tried coke once, but had to have help getting the bottle out of his nose so he said he's given up everything.

Paulsen's suggestion for dealing with Col. Moammar Gadhafi was to bring him to the United States, treat him with care and give him all our unused Tylenol capsules.

Through both bad jokes and charming wit, Paulsen left the crowd satisfied. They gave him a standing ovation - because he asked for one.

Two reasons the show was so satisfying were Ray Thomas and Bud Dingman, who warmed up for Paulsen. The two Kansas City, Mo., comedians shared their solo efforts with an appreciative crowd.

Farm lobby group urges KC boycotts

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A resolution supporting the Cesar Chavez grape boycott is causing some uneasy moments for officials of the city that bills itself as the country's agricultural capital.

The American Farm Bureau Federation says it will urge farm organizations to boycott Kansas City's convention facilities unless the City Council rescinds its May resolution supporting the California farm activist's grape boycott. C.H. Fields, assistant director of national affairs for the Farm Bureau, the nation's largest farm lobbying group, served notice of the planned convention boycott last week in a letter to the Chamber of Commerce of Greater Kansas City.

Fields said the Farm Bureau has considered Kansas City for a 1992 convention. He also said the Future Farmers of America, which holds a big convention each fall in Kansas City, will be contacted about a possible boycott.

"I actually don't think they (council members) knew what they were doing," Jack G. Runyan, the chamber's agribusiness manager, said of the City Council action.

"The bottom line is: Why did Kansas City get involved in this at the risk of losing convention business?" Runyan said.

Chavez, president of the United Farm Workers, was in Kansas City

May 2-3 to attend a Hispanic Leadership Conference and called for continued support of the grape boycott that started in 1984. He said the union was demanding that California grape growers allow workers to determine if they want a union, agree to random tests on residues of fresh grapes and that five pesticides be banned for treatment of grapes.

The City Council adopted a resolution saying that "over 300,000 farm workers are poisoned each year" by agricultural chemicals and that toxic residues remain on grapes eaten by the American public.

Several council members said Monday that the non-binding resolution was adopted as a courtesy to

"I think they just felt it was routine and we'd get it out of the way," said come back and slap us in the face, and I don't think we had any effect on the grape industry," Hamil said.

When he learned of the threatened convention boycott, Finance Committee Chairman Jerry Riffel said "if it's going to cost us money, I'm for repealing it."

Councilman Bob Lewellen said the resolution wasa symbolic vote. "If we hear from these other people and it looks like they are going to retaliate in some way, I'm willing to listen," he said.

ing complaints from about 50 con-avoid getting locked into promis-

He said they have come mostly from Wichita, Topeka and Johnson County, and relate to about a dozen companies who are offering loan agreements to home buyers.

The complaints basically allege, Woerman said, that the lenders promise in the agreements they sign with loan applicants to lock in a certain interest rate and closing points for 60 days, but the loan applications aren't being processed within the 60 days.

The lenders allegedly tell the applicants they will still approve their loans after the 60 days have elapsed, but at a higher interest rate and-or higher points.

"What seems to be happening," Woerman said, "is these loan applications are not being processed within the 60 days, and the customers are then told they can get the loan only at higher rates

However, Woerman said savings and loans and brokers the attorney general's office has contacted so far say there are two reasons for the delays: the fact the Federal Housing Administration has reached its limit on loan money and those loans cannot be made, and the fact there are so many loan applications right now that the appraisal work cannot be completed in 60 days.

"What each side seems to be saying is there is a problem," said Woerman. "We are looking at it, trying to sort it out and see if there is a consumer violation whether there is some form of misrepresentation or deception by the loan brokers or savings and loans in entering into these agreements.

'We do see that the agreements put consumers in a bad situation. They can't look for other deals during the 60 days, or take advantage of interest rate specials."

Woerman said the attorney general's office welcomes calls from Kansas consumers who have entered into the loan agreements. They can call toll free to 1-800-432-2310.

The Consumer Protection Division of Stephan's office is handling the calls, and is sending those who call a form to fill out seeking information about the agreements they have signed. Three written reports have been returned by consumers so far, Woerman said.

Orientation aids parents, new students

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

Despite recent budget cuts things are going well for the New Student Programs office, said Marilyn Trotter, director of New Student Pro-

"It's a new experience," she said. "We have fewer student employees due to the budget cuts."

Trotter said she has a regular operating staff of seven. In the past, she has been able to hire additional students for the summer to help with new student enrollment and orientation. But due to budget cuts this year, Trotter was limited to hiring extra students for only the formal session of new student enrollment and orien-

Trotter said the cuts have not affected her office's ability to carry out its mission.

"The main goal of the orientation program is to have students and their parents leave feeling like they got their questions answered, enjoyed the day and that they know there are people here to help them,"

"It's working out beautifully," she

New students have three major priorities when they visit campus, including selection of courses, deciding on housing and solving questions about financial aid. She noted that these are the top three priorities the enrollment and orientation sessions try to focus on.

The orientation program offers two sessions for summer enrollment to assist new students in finding answers to those questions.

The first formal session began June 13 and will run until June 28. with the new students scheduled to be seen Tuesday through Saturday. During this session, the students must contact the New Student Programs office in Anderson and make a reservation to attend the program. The program is offered free of charge and lasts almost the entire day, Trotter said.

During the day, students are told about the various aspects of University life. This includes an explanation of available student services, scholarship information, preadvising and advising sessions, individual appointments with student financial assistance, and campus

The second enrollment session is informal and runs July 7 to Aug. 1,

Monday through Friday. Trotter said the student does not need to make a reservation in advance for the informal sessions. There is also no set program for the new student to go through, with the students only having to enroll in their classes. Trotter's office also handles enrollment before the start of each term for new or returning students who have yet to go through the pro-

Trotter said it is important for new students to have their parents come with them for the enrollment and orientation sessions.

"We passed a milestone several years back," she said. "It is now acceptable for parents to come with the students. Now the whole family is involved. We do everything we can to encourage parents to come.'

The New Student Programs office has a separate schedule for parents to follow. Their sessions provide them with much of the same information the students receive; however, the parents' sessions stress

Local dentist leads busy lifestyle; various interests highlight careers

By STACEY DARRELL Collegian Reporter

While it may be hard to believe that one man could be a dentist, professor, architect, author, artist, inventor and pilot, that doesn't stand in the way of Manhattan dentist David

Sager began his busy lifestyle while in college and hasn't slowed down, even after graduating from K-State in 1972.

"I went to school, summer, day and night," he said. "I was one of those people who graduated with 180 hours when I only needed 160."

Sager received his doctor of medical dentistry in 1975 from the Washington University School of Dental Medicine in St. Louis. He returned to Manhattan in 1981 and opened his own general dentistry practice. But his practice has been anything but ordinary.

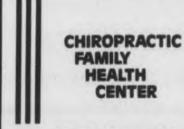

"We tried to develop a place spacious, comfortable, whimsical anything except a dental office," he said. "When you walk into our lobby, it's like a lobby of a nice hotel or restaurant, a nice place you enjoy

Instead of the average dentist office music, progressive jazz is played. And a pianist plays a grand piano in a downstairs waiting room in the afternoons. In this same waiting room, there are two parrots who entertain the waiting patients.

"We want our environment to make visiting us a pleasant experience," Sager said.

Another thing Sager has not found in most dentist offices is a porcelain

"We have a porcelain studio right here in our office — Hollywood den-tistry," Sager said. "Art and design are two of my great loves and they fit

"Porcelain rehabilitation is very close to watercolor work. It is an artistic process in making contours and recreating gums and teeth," he said.

Education is another of Sager's interests. He is on the guest staff at Loyola University of Chicago and is a guest instructor at the University of Colorado School of Dentistry. He also has his own consulting corporation, Dentcare, Ltd., in Chicago.

Sager owns another corporation in Chicago, Dentsystems Inc. Through Dentsystems, Sager and his associates have designed and manufactured dental equipment and fixtures and have invented four den-

Sager is interested in several community service projects. His main community concern is to educate people on preventive dentistry, rather than just fixing teeth. The target group is the "six-year molar kids" - children in kindergarten through second grade who get their first permanent teeth.

This is where Sager becomes an author. Every year Sager writes a skit to entertain the children and teach them about preventive dentistry. The skits are presented every February during National Children's Dental Health Month to 20 schools in the Manhattan area.

The skits, presented by Sager's two dental hygienists and two other office employees, are made into cartoon coloring books each child receives after the presentation along with a toothbrush.

Reagan's position key to summit

As the stalemate in U.S.-Soviet arms talks draws on, President Reagan seems to be softening his position on his Strategic Defense Initiative.

In an Oval Office interview with the Los Angeles Times, Reagan indicated that he might be willing to consider a Soviet offer to sharply reduce offensive weapons coupled with restraint on deployment of SDI.

"Whatever way is necessary to get an agreement, we'll do it," he

Reagan said he might be able to agree in principle to the Soviet offer, but added, "don't pin me down on this because...we're still studying this."

Although the president seems unsure, his remarks provide some hope of improving U.S.-Soviet relations to the point where an arms control agreement can be reached. It is also hoped that Reagan's stance on Star Wars will continue to soften and lead to a summit with Soviet leaders.

A superpower meeting is still expected to take place in November or December but officials have set no date. Perhaps a retreat from a hardline on SDI will establish a basis for a meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze to discuss the date of a possible summit. Such a meeting was canceled by Moscow after the U.S. attack on Libya.

Reagan's statements show he may be thinking more seriously about peace negotiations.

Farmers finding help in transition

Starting over is never easy, but for at least 600 individuals, it might not be as rough as anticipated.

Because farmers are "loyal, hardworking and concientious, two ready-to-hire companies have already contacted Sue Miller, director of Kansas' new Rural Employment Assistance Program.

After being forced to stop what they've grown up living because of foreclosure or poor economic conditions or simply running out of credit - some farmers will probably end up thanking the federal government this time. The $1.2 million appropriated to REAP by the Department of Labor is sure to help farmers get one step closer to security.

That's been a long time in com-

The REAP program, which provides services like job placement and relocation assistance as well as funding education and training, is not just for farmers and their spouses. Owners and employees of businesses which are totally dependent upon agriculture are also eligible if that business must discontinue operations.

The combined efforts of the Kansas Department of Human Resources, K-State Cooperative Extension Service and Farmers Assistance, Counseling and Training Service add to the list of program benefits. Even those individuals who do not qualify for the program should find open avenues by the initial contact with FACTS.

Although leaving what they've spent a lifetime building is bound to be tough, many struggling farmers may find this is their best

Besides, good help is hard to find. It's not everybody who's loyal, hardworking and conscientious.

Let's negotiate: IRAs for skyboxes

Everyone is looking for a way to avoid paying taxes - or at least postpone paying them (preferably forever). While Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., hails Senate's adoption of the tax overhaul bill and revels in the relatively few amendments attached to it, he stubbornly ignores some of the basic and inherently unfair deductions and exceptions

Some individuals have said the current tax system is merely the result of in interests having their way in Congress.

President Reagan has held up the Senate proposal as a victorious elevation of "the people" (that means us) over "the special interests." Packwood may have kept additional special interests from tacking on new provisions to this tax bill but what about the special interests that are already hidden in our tax returns - the ones the Senate smoothly glossed over in its attempt to make the tax structure "more fair?"

We should be grateful, I suppose, that only about 200 plus amendments were actually attached to the new fair tax bill. Our own Bob Dole sponsored the "Marriott amendment" which states "business meals provided as an integral part of certain convention programs would be fully deductible in 1987 and 1988."

Then there's the infamous business entertainment deduction. Ah, you thought this obvious and ludicrous deduction corporations take would have been one of the first deleted? But, no. Corporations renting skyboxes (prime private seating booths at sports stadiums) to entertain clients or employees still get an 80 percent business entertainment deduction that amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars all total.

While skyboxes and convention lunches for politicians remain deductions for a select few taxpayers, not many Americans will benefit from the hidden special interests inherent in tax bill writing. But then there are a few deductions that would have benefited many of us and were denied by senators on that basis. Speaking of beneficial deductions, the IRA deduction quietly slips in the back door of my mind.

Ever since former President Lyndon Johnson dipped into Social Security's reserves to pay for part of Vietnam, we have anticipated the system's demise. We know that if it doesn't fail, it will at most be an inadequate source of retirement income.

As for corporation pension plans, we've all heard the horror stories about individuals who have worked 29 years, 10 months for a company only to be laid off, fired or terminated days before full-pensioned retire-

Add the above two bits to the fact that America has a mainly mobile society and we have the perfect makings of a welfare socie-

There are not a lot of choices left. And if the congressional committee, where the tax overhaul bill goes now, votes to accept the bill as it stands, we may have even fewer choices. Retirement savings may again become Mason-jar-under-the-cornerfencepost accounts. IRAs make the most sense. By establishing a basic "savings account for retirement" we can safely tuck away enough for moderate comfort in later years. Safely meaning we can't spend it for a while, the government can't spend it for a while and the corporations can't divest us of it.

What doesn't make sense is the Senate's intention of penalizing people for saving for retirement instead of encouraging them. The Senate has actually approved a bill that will increase my taxes to make up for skybox deductions.

By penalizing individuals for retirement saving, the government has deleted the last option for many Americans. It seems that if we want a really fair tax structure we'll have to write it ourselves - without considering the interests of politicans and corporations and make appropriate deduction deletions in political and corporate tax returns.

Newscaster pleads to pornography charge

WICHITA — A veteran Wichita television newscaster has pleaded guilty to sending sexually explicit photographs of children through the mail.

Nick Ramsey, 60, who cited personal reasons when he resigned 3½ weeks ago as early morning anchor for KSNW, entered the plea in U.S. District Court Monday, shortly after being charged with the felony count accusuing him of using the U.S. Postal Service for the mailings.

The charge said Ramsey answered an advertisement placed in a Florida-based magazine by a postal inspector doing an undercover investigation. Prosecutors alleged Ramsey mailed photos of naked children in sexual poses to the inspector three times in January and February.

The crime carries a possible maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a $100,000 fine. As part of a plea bargain prosecutors have agreed to recommend probation when the former anchor is sentenced in about six weeks. Ramsey was unavailable for comment. His lawyer, Jean Oliver Moore, said Ramsey thought he was exchanging pictures with another collector.

Officials at KSNW said they weren't aware of the investigation when Ramsey

Kidnappers free Ronald, no arrests in case

DOVER TOWNSHIP, N.J. - Police on Tuesday found a seven-foot plastic statue of Ronald McDonald that had been held for the "ransom" of 8,891 chicken McNuggets, authorities said.

"He was standing by himself in the middle of the field," said police Sgt. Edward McDowell. Attached to him was a note saying the kidnappers "freed me from McDonaldland to see if Wendy's has more beef."

Officer Mick Leone said a radio station received an anonymous tip about the statue's whereabouts and told police.

The statue was taken June 6. Nine days later, restaurant manager Alvena Baeli found a note attached to the restaurant's back door.

"Don't you wish your Ronald McDonald was replaced? If so place 8,891 nuggets at 886 3rd Ave., New York, N.Y. Don't forget the sauce, or he gets it," the note read. There is no such address.

Employees later found a photograph of Ronald, with a gag around its mouth. No arrests have been made.

Junk-food thief leaves trail for authorities

PUNTA GORDA, Fla. - Police said they followed a trail of junk-food wrappers to make an arrest after someone stole $300 worth of candy and snacks from three of the county's Public Works Department buildings.

"It looks as if he opened the bags of chips and started eating them on his way home," Robert Graziano, sheriff's public information officer, said Monday of the thief who took items intended for vending machines.

"When he would finish with a bag, he'd throw it down," Graziano said. Detectives followed the trail to a mobile home three blocks away, where they allegedly found a bag of peanuts with a lot number matching that of the snacks

A radio found in the home matched the description of one stolen earlier from a county building, police said.

Angelo Bernard Isaac, 23, was booked in lieu of a $10,000 bond into the Charlotte County jail on two counts of burglary.

Officer faces discharge; refuses AIDS test

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. - A Navy petty officer faces 45 days in prison, reduction in rank and a bad conduct discharge for refusing to take a mandatory AIDS blood

In the first court challenge to the Navy's requirement that all personnel take the tests, Petty Officer 2nd Class Phillip J. Nolon was convicted Monday at a courtmartial of disobeying an order. He also was convicted by a judge of missing a deployment on his ship, the aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy.

Navy Capt. Daniel J. Zemniak sentenced Nolon to 45 days confinement, a reduction in rank to the lowest enlisted grade and a bad conduct discharge.

Nolon's Navy lawyer, Lt. Michael F. Hughes, said he would appeal. Before the court-martial, Zemniak rejected a defense motion to dismiss the charge against Nolon on grounds that the test, which shows whether someone has been exposed to the AIDS virus, is an unconstitutional search and seizure.

The test is "medically necessary to ensure the health of military personnel," Zem-Nolon, 25, who handles aircraft supplies at Oceana Naval Air Station, said he would not follow orders that he believes are unconstitutional.

Rig collides with freight train near Topeka

TOPEKA - One man was killed and another was injured Tuesday when a tractortrailer rig and a Santa Fe Railway freight train collided at an unmarked crossing on U.S. 75 just south of the city, authorities said. Clark Knight, 35, of Topeka, a passenger in the truck, was killed in the collision shortly before 2 p.m., said Sgt. Bill Hudson of the Shawnee County sheriff's office. Witnesses said the truck's driver, 30-year-old David M. Casey of Topeka, apparently did not see the train, which was traveling 45 mph, or hear its whistle. Casey was listed in stable condition at St. Francis Regional Medical Center, officials said.

Oil producer to pay for salt water leakage

TOPEKA - Barbara Sabol, secretary of health and environment, today issued a $500 fine against Marvin Harr, an El Dorado, Ark., oil producer, for illegally discharging salt water at an oil field near Caney.

Sabol fined Harr after he built a pit in the oil field, located four miles east of Caney, which is on the Oklahoma border in Montgomery County. Bob Moody, spokesman for the Department of Health and Environment, said Harr did not have a permit for the pond and the pond was leaking salt water. Health agency inspectors first discovered the leaking salt water pit in late January on a routine inspection and told Harr to get a permit for it or abandon it

It was rechecked in February and March and again Harr was told to either get a permit or abandon the pond. The fine was issued after inspectors returned to the site in April and found no change in the status of the pond.

The pond is used to hold brine, or salt water, which is pumped from underground rock formations in the production of oil. Harr has 30 days to appeal the fine.

Kansas receives national humanities grant

TOPEKA — The Kansas Committee for the Humanities has been awarded a $64,500 grant by the National Endowment for the Humanities to help finance its "Striving Toward America's Roots" program.

The grant was among 10 to state humanities councils announced Tuesday night in Milwaukee by Lynne V. Cheney, chairman of NEH. Other state councils which received grants totaling nearly $550,000 included those of Connecticut, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Vermont and Virginia. The Kansas STAR project will involve a series of book discussions, debates and seminars with scholars portraying President Thomas Jefferson and Alexander The programs, designed to examine issues addressed by the U.S. Constitution, will be held in 15 cities of Kansas, with additional appearances at schools and before Alanna Preussner, director of programs for the Kansas committee, is in charge of the state project.

State hopes I-70 tapes help tourism

A successfully proven idea for Nebraska has been to provide tourists with a cassette tape of the state's history, informing them of the history as far back as the "Old made that area prominent. While West."

Kansas has initiated the same idea, but with its own history. Currently, Interstate 70 is the only thoroughfare through the state equipped with a cassette, said Jon Howard, electronic communication technician for the University, who assisted in the tape's production. Whether one starts in the east, out of Kansas City, or in the western part of the state, the traveler can find these encyclopedias of history at the information centers when entering the state on I-70.

When leaving Kansas City, one listens to the song "Kansas City" followed by the history that has approaching Lawrence, home of the University of Kansas and later, nearing K-State, the respective fight songs of the schools are

Howard said the history of Kansas is covered from one end of the state to the other with particular points of interest and places tourists may enjoy stopping and learning more about.

Jones approached KKSU extension radio at K-State for help in producing the cassette tapes. Howard then coordinated appropriate music and made sure everything ran smoothly.

"The idea of the cassettes is to acquaint tourists with the history of Kansas and, hopefully, get them to stop and spend some time and money," Howard said.

David Fry of the Kansas Wheat Commission is the narrator on the cassettes consisting of an 18-page script. Fry's voice may be already familiar to Kansans, as his voice has been heard on advertisements for Kansas! magazine and the Kansas Wheat Commission.

Four additional cassettes have been discussed, covering other parts of the state, but their future lies in the success of the I-70 cassette. The cassettes are available at the information offices for rent or purchase.

Vice president explains coliseum director post

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

The appointment of Charles Hein as acting director of the proposed Fred E. Bramlage Coliseum last week marked the culmination of six years of study into how a coliseum operates, said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

Miller said Hein's appointment is temporary and runs through June 1987. A full-scale search toward finding a permanent director of the coliseum will begin sometime during the 1986-87 academic year.

Miller said details of how the search will be conducted have not been finalized, but it will be nationwide so the best director available can be found.

Miller said a study was initiated in 1980 to determine the best methods for managing and operating a col-

"We found that it is a standard technique that every coliseum should have a director," Miller said. "This is not unusual; nor is it unusual to plan for the administration of a coliseum several years in advance."

The position of acting director of the coliseum is a new position, Miller said, adding that Hein was a logical choice for the position because of his experience and availability.

Hein previously served as the University's director of communications. That position is being phased out, with the duties to be taken over by a new vice president for institutional advancement, Miller said.

Hein is the person who, Miller said, is qualified to promote the coliseum. "Mr. Hein has unique capabilities," Miller said. "As a result of re-organization, it became an opportunity for the University to take advantage of Mr. Hein's experience in public relations and his organizational capabilities."

Miller said the proposed coliseum should be a "regional resource of considerable importance."

He said that when construction contracts are awarded, after the project's re-bidding in August, "we want people from all over to know that we are going to have a coliseum."

Miller said the goal of K-State's coliseum study, which was completed in 1985, was to find out how other coliseums operate.

"We want to take all the good features of other coliseums and use them here," Miller said. "We also want to look at the bad features of coliseums and try to avoid using formation said it suspected the blasts were caused by limpet mines, explosives designed to cling to surfaces.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the explosions or any accusation by the government.

The outlawed African National Congress black guerrilla movement has claimed responsibility in the past for bombings around the country. The ANC which is trying to overthrow the government says it concentrates its attacks on military and government targets. The government says the ANC increasingly has staged attacks certain to result in civilian casualties.

The first explosion Tuesday went off at 2:01 p.m. at a half full Wimpy's restaurant on the ground floor of a department store building, showering glass onto busy Rissik Street. Government spokesman Casper Venter said 15 people, both blacks and whites, were injured.

The second explosion came 25 minutes later outside the President Holiday Inn. Venter said two blacks were injured.

Venter said a third explosion caused by a demolition charge occurred early Tuesday in a toilet at a stadium in Soweto, Johannesburg's main black township, but no one was hurt.

Sampson Litshane, a waiter at Wimpy's, said he saw two white women whose clothes were on fire.

It was not clear if the first blast occurred inside or just outside the restaurant. All the front windows were shattered, Wimpy's metal sign was ripped from the building front, and tables and chairs were strewn across the floor.

Venter said two black men were killed in other incidents between daybreak Monday and daybreak Tuesday, one shot by police near Witbank, east of Johannesburg, and the other believed shot by other blacks near the southern city of Uitenhage.

He also said one black man was wounded by three blacks with grenade launchers and automatic rifles who attacked a supermarket early Tuesday in the black homeland of Kwandebele.

Officials said 59 people have been killed since June 12 when the government imposed a nationwide state of emergency.

In another development Tuesday, delegates at the annual conference of the South African Council of Churches voted to proceed with their scheduled discussion of the country's problems despite the possibility that state-of-emergency restrictions might be violated.

The council is known for its outspoken criticism of the whiteled government's apartheid policies. The emergency regulations outlaw various "subversive" statements, including calls on foreign firms to stop doing business with South Africa and on other nations to impose economic

In a unanimous vote, delegates decided to proceed with the conference rather than bow to the restrictions and disband in protest.

The week-long conference opened Monday night.

The country's largest labor federation, the predominantly black Congress of South African Trade Unions, said in a statement Tuesday that more than 70 of its senior leaders and scores of other members had been detained during a post-emergency sweep in which hundreds of activists were taken into custody.

Kruger announces 'friendly' schedule

By The Collegian Staff

Head basketball coach Lon Kruger announced the Wildcats' 1986-87 schedule Tuesday which features 13 home games in the friendly confines of Ahearn Field House and is highlighted by a non-conference matchup with perennial collegiate power North Carolina.

The matchup with the Tarheels the first meeting between the two schools since the 1981 campaign when they met in the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Midwest Regional Finals in Salt Lake City, Utah - will be in Kansas City's Kemper Arena on Dec. 27.

Kruger, a former standout in the early 70s for the Wildcats, will make his Ahearn debut as head coach on Nov. 29 when K-State opens the season with a home contest against South Dakota.

Also, a rarity of sorts presents itself when K-State contests a homeand-home series with cross-state rival Wichita State. The Wildcats travel to Wichita on Dec. 13, while the Shockers return the favor on Jan. 12, 1987, in Manhattan.

Other standouts on the K-State schedule include a trip to Nashville, Tenn., for the Music City Invitational, which includes Illinois State, Tennessee Tech and host Vanderbilt on Dec. 19-20.

The Wildcats will entertain Creighton on Dec. 9 and journey to Milwaukee, Wis., to face independent standout Marquette on Jan. 7.

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Eric Plunk and Steve Ontiveros combined on a six-hitter Tuesday night that carried Oakland to an 8-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals and enabled the A's to snap a club-record 15-game road losing streak.

Plunk, 2-3, allowed three hits through 5 3 innings. The rookie right-hander walked six and struck out six as the A's won away from home for the first time since May 23. Ontiveros collected his fifth save.

The A's jumped on Bret Saberhagen, 4-8, for three runs in the third inning and two in the fourth.

Alfredo Griffin walked leading off the third and stole second. After Tony Phillips walked, Mike Davis doubled to score Griffin, Carney Lansford brought in Phillips with an infield out and Davis scored when Saberhagen balked.

Bruce Bochte singled leading off the fourth and went to second when Dusty Baker singled. Donnie Hill's fly ball let Bochte go to third and he scored on Griffin's grounder. Jerry Willard's single made it

Students ride in rodeo finals

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

Two K-State students traveled to Bozeman, Mont., to compete at the National College Rodeo Finals June

Vern Gardner, senior in agricultural economics, won third place in the bareback bronco riding competition and Ray Wessel, senior in agricultural education, placed 10th in bull riding.

Gardner and Wessel were the only members of the K-State rodeo team to qualify and compete nationally.

There were 49 competitors in the bareback division and 41 competitors in the bull riding division, plus competitors from across the nation in every other division.

Neal Woollen, K-State rodeo coach, boasted of Gardner and Wessel's placings, adding that "our people routinely do very well at the nationals.'

Gardner's third place in the bareback division was an overall for that event. Scores are based on a cumulative for three rides. The first two rides, called "long-goes," are preliminaries and a rider must do well to compete in the final ride, or

In his first two rides, Gardner received scores of 70 and 72 out of 100 points possible. His final ride, a 66, was somewhat disappointing and made his third-place finish a little less than he had hoped for.

"I was disappointed with my final horse. I thought I could have won it with a better horse," Gardner said.

"I got third last year and was hoping to do better than that this year," he said.

But Gardner's finish was good enough to boost his season ranking. Coming into the national rodeo, he was tied for a 10th-place ranking and now is in sixth place nationally.

"I was pretty tickled about that. It made me feel a little better about my placing," Gardner said. Gardner may feel his travels, expenses and practice were worth it as he "won somewhere around $500," according to Woollen. With only three years of experience behind him, Wessel placed 10th in the national bull riding competition.

that well with only three years of experience," Woollen said

Wessel rode three different times to obtain a cumulative score. On his first ride, he was bucked off. "On his second ride, he came back and rode extremely well," Woollen said. But, on his final ride, he was bucked off again. His performance was still good enough for a placing, however.

Wessel is no longer eligible to compete at the collegiate level. He has already been in the professional rankings as "Rookie of the Year" earlier this year.

Wessel will now concentrate on professional rodeos and finishing his degree at K-State.

To qualify for the National College Rodeo Finals, Gardner and Wessel had to place in the top two in their event in this region.

Each region has 10 rodeos and the best scores from five of those rodeos are added together to determine top winners in the region. The top two individuals in each event and the top two teams in each region compete at the national rodeo.

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE - University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias died from a dose of cocaine that he had probably snorted only minutes before he collapsed in his dorm room where he was celebrating his new professional career, the state medical examiner said Tuesday.

The cocaine killed Bias by interrupting the electrical activity in his brain, causing the heart to begin to beat irregularly, said Dr. John Square Arena.

"This resulted in the sudden onset of seizures and cardiac arrest," he said at a news conference where he released the findings of an autopsy on the 22-year-old All American. The autopsy showed that "nothing but the cocaine killed him. The reason he died was cocaine," Marshall said.

Smialek said he couldn't determine how much cocaine Bias took, but said he would not call it an overdose. "I don't think he took a lot of cocaine," he said.

The medical examiner described Bias as very healthy, with no heart disease or damage.

"Len Bias had a large heart, but that was not unexpected considering his superb athletic condition," Smialek said.

He said there was no evidence that Bias was allergic to cocaine, but that he exhibited a sensitivity to the drug.

"This particular concentration might not have killed another individual. On the other hand, some might have been killed by lesser concentrations," Smialek said. The blood cocaine level was 6.5 milligrams per liter, about average for the 16 deaths from cocaine use recorded in Maryland in the last three years, he said. The autopsy turned up no evidence of alcohol or

No adulterants were found in the blood, indicating that Bias had ingested a pure form of cocaine, the medical examiner said. It appeared that Bias had snorted the cocaine, Smialek said.

There had been reports of a delay of as much as 30 minutes before Bias' roommates summoned an ambulance to the University of Maryland dormitory where he collapsed. Smialek said Bias would have required medical care within four or five minutes of the time his heart stopped to save his life.

A teammate gave Bias cardiopulmonary resuscitation before the ambulance arrived. Smialek ruled that the manner of death was undetermined, meaning there is no finding whether it was a homicide or accident. He also said there was no evidence of previous cocaine use by Bias.

Marshall said he wants to know "who brought them (drugs) in" and who was involved in drug use during the early morning hours last Thursday as Bias, some teammates and friends celebrated his selection by the champion Boston Celtics as the No. 2 pick in the National Basketball Association draft.

Board recommends students

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

K-State students applying for entrance into medical, dental and optometry schools have a high rate of admission, said Bettie Dale, adviser for the College of Arts and Sciences.

Dale said this is due to the high quality of pre-professional programs at the University and letters of recommendation written by the premedical evaluation board. Dale, who advises students in pre-medical, predentistry and pre-optometry programs is chairwoman of the board consisting of five faculty members.

Last year, the board prepared letters of recommendation for 27 students applying to medical school. Twenty-three students were accepted and will be attending medical schools throughout the nation next fall.

Of these 23, two were music majors; one a language major; one an animal science major; and one a dual major in physics and philosophy. Most of the other students graduated with science broader academic background," Dale said. "This is an effort to train physicians who are more wellrounded and humane.'

Dale said the diversity of degrees reflects a change in the medical profession.

Of the six students who applied to dental school last year, four were accepted. This fall, they will be attending the University of Missouri School of Dentistry in Kansas City, and the University of Nebraska School of Dentistry in Lincoln.

An important part of the pre-dental program is the experience students obtain through observing the dental clinic at Fort Riley. Students receive one hour of credit for observing and working with the clinic's dentists for one semester.

"This gives the student the opportunity to see what being a dentist is really like," Dale said.

Last year, eight of 10 students applying to optometry schools were accepted. One part of the preoptometry program is observing one of three local optometrists at work.

These students also receive one hour of credit for this internship-type experience.

Dale said students find their preoptometry classes "much more interesting" after observing a professional at work, adding the experience also assists students in making career choices. To participate in the program, the student must have at least two years of science courses so they can understand what they are observing, Dale

The faculty members on the board write letters of recommendation for all students applying to professional schools. Because students must apply to professional schools 12 to 15 months before entering, the summer and early fall are busy times for the

"We meet once a week to review students' records and prepare letters of evaluation." Dale said. "Our goal is to get as many K-State students as possible into professional schools. At the same time, we must maintain our honesty so the letters will be believ-

The letter-writing responsibilities are divided among the members of the board, with two to three hours spent with the student in preparation for the letter, Dale said. But each board member must read the letter in full before signing.

'Official' witch strives to educate

By The Associated Press

SALEM, Mass. - Her eyes are heavy with black makeup. Her dresses are flowing caftans of satiny black material. And her mane of long black hair covers her shoulders and much of her back. Laurie Cabot is a witch, if there were any doubt, and is more than proud to tell you so.

She is proud despite jeers and threats she has endured over the years for her unconventional appearance and her beliefs in the pagan witch religion, Wicca. Passing motorists have shouted to her children that she should be burned.

'When I divorced for the second time, I decided to live my life totally as a witch and I didn't care what people thought," she said. "And because I began wearing traditional witch clothing, I had to make a living as a witch."

Now she is a local celebrity, cashing in on her notoriety and serving as a defender of those who share her beliefs.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis proclaimed her Salem's official witch in 1975 for carrying out civic good works, primarily years of volunteer work on behalf of children with special needs. Lately she has been rallying protesters against the state film bureau, which secured the filming in novel, "The Witches of Eastwick." Cabot denounced the book as "anti-women, anti-Christian and anti-witch."

Despite an appearance that seems to confirm the broom-flying stereotype, she asserts that witches are not followers of the devil but decent, law-abiding people you would want, and already may have, as neighbors.

They are followers of a pre-Christian religion in which, they say, psychic powers are passed on in a sort of baptism. Witches believe, she asserts, "Do as you will and harm none.

Pictures of witches as greenfaced crones anger her, and she tells of marching into shops to rip up Halloween decorations. She helped launch the Witches' League for Public Awareness in June to protect her community's battered image

In Salem, a historic town of 38,000 residents famous for its 17thcentury witch trials, witchcraft now thrives as a cottage industry. Cabot claims there are numerous witches practicing in the town, which has many shops selling witch-related items and has a witches' museum.

The 53-year-old witch lives with her two daughters and five cats in an undistinguished New England

The Anaheim, Calif.-born former night club dancer is branching out beyond her herb and potion shop, tarot card readings and lectures on psychic powers. She's negotiating her entry into the home video market with tapes of witchcraft instruction, she said.

Cabot's high-profile marketing has created some resentment within the witch community.

"She does fit the media stereotype of the witch," said Margot Adler, a reporter for National Public Radio who researched a book about contemporary witchcraft, "Drawing Down the Moon," and is herself a practicing witch.

"Within the community, I think she has had a difficult road to hoe because she has been perceived by some as commercial," she said. "But we have had to rethink that."

Cabot persuaded her by saying: "Look, we've been in Salem for years, on the front lines. Now it's perfectly possible to walk the streets in a robe and pentagram and feel perfectly safe.

"She has been fighting for the same things we have - the freedom to practice our religion -Wicca," Adler said.

large tax cuts to some of the wealthiest among us."

Some highlights: The 50 percent top tax rate on individuals would be cut to a nominal 27 percent, although some people with incomes above $45,000 (over $75,000 for couples) would pay up to 32.4 percent on some of their income. About 80 percent of individuals would pay a rate of 15 percent on their taxable income (after exemptions and deductions).

- The $1,080 personal exemption would rise to $2,000 for all but the wealthiest taxpayers. Standard deductions would be increased, to $3,000 for singles and $5,000 for joint

- Workers covered by company pensions would lose their deductible Individual Retirement Accounts.

Deductions for consumer interest, such as for credit cards and car loans, and miscellaneous expenses, including union dues, would be repealed. The writeoff for medical expense and sales taxes would be slashed. Income averaging would be repealed for all but farmers. Capital gains would lose their long-held preferential treatment.

Many tax shelters would be ended, costing upper-income investors an extra $50 billion or so. The effect on real estate investments would be so tough that rents could rise sharply, some experts said.

- The top corporate tax rate of 46 percent would be cut to 33 percent, with lower rates for small business. The investment credit would be repealed. The present depreciation system would be liberalized slightly. Profitable companies would find it difficult to avoid the federal tax collector because of a much stiffer "minimum tax."

Lawmakers who say the bill does too little for the middle class pointed to estimates that the after-tax income of people earning $30,000 to $40,000 a year would be raised by 0.4 percent, compared with 1.4 percent for those making more than $200,000. Roughly one in four people earning between $20,000 and $50,000 would face a tax increase.

Because the cuts in deductions would take effect next Jan. 1 and the rate reductions and increases in standard deductions would come later, many people who could expect to pay lower taxes in the long run would pay more in 1987.

Dole calls bill 'home run'

Tax reform proposal pleases senators

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Kansas senators embraced a tax reform proposal that passed the Senate on Tuesday, lauding it for cutting rates and plugging loopholes.

"It's not a perfect bill," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "But this is the home run. We have cleaned the bases." Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., gave a more cautious assessment, calling the legislation "an important step toward real tax reform." Their comments came after the Senate approved, 97-3, the sweep-system. The proposal goes to a conference committee where House and Senate negotiators will try to resolve differences between the two chambers. The House passed its tax overhaul proposal last December.

"Obviously many of the toughest decisions such as deductions for IRAs have been left for the conference." Kassebaum said in a statement.

One of the most difficult issues facing the conference committee will be the tax treatment of individual retirement accounts, or ing revision of the income tax IRAs. The Senate bill eliminates the IRA deduction for most workers while the House measure retains current allowances - up to $2,000 a year by taxpayers and $250 for nonworking spouses.

Under the Senate bill, workers not covered by a pension plan could deposit up to $2,000 in an IRA and pay no tax on the deposit or interest until the money is withdrawn. People covered by a company plan could contribute to an IRA, but they must pay tax on the contribution. Interest, however, would be tax-free until withdrawn. Although the Senate rejected efforts to restore the IRA deduction, it adopted a non-binding resolution calling on conference committee negoiators to restore as much as possible.

Dole, in a telephone call from President Reagan after the Senate acted, jokingly opened the conversation, "It was a pretty tough vote.'

On the floor, Dole credited approval of the tax bill to Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the Finance Committee chairman which drafted the proposal which lowers rates to 15 percent and 27 percent for individuals.

Doctor says humans 'born musicians'

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO - There is no such thing as being too young or too old to participate in music, according to Dr. Frank R. Wilson, a neurologist and assistant clinical professor of neurology at the University of California School of Medicine, San "Humans are 'born musicians'," he said. "because we all have the neurological and muscular capability to develop musical skills.

Wilson, who is also a special consultant to the American Music Conference based in Chicago, is a leading authority on the relationship between the brain and an individual's capacity to play a musical instrument.

He first became interested in music and its connection to neuromuscular control when he noticed his daughter's progress on the piano. "I realized that a remarkable physical and mental evolution was taking place in her which I couldn't account for," he

After several years of reviewing results of research on the brain's control of skilled movement and concluding that virtually everyone has the potential for developing musical skills, Wilson began taking piano lessons at the age of 40.

"I felt terribly clumsy during the first few months, but knew that I should see results by the end of the first year," he said. "I wasn't disappointed."

Another of Wilson's conclusions, discussed in his recently published book, "Tone Deaf and All Thumbs?: an Invitation to Music-Making for Late Bloomers and Non-Prodigies," is that there is "very little to distinguish the serious musician from the serious athlete."

The only difference between the two from a physical standpoint, he

"The one difference that really does count is the effect of age," he said. "Time is on the musicians' side. They can look forward to continued maturation and refinement of their skills well beyond the age at which even the most durable football or basketball player has retired to the sidelines.

"The key to success in musical studies, as in sports, is having the right goals," he explained. "When the music student starts with his or her hopes fixed on immediately sounding like a professional, that attitude will be defeating. learning, Wilson believes that instrumental students will get the most enjoyment and long-lasting rewards if they remember these three points:

Slow progress is the way it works. No matter how leisurely you progress in your musical studies, time is on your side.

- You can't fail. You are the only judge of the music you play and whatever you gain, it's the right thing for you.

- The best reason of all for playing music is because it's fun. Becoming a virtuoso shouldn't necessarily be your goal. Many musicians who never perform get a great deal of enjoyment from playing music for themselves.

Contra aid passes by vote of 221-209

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The House heeded President Reagan's pleas Wednesday night and narrowly approved $100 million of mostly military aid to rebels fighting to overthrow the government of Nicaragua.

The Democratic-controlled chamber approved the plan by a vote of 221-209 for $70 million worth of military hardware and $30 million in non-lethal aid. That reversed the House's narrow defeat of a similar package three months ago.

Under the plan, the U.S. government - for the first time - would openly give military support to the rebels known as "Contras" and permits the CIA and Pentagon to manage the contra program. The rebels had been covertly supported by the CIA from 1981 to 1984.

During a day-long debate, much was made of $27 million in non-lethal aid previously provided the Contras. Opponents of further aid said large amounts of that money ended up in the pockets of the Honduran military and in bank accounts in the Bahamas and the Cayman Islands.

Otherwise the debate covered familiar ground. Reagan's supporters said military aid was essential to curb communism and restore democracy in Nicaragua while opponents said the administration had failed to pursue a peaceful outcome through negotiations. In summing up the opposition, Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said that by approving military aid the United States would be "embarking on what would be a virtually unprecedented action - the United States would be undertaking ... a proxy war (against) a government with which we technically are at peace and technically have diplomatic relations.' Republican leader Bob Michael of Illinois urged his colleagues to abandon partisanship. "Let's have the guts to nurture democracy and fight communism in our hemisphere today, not tomorrow," he said.

The battle took on a personal quality this week when House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. rejected a White House request to permit Reagan to make a pitch from the House rostrum for his plan. O'Neill said such an action would be unprecedented and unorthodox, and offered to give Reagan a forum if he would submit to questioning from House members or address a joint congressional session instead. Those terms were rejected and Reagan made a noontime speech Tuesday in the White House, which the three major television networks declined to

The House vote added the Reagan plan to an unrelated bill providing money for military construction projects. To become law, that bill must pass the Republican-controlled Reagan lobbied until the last minute to win support and reverse the earlier defeat. This, too, was an uphill fight with White House spokesman Larry Speakes saying earlier in the week that Reagan was behind.

Several congressmen who switched their votes said they supported Reagan this time because they felt decisive action was needed to force the leftist Sandinista government to negotiate in good faith with its op-

Earlier Wednesday, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., said Reagan's effort was picking up Democratic votes.

Some Democrats backed an alternative package of $100 million which would give the Contras $30 million now for non-lethal items like clothing but which would hold off the military items until after another House vote Oct 1. The delay was intended to give peace talks a chance to work.

That proposal, offered by Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla, was incoporated into a bill providing $8.1 million for various Pentagon construction projects.

The House voted 279-148 approval of the proposal to add McCurdy's plan to the package before moving on to other items in the overall bill and then returning to Contra aid late in the afternoon. Pending after that was discussing and possible votes on several amendproposing various refinements, including one that would bar release of any money to Contras until the Reagan administration could account for how all of the money previously allocated has been spent.

Reagan delayed - by one day his departure for a California vacation to give himself more time to drum up support for his plan. When he finally did leave for California, he planned to lobby by telephone from Air Force One.

Speakes said Reagan made at least nine phone calls from the White House before he left and met with

Fun, sun attract students to 'Rocks'

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

Hedonism is the self-indulgent pursuit of pleasure. To those familiar with the concept, it brings to mind visions of a faraway place with no responsibilities and people everywhere.

In the minds of many local people, such a place exists on the shore of Tuttle Creek Reservoir. It is called "The Rocks."

The Rocks is actually a ledge of limestone about 200 yards long located on the east side of the reservoir in the Spillway Area. Along the shoreline, the limestone has broken away into the water, creating a series of steps that people use to sunbathe on.

While The Rocks has been known to be a hard place to find, the effort to locate it is worth it for the people who revel at the thought of enjoying the sun while being surrounded by scores of young people. In fact, The Rocks seems to be one of the "in" places for the college crowd, as well as the young at heart, to mingle and be seen.

"This is where everybody goes," said Erica Anderson, junior in biology. "This is the college scene.'

"This is the happening beach," said Monty Ehrlich, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and maintenance technician at Tuttle Creek State Park. "People come here to meet their friends."

The Rocks provides more things to do than just sunbathing and

"There's great scenery, good sun, boats, hackey-sack," said Les Platz, graduate in business. "It's just an entertainment area. It just turns into a party every day."

Although The Rocks can get crowded - up to a few hundred people on a given sunny day - most don't seem to mind. The regulars come to expect the crowded conditions and newcomers are warned by word of mouth. This is not the type of place one just happens onto. The water, as well as the social atmosphere, plays a large part in the location's growing popularity.

"It's a lot better than sitting in your backyard," said Mark Monroe of Manhattan. "When it's hot, you've got to jump into the water." The Rocks also is known for its aesthetic value.

"It's really pretty and better than looking at the pool," said Jodi Morrison of Manhattan. "And you get away from all the little kids splashing.' With the lake as a platform and the noted absence of children, many people take the opportunity to leisurely float on inflatable rafts for hours at a time.

"You need a floaty or you're basically out of it," Anderson said. Lisa Pelfrey, senior in marketing, believes floating on a raft is one of the best places to escape from the problems of life.

Whether people go to The Rocks to get away from the inevitable problems of college life, to get a tan or just to socialize, use of the location

Because the Spillway Area is part of the Tuttle Creek State Park, it is necessary to obtain a vehicle permit to park there. Permits can be picked up at the park office, located in the Tuttle Puddle Area below the dam. Permits are $2 daily and $15 annually. The annual permits are good at all Kansas state parks.

Park ranger Bennet Jedlicka said the reason behind buying permits is so the people who are using the parks are the ones who pay for the upkeep.

Many times, though, people don't purchase a permit. As a result, Jedlicka said people are "hit-up" for a $4 fine plus the cost of a day permit.

"It's only fair to those who pay," he said.

Jedlicka said because many do not buy a permit or pay the fine,

Financial aid fraud unlikely

SCOTT SEWELL Staff Writer

Around 250 to 300 people enrolled in summer school at Wichita State University have fraudulently received as much as $2,400 each in guaranteed student loans, The Wichita Eagle-Beacon reported Wednesday.

Apparently, two or more Wichita men approached low-income people and told them if they filled out financial aid statements, paid their fees and enrolled under WSU's open admissions program, they could get up to $2,400 in guaranteed student loans, WSU officials said in the article.

K-State's Acting Director of Financial Assistance, James Upham said, "We don't know that it (GSL fraud) has (occurred at K-State), and I really don't think so. We just don't have that type of situation here.

Upham thinks part of the problem at WSU is that the admission requirements for new, adult students are too "loose."

According to Upham, and Barbara Dawes, associate director of admissions, the process in which a individual applies for, and receives, financial assistance is too stringent for loopholes to be found in the system.

Dawes said in order for any student to receive financial aid at K-State, the individual must provide high school transcripts, and/or ACT scores. According to the 1985-1986

General Catalog, students who have not participated in formal education for some time or students who do not intend to become candidates for a degree, may enroll in undergraduate courses as students in special

The catalog also states that adult students who are not high school graduates can be admitted if the high school work they completed was of good quality, or if their ACT scores present evidence of collegiate success.

Test scores and transcripts are not necessary for students who apply for special status. These students need only to submit an application for admissions and complete a screening interview with a director of admissions, Dawes

She said special status students can only complete 15 hours of work at K-State, then they must apply for regular admission to the University and meet all the requirements for regular admission.

Dawes said once a student earns 12 hours of credit, the admissions office contacts each individual. The office advises the student to change to regular student status to continue coursework at the Univer-

The key aspect concerning special student status at K-State, Dawes said, is that the student cannot receive any financial aid due to federal regulations concerning the special student status.

Upham said the system is not completely fail-safe, but he thinks the admissions requirements make it difficult for an incident with the same magnitude as WSU's situation to occur here.

"It's possible it could happen here," Upham said, "...but I don't think so."

According to the Eagle-Beacon article, the problem at WSU wasn't detected earlier because the University instituted a program which allows students to enroll in summer school during the spring semester, similar to the program instituted at K-State last spring.

In the article, WSU officials said they have started a counseling process to identify students who need tuition money and they will do everything they can to see that students who need help receive it.

Congress to decrease money for 'Star Wars' defense plans

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - When Congress cut President Reagan's "Star Wars" budget last year by $1 billion, Sen. Sam Nunn explained the reductions in the previously popular program by saying Star Wars didn't pass the "sniff test."

The Georgia Democrat, one of Capitol Hill's most respected defense experts, explained that the phrase means "you just use your nose. And using my nose, Star Wars smells to me like it's in trouble around here."

Now, Congress is poised to cut even more deeply into the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of the research program to develop a futuristic shield against nuclear at-

For the current fiscal year, Reagan sought about $4 billion for SDI, but Congress reduced that to $3 billion. For the next year, starting Oct. 1, Reagan asked $5.4 billion, but the Republican-controlled Senate Armed Services Committee reduced the figure to $3.95 billion. The likelihood is that the figure will be trimmed again when the Pentagon budget reaches the floor next month.

Forty-eight senators — almost half the 100 members - have signed a letter urging that the SDI budget be held to only 3 percent above inflation next year.

Moreover, in the Democraticcontrolled House, even greater cuts are in the offing. A House Armed Services subcommittee proposed a $3.4 billion budget and efforts will likely be made on the House floor to freeze the budget at current levels. The reasons for cutting SDI are varied, Nunn and Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, explained after the Senate committee acted last week. In the past, they have supported the program. The two senators sponsored the effort to cut SDI's 1986-87 budget and admitted their move was a preemptive strike to take the wind out of efforts to cut it deeper on the floor. The two legislators cited several reasons for the cuts: - Budgetary restrictions imposed by the Gramm-Rudman budgetbalancing law. Those limits are leading to reductions in almost all federal programs and the Pentagon is not exempt.

Arms control questions. The 1972 treaty limiting defenses against ballistic missiles could be breached by any SDI system, Star Wars opponents say. Administration defenders like Weinberger say Star Wars will be built within the ABM treaty limits, but Cohen, Nunn and other legislators have not been satisfied by those promises.

- A "growing perception in Congress that too much has been spent on SDI," said Cohen. He explained that SDI is taking up so much of the Pentagon's research budget that there are growing fears that equally worthy programs won't get the money they need.

- The fuzzy definition of just exactly what Star Wars is.

When Reagan announced the program three years ago, he spoke of a system that might make nuclear missiles obsolete. Just last week, in a speech to high school students in Glassboro, N.J., he spoke about SDI as "a shield that missiles could not penetrate - a shield that protect us from nuclear missiles just as a roof protects a family from rain."

But scientists and other administration officials say such a system is highly unlikely, if ever, to be achieved. Instead, they speak of a multilayered system of defending U.S. nuclear weapons from a preemptive strike. That defense would make nuclear war less likely, they say, because it would complicate a Soviet attack.

Liquor board hears criticism

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The head of Kansas' temperance organization Wednesday accused a task force named by Gov. John Carlin to review state liquor laws of catering to the liquor in-

"With members on the Liquor Law Review commission from the industry and with many attending these hearings from the industry, it becomes quite obvious that the work of this commission is to please those who deal in alcohol," the Rev. Richard E. Taylor Jr. told the commission, whose chairman is District Court Judge Herb Rohleder of Great Bend.

"Why should you ask dealers in our most abused drug what changes are desirable in our alcohol control laws? It would make just as much sense to ask cocaine dealers what changes are desirable in cocaine control laws."

Taylor, president of Kansans for Life at Its Best, the state's antiliquor, anti-gambling group, was the lead witness at a Statehouse hearing the commission held to allow public comment on its proposed changes in state liquor laws.

The commission also conducted a hearing last Friday in Salina and will hold additional hearings in Wichita Friday and in Johnson County Mon-

It will present its recommendations to Carlin this fall, and the governor will forward them to the 1987 Legislature.

Carlin instructed the commission to review the liquor laws and to suggest changes both in anticipation of approval of a liquor-by-the-drink constitutional amendment to be voted upon by Kansans in November and in provisions of other laws which it believes should be improved.

Taylor told the commission his basic message was: "We want to keep the price (of liquor) high and the consumption low.

He characterized many of the changes proposed by the commission's subcommittees as aimed at helping increase liquor sales.

Taylor cited as examples proposals to eliminate the minimum price markup on liquors sold in package stores, allowing point-ofsale advertising in liquor stores and other liberalization of advertising restrictions

"Research has found that lower increased bring prices consumption," Taylor told the commission. "Advertising increases sales and consumption. If not, why would anyone pay for the advertis-

Taylor proposed banning the sale of 3.2 percent beer in grocery stores, convenience stores and gasoline

"Retail liquor stores should be limited to alcoholic liquors and beverages only, with package alcoholic beverages sold only in liquor stores," he said. "This would end cold beer to go in filling stations and would end grocery money spent for beer.'

The dry leader said limiting beer sales to liquor stores would help curb sales to minors.

"This makes so much sense it will never be adopted," he said.

ohnson continues duties at University

By WENDY NEWLON Collegian Reporter

Although many students are taking advantage of the summer vacation, Student Body President Steve Johnson, junior in agricultural economics, is staying active with a full schedule of presidential duties.

Johnson is living at FarmHouse this summer because he feels staying in Manhattan is part of the responsibility of being student body

He said that during a "typical" day, he begins with a brief welcoming speech to each orientation group at K-State. During the welcome address, he encourages the incoming students to get involved in various activities on campus and gives a brief summary of different services available at K-State

Johnson also attends meetings and keeps in close contact with the Kansas Board of Regents, he said.

"Actually, I spend almost as much time setting up appointments as I do attending them," Johnson said.

Another of Johnson's summer responsibilities is making appearances at different civic events in Manhattan. The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce invites Johnson to the events, the most recent being the ground breaking for the Manhattan Town Center Mall.

"I like to be at these different things so there is student representation," he said.

Johnson said his main objective this summer is to look at K-State's orientation program for possible improvements. He also hopes to visit the University of Kansas and Wichita State University orientation programs to obtain ideas which may benefit K-State's program.

An internal goal Johnson said he would like to see accomplished this year is to change election dates for Student Governing Association offices so newly elected officials could start their jobs in January instead of February.

Johnson said he believes holding elections earlier in the academic vear would be better because the newly elected officials could come to campus over the semester break to prepare for their new jobs. He said he believes this would be particularly beneficial for those not familiar with parliamentary procedure.

Johnson will be in Washington, D.C., July 14 through Aug. 8 for an internship in the offices of Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

"I'll probably be doing gofer work and opening and answering letters,"

While not busy performing his duties as student body president, Johnson said he returns to his home in Assaria to help his father with the

Choral workshop ends with concert

More than 60 high school singers from across the state will present a concert Saturday as part of a summer choral workshop.

The concert, set for 2 p.m. at All Faiths Chapel, is the conclusion of the Summer Choral Institute, which began Tuesday and ends Saturday.

Students from throughout the state audition to be members of the special ensemble. The participants, who must be sophomores or juniors in high school, audition by preparing and performing a solo, similar to high school music contests. This year 50 singers were selected from 230 auditions, said Rod Walker, associate professor of music and coordinator of the workshop. Six pianists and two string quartets also were chosen. During the week, students

Stage set for country singer

By The Collegian Staff

Country recording artist Helen Cornelius will be featured in an Arts in the Park performance 8 p.m. Friday on the stage in City Park.

Cornelius was voted "Most Promising Female Vocalist" by fans in the Music City News Cover Awards in 1977. In that same year, she and Jim Ed Brown were named "Vocal Duo of the Year" by the Country Music Association and were finalists for that award every year after through 1981.

Their hit album, "I Don't Want To Marry You," took top honors in 1977 as "Album of the Year." In 1978, Cornelius was nominated for "Best New Female Vocalist" by the Academy of Country Music.

As a composer, Cornelius has written more than 500 songs and published approximately 200. In addition to her own albums, her songs have been recorded by other artists including The Oak Ridge Boys, Reba McEntire, Lynn Anderson and Connie

In 1984, Cornelius had the lead role in Bill Fegan's touring production of Irving Berlin's Broadway classic "Annie Get Your Gun." The play toured for 31/2 months in 64 cities. Her current role as opening act for The Statler Brothers has lasted more than a year.

Her new album, titled "Helen Cornelius," contains songs from three distinct phases of her career. Songs from her early days with Jim Ed Brown include "I Don't Want To Have To Marry You" and "You Don't Bring Me Flowers." Some new titles include "Mama, He's Crazy" and "Give Me One More Chance."

Born in Hannibal, Mo., Cornelius is the youngest of eight children. She started singing at the age of 5 in school programs and church specials. Her first national exposure was on the "The Ted Mack Amateur Hour" in 1970.

New guide aids enrollment

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

With the help of The New Student Guide, students in western Kansas are able to enroll closer to home.

The New Student Guide includes information such as course descriptions, estimated college costs, maps, building abbreviations, mock grade cards and schedules, and a section concerning where to go for help.

This booklet is used by New Student Programs as a tool to inform incoming freshmen from western Kansas on enrollment procedures.

Marilyn Trotter, director of New Student Programs, compiled the booklet with the help of Nancy Hause, assistant director of New Student Programs, who edited the project.

New Student Programs has been going to four different locations in western Kansas for freshman enrollment for three years, but this is the first year the office has had the booklet available.

"We run the risk of information overload," Trotter said. "If they can take it home, they can reinforce the concepts they heard here and retain

Because this service must not be confused with a recruitment visit by the admissions office, New Student Programs must have their sessions in a convention center rather than in the individual high schools.

K-State recruitment officials are allowed a certain number of visits to each high school. If New Student Programs holds its enrollment procedures at the high school, it will be using one of the University's recruitment visits for students already committed to attending K-State. Alumni often assist in obtaining appropriate facilities for the sessions.

Trotter said by using The New Student Guide, New Student Programs is able to not only inform, but to help recruit and retain students.

Trotter said the information was so valuable to the incoming freshmen, she wished New Student Programs could afford to give one to each incoming freshman, rather than just to the western Kansas students.

Accessibilty 'long-term' objective

University officials talk big about handicap accessibility, but in reality they don't appear to be chomping at the bit to make the dream anything more than a nightmare.

Take Kedzie Hall for example. One of the east entrances has been closed off since before spring. When the construction first began workers were on the project all day every day for several days, even weeks at a time.

Work has slowed drastically since the University's ambitious start. Workers occassionally appear to run a jack hammer for a while and then disappear for days, even weeks at a time.

So when University officials say

Thompson Hall will "soon" be accessible to handicapped students the issue in question is one of time lapse not intentions.

Without a doubt, the University's intentions are good. But good intentions are not helping handicapped students into Kedzie, Thompson and even more recently Anderson, halls.

Students, through the Student Governing Association, are even paying for the work on Anderson Hall, but any sign of construction has yet to be witnessed.

It's becoming increasingly irritating that projects meant to increase the accessibility of buildings to handicapped students are being stretched out over a seriously long period. At this rate, K-State might comply with state accessibility codes by the year 2500. Then again, we shouldn't get too optimistic.

English Pravda educates citizens

A St. Paul, Minn., publishing company recently began printing English-language editions of Pravda, the daily newspaper of the Soviet Union's Communist Party.

Cox's Associated Publishers Inc. has each Pravda issue translated into English, then prints and distributes the paper throughout the United States. The delayed, stateside rewrite, which is translated as soon as three weeks from original printing, can be found at newstands and bookstores, including locally at The Book Shop, 3047 Anderson

While profit is the main motive behind the U.S. version of Pravda, there are other implications connected with the Soviet paper's availability in the Western world.

Because U.S. citizens rarely learn what goes on in the Soviet Union from day to day, Pravda helps ease misconceptions by allowing Americans to get a different view of Soviet life. Now, U.S. citizens can read the same thing the average Soviet citizen reads.

In another example of how citizens in both countries are trying to improve relations, 200 women each in Needham, Mass., and Leningrad recently took part in a televised satellite hookup. The two sides quizzed each other for three hours on subjects ranging from nuclear war to marital problems.

While many Americans have had a misguided view of the Soviet Union in the past, methods should be devised similar to the English version of Pravda and the debate to improve U.S.-Soviet relations. Living in misconceived darkness about Soviet life should not be an avenue Americans want to continue to stumble down.

Campus smoking code confusing

Although the final outcome is far from decided, there is now an opportunity for individuals on both sides of the smoking issue to fected by the smokers' actions scrutinize current University

The ambiguity of the current policy should be realized, as evidenced by the "number of people inquiring as to what the current codes are," according to George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

But this opportunity should not be abused by smokers - or nonsmokers - to dictate unreasonable and unfair regulations on others. The opportunity should be used to enact a welldefined, enforceable, Universitywide policy regarding smoking.

Perhaps one provision included should require proper signage that would notify smokers where their activity is lawful and with minimum adverse impact on individuals or property.

Although some individuals and organizations have become fanatical toward the prohibition of smoking in any public facility, such a policy should not be considered by the administration. It would be a severe infringement on smokers' rights. But the rights of others to not be adversely af-must not be diminished - or destroyed.

Bunnyland to join other fairy tales

Hugh Hefner's dream of bunnyland is in the twilight of its years.

The closing of the original Playboy Club in Chicago by Playboy Enterprises Inc. at the end of June marks a major decline in the popularity of the risque bunny.

But Hefner didn't relinquish his hold on his fantasy world without a battle.

Three franchised clubs in the United States, four in Japan and one in the Philippines still remind people of the days when rabbit fur was the hottest flesh on the market, but their business has declined since their heyday during the 1970s.

Once these clubs were the highlight of conventions because they provided a daring escape for men. Since more women are traveling in the corporate world, men let them choose the evening's place of entertainment; shapely waitresses in cotton-tailed costumes don't appeal to many women.

The New York club, soon to close along with the Los Angeles club, added "rabbit" waiters to attract women, but these male proteges alienated the male customers. Slowly but surely bunnies are becoming ar-

By no means am I lamenting the end. But I do think there is cause for concern.

"Playboy Clubs were built on the notion that women were objects and men were people," said feminist Gloria Steinem, a former bunny who wrote an expose about the business 20 years ago.

SUSAN D. BAIRD Collegian Columnist

For her, the club's closing is "a sign of pro-

While religious fundamentalists may view the fall of this institution as a signal of America's rejection of Hefner's immorality, it could just be the end of America's facination with Hefner's tame brand of exploita-

Ninety percent of a bunny's appeal was an aura that said, "Look, but don't touch." The Playboy Clubs' image as farm teams for Playboy centerfolds drew people who wondered how the women could serve drinks and not spill out of their costumes.

The clubs gave people the opportunity to escape their tedious work and live in a fantasy world where they could spend a night out with their favorite cottontail.

Now people pass up the clubs for health spas, singles bars and night clubs where women are not only visible but more easily accessible. No longer do people have to fantasize about what they can do on a night out.

Reality is at the neighborhood night club.

For those who desire to experience hardcore reality without any effort, red-light districts offer co-ed peep shows, strip tease acts, pornographic nickelodeons and multi X-rated movies. These tantalizing tidbits leave little, if anything, to the imagination.

Since the establishment of the Chicago club in 1960, America's appetite for the exploitation and demoralization of women has grown to mammoth proportions.

This country hasn't rejected Hefner's concept of the perfect woman, just his mild version. Americans now want their dishes sizzling hot and spicy.

The closing of these clubs shows how far afield America's perception of women and sexuality has gone. Once Hefner's vision of women as objects and sexual playthings was scandalous. Soon it will be a memory.

If America's perception of women has changed that much in two decades, think what the norm could be in 20 years.

Stephan asks task force to continue

TOPEKA - Attorney General Robert T. Stephan wants the Legislature to enact more of the recommendations of a task force on missing and exploited children, an aide told an interim study committee Wednesday.

"Attorney General Stephan has asked the task force to continue in its efforts, and we hope that the Legislature will consider ongoing developments," Julene Miller told the Special Committee on Judiciary at a Statehouse hearing.

The 1986 session approved 10 bills, encompassing 16 of the task force's recommendations, but did not have time to consider a number of others, she said.

Prime among items still pending, Miller said, is the need for creation of an adequately staffed and funded information clearing house through the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to identify those who abuse children sexually and to monitor their activities. The task force also suggests setting up programs to treat such people.

Changes also are needed to improve the state's ability to find runaways, provide them assistance and clarify law enforcement's role in dealing with them, she said. State law also needs to be tightened to deal with those who abduct children, Miller told the committee.

Existing kidnapping law is inadequate for purposes of charging those people who take children just to have children, because no ransom is involved ..." she said. One law enacted by the '86 session elevates the offense of interference with parental custody to a felony and this will help crack down on those who take children, she

The committee will study proposed bills the rest of the summer and fall, and make recommendations to the '87 session.

Police recruit teddy bears for duty

MORGAN HILL, Calif. - Criminals take note: Police here will soon have some new equipment in their arsenal - 50 cuddly teddy bears to help calm children in trouble and maybe even soften up some hard-core crooks.

'I don't particularly care for guns," Mayor Lorraine Barke said Wednesday. "I can see the bear as a very positive piece of equipment."

At her urging, the City Council gave preliminary approval earlier this week to acquiring 50 bears through donations, one for each city patrol car and a bunch extra to eplace those that are given away. Barke has tentatively dubbed the urban ursa "Officer Teddy," but says a contest will give Morgan Hill's 20,000 residents a chance to choose another name.

Police Lt. Leonard Long, whose bear-crazy wife, Sharon, proposed the idea to the mayor, said the stuffed toys will soothe children in trouble.

'We're looking at any kind of traumatic situation that a child might be involved in," said Long. "A prime example might be a child involved in a traffic accident or child removed from his home or her home, which happens frequently - any kind

"It's scary for a youngster to be confronted by a police officer, so this would be something like an icebreaker," said Long, who noted officers also plan to carry coloring books and crayons.

The mayor, who likes to wear a bear T-shirt while working at her plant nursery, said she thinks police might also give the stuffed animals to some of their tougher grown-up customers to soften them up.

'If it works, why not? We're all kids at heart," said Long. In Boulder, Colo., police use the bears exclusively for children. Community services Officer Jim Hendry says officers have been carrying the cuddly creatures for "The day before yesterday, they worked great on some lost Cambodian children," he said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "It's great to watch them get their hands on something to help them relax." Hendry says he's not sure the bears are cute enough to work their magic on real criminals, "but I'd say there's a good chance."

Pope receives rare model of statue

VATICAN CITY - Pope John Paul II received a rare miniature model of the Statue of Liberty on Wednesday from a committee which includes descendants of the artist who built the statue.

The plaster miniature, standing about 4.5 feet high and weighing 37.5 pounds, was flown to Rome from Paris Tuesday by the Bartholdi-Eiffel committee, Vatican

It was presented to the pope by three committee members during his weekly general audience in St. Peter's Square.

Cyril Viguier, president of the committee, told reporters that the miniature is one the 10 models signed by the artist, Frederic-Auguste Bartholdi, in 1875, the year the statue was proposed.

Eleven years later, the final statue was made in Paris, disassembled into smaller pieces and shipped to the New York harbor.

President Reagan recently received one of the models, Viguier said, adding that the rest are in Paris - at the Bartholdi Foundation and at the city hall.

Nuclear terrorism danger increasing

WASHINGTON - The world faces growing danger from terrorists who arm themselves with nuclear devices or who take over and threaten to sabotage atomic reactors, according to an international study released Wednesday.

"The probability of nuclear terrorism is increasing," although there has not yet been such an incident, said the report by the International Task Force on the Prevention of Nuclear Terrorism.

Releasing the report, Paul Leventhal, who served as executive vice chairman of the task force, told a news conference that the study was "not an anti-nuclear statement ... (and) not a pro-nuclear statement."

"The good news is that the probability of terrorists turning to nuclear forms of violence is low," Leventhal said. "The bad news is that it is increasing. There are a number of steps that should be taken to make the probability lower.'

Among the most glaring lapses in U.S. government security surrounding nuclear weapons, Leventhal said, were those aboard Navy ships, which "do not have any special self-protecting systems to prevent terrorists or other unauthorized persons if they gain access to them, from using them."

Phone company drops rate request

TOPEKA - The Kansas Corporation Commission Wednesday granted a request by United Telephone Co. of Kansas to withdraw its application for a $4.4 million rate

United Telephone applied for the increase Feb. 24, and technical hearings in the case had been scheduled for July 21-24. The KCC also had scheduled public hearings in Holton, Junction City and Dighton, but they are now canceled. United, with headquarters in Junction City, serves about 65,000 customers in 108

Its proposal would have increased the average basic monthly service charge to residential customers from $6.70 to $10.50 and for business customers from $10.68 to

The KCC staff had been doing its auditing work for three months in preparation for the technical hearings and had held discussions with company officials but had not yet made a recommendation to the commission on whether the increase should be granted, denied or denied in part, a spokesman said.

The spokesman said declining interest rates apparently was one factor which prompted United to withdraw its request for additional revenue. The request would have increased its revenues about 9 percent.

However, KCC Chairman Michael Lennen complimented the staff on its work on the case and said it was to the benefit of United customers that the case had been

As a practical matter, United would not be expected to file another application for several months, KCC officials said.

Farmers see reduction in wheat yield for '86

Francis Cedarberg unloads his combine of wheat into a truck during harvest Tuesday afternoon. Wheat yields have not been as high this year as last.

By STACEY NANNINGA Collegian Reporter

With Kansas wheat harvest being brought to a close in southwestern Kansas and farmers in the Manhattan area preparing to go full-swing by the end of the week, there are several problems showing up in this year's crop.

Ray Lamond, agronomist in the Division of Cooperative Extension, said the wheat is looking pretty good in places, but is looking rather poor in most areas of the state. Lamond cites the cause of this to the weather experienced in the region last fall.

"Due to the wet fall, many farmers in northeast Kansas had trouble getting the crop planted. When it finally did dry off, it was too late for the wheat to be planted," Lamond said. Farmers got some wheat planted in January during the warm spell, but this wheat is behind in maturation and is very susceptible to disease, he

Last year's total wheat yield for Kansas was 433 million bushels. The Kansas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service in Topeka expects this year's total to be about 300 million

This reduction in overall production can be blamed on several factors, Lamond said.

One factor is the weather. The wet fall led to a late planting of the winter wheat. The wheat didn't have a chance to get established before the cold temperatures of winter set in, and a lot of wheat was killed because of the cold temperatures. This lack of winter hardiness led to a thin crop, and weeds came in and took over. "The weeds and the poor stand convinced farmers to go in and tear up the wheat crop. The total acreage of wheat planted this year is down as a result. This too, contributed to the predicted decline in overall bushels harvested," Lamond said.

Stem and leaf rust have been found in certain varieties. Lamond said these diseases tend to cause shrinkage in the kernels, therefore reducing the test weight and the overall yield of the crop.

These diseases are not uncommon to Kansas wheat, but with the wheat condition already not very good, additional harm could prove to be fatal to the overall performance of the crop, Lamond said. The late maturation has also led to the increased risk of contracting the rust diseases and they can be seen in most wheat fields in northeast Kansas, he said.

Crew team works year-round for springtime rowing meets, regattas

By TRACY MAYHEW

Collegian Reporter

"Set it up. Way enough!" These commands might not mean anything to you, but to Amy Newton and other members of the K-State crew team, these words are everyday lingo.

Newton is a returning member from last year. Her position is the coxswain.

"My job is to steer the boat. In practice I instruct the rowers and tell them what they're doing wrong," Newton said.

Amy's tiny frame allows her to sit at the front of the boat and yell commands to the other team members.

"We really have to be aware of what's going on. We might not be using muscle, but we have to use our brain. If something goes wrong the coxswain usually gets the blame," Newton said.

The rowing team is made up of approximately 60 members. The water sport has a men's and a women's team, but there is usually a higher turnout of men.

Crew also has an executive committee.

The committee arranges all the meetings and helps make decisions for the entire Newton, secretary for crew, said, "Our main goal is to organize the team. We want everyone to have a say in regattas (team meets) and money matters.

The team is coached by Don Rose. He has organized several university crews including K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State. Rose, who is stereotyped as a perfectionist, pushes his members to do their best.

"Practices can be very intense," Newton said. "Once I was so mad, I pushed Coach Rose off the dock.'

K-State has fielded a team in the sport for 21 years and the team has been ranked on a national level during several of those years. "Don Rose also plays a major part in Kansas crews. He is one of the reasons why we've been successful," Newton said. Participating in crew takes a lot of dedication. Practice begins in the fall, when conditioning starts. Members jog, swim, lift restriction on age and no experience is required, Rose has recruited many high school students to participate. The crew team is having a Urgathon sometime this summer. KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Jorge Orta's oneout single in the bottom of the ninth propelled the Kansas City Royals to a 5-4 victory Wednesday night over the woebegone Oakland A's.

But it was a mental lapse by Oakland's Ricky Peters in the top of the ninth that everyone was talking about.

Peters was inserted as a pinch runner when Jerry Willard singled leading off the

"We caught a break, no question about it," Royals Manager Dick Howser said. "That is a strange, strange play.'

The A's, who had snapped a 15-game road losing streak the night before, seemed shocked by their loss. Manager Jackie Moore, who's been under fire as the A's slid out of contention, nervously paced back and forth in the visiting manager's office.

"We work and work to get back even, and we have a chance to win, and we blow it. I don't know what to say anymore," Moore lamented. "Maybe it's my fault."

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA - Steve Carlton, the only pitcher ever to win four Cy Young Awards, was given his unconditional release Phillies after struggling for two seasons with a shoulder injury and control problems.

"The Steve Carlton era has ended in Philadelphia," team President voice and tears on his cheeks. Several times during the news conference, Giles had to stop to regain his composure.

"The decision was mine," said

Giles said that Carlton, whose 318 victories are 10th in the majorleague all-time list and sixth in the National League, resisted to the end pleas to retire.

New cocaine image emerges as researchers review cases

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - The death of basketball star Len Bias highlights a new image of cocaine that has begun to emerge from case histories and autopsies: The euphoria-inducing powder is a random killer.

Within the past 18 months, researchers have started to recognize that even a single encounter with the drug can sometimes cause death by stopping the heart.

"There are still superb cardiologists who are surprised to find out that cocaine can cause a lethal cardiac event," said Dr. Jeffrey Isner of Tufts Medical School in Boston.

Isner is one of a small number of researchers who are studying the damaging influence of cocaine on the heart. Recently, he reported research on seven young people who were hospitalized or died suddenly because of heart disorders immediately after using cocaine.

Yet this complication remained obscure until the sudden death last week of Len Bias, the University of Maryland basketball star. Dr. John Smialek, the Maryland state medical examiner, ruled Tuesday that Bias died of cocaine that disrupted the electrical stimulation of his heart.

"The most likely explanation is that this man was extremely sensitive to cocaine, as some people are extremely sensitive to almost any drug," said Dr. Lester Grinspoon, a cocaine expert at Harvard Medical School. "It's not clear how rare this is, but it's not common."

However, Isner said heart damage from cocaine probably occurs far more often than is recognized, in part because doctors rarely ask heart patients about their illicit drug

Two effects of cocaine are certain: The drug makes the heart beat rapidly, and it raises blood pressure. This alone could explain how cocaine kills people whose hearts are already weakened by disease.

"It's like taking a person who has pre-existing heart disease and asking him to run a marathon," said Isner. It demands more work than the heart can perform.

Isner said cocaine also increases the body's adrenaline supply. This might overstress the heart's electrical system, causing it to beat wildly or stop entirely.

Large doses of cocaine can cause death by paralyzing the regions of the brain that control breathing and heart beat. Whether more ordinary doses can do the same thing in susceptible people isunclear. But Isner said that cocaine may interfere with the electrical signals that the brain sends to the heart to keep it beating smoothly.

When a heart attack occurs, a section of heart muscle dies. The usual cause is a blockage, such as a clot, in the arteries that feed that heart. However, some cocaine users have suffered heart attacks with no signs of clogged heart arteries. Isner speculates that cocaine may cause temporary spasms that squeeze off the flow of blood through these Another possibility, he said, is that cocaine sometimes causes myocarditis, an inflammation of the heart.

Magazine publishes reviews

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

Creating a magazine that would review literary work from all over the world and be distributed throughout the United States and Canada, was a dream that became a reality in 1982 for a K-State English instructor.

Gary Clift, editor of Literary Magazine Review, has designed the magazine with an original concept. Clift said his publication is the only one that gives an in-depth review of literary work.

"We print reviews that are 1,500 words, and the others are writing under 300 words, and people used to think they were lucky to get them," Clift said.

The magazine, which is funded through a $10 subscription rate, grants and donations, has a circulation of 500. Most copies go to institutions.

"Everybody in the Big Ten and Ivy League schools have access to the publication," Clift said. "Any place people are interested in poetry and short fiction, they have recourse to the directories.

The magazine, which is published quarterly, consists of reviews by writers of other literary publications.

"We always try to give magazines a reviewer who isn't prejudiced against certain types of writing," Clift said.

The reviews are edited by Clift and sent back to the writer, who OKs the correction and sends it back to Clift for publication. The reviewer receives $20 for each review appearing in the magazine.

Even though the publication is not funded through K-State, it acts as a learning tool for graduate students in the English program.

"It gives us a chance to see contemporary literature that we don't get to see in the classroom," said Karen Kaiser, an associate editor and graduate in English. "It shows us how literature is created. That is something that will never be taught, but something will grow

The publication is used as a teaching device in several universities. "I think it's necessary; there is no one else who looks at this kind of art as seriously as we do," said Grant Tracey, an associate editor of the magazine and graduate in English. Clift spends four to five hours a day on Literary Magazine Review. He said he is always thinking of new concepts and ideas for the next issue.

He is tentatively planning on a commercial magazine review issue for this fall, Clift said. Magazines to be reviewed would include publications such as Redbook, The New Yorker and Playboy.

The magazine is currently reviewing literary art that is not widely distributed and is read mostly by writers, he said.

"Sometimes the best writing doesn't have the widest reading,' Clift said four congressmen. He also planned to make two or three calls from Air Force One as he flew west, said Speakes.

In March, the House voted 222-210 against Reagan's plan. But the Senate approved it 53-47 a week later and returned the issue to the House, where Republicans scuttled another vote in what they termed a protest against efforts by Democrats to block the plan.

The House debate mirrored the controversy that has swirled around the Contras since the United States began providing covert aid to the various rebel groups five years ago.

Supporters said the Sandinistas are a danger to their Central American neighbors and eventually may even threaten the United States. Opponents contended the rebels are not a military match for the Sandinistas and have wasted much of the past U.S. aid.

Rep. Matt McHugh, D-N.Y, said, "It is fundamentally a mistake for the United States to provide military assistance to the Contras" because he said "the Contra military effort is not consistent with U.S. interests."

But Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., castigated unnamed "left-wing elements" who he said oppose Reagan's effort to help Central American democracies. He urged his colleagues: "Support this effort and make sure democracy can win throughout Central America."

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., told the legislators to read the Declaration of Independence to find reasons for assisting the freedom fighters.

City's transportation may include trolley

By STACEY DARRELL Collegian Reporter

Old-fashioned trolley cars complete with brass bells and light fixtures could be a common sight in Aggieville by next spring.

City Commissioner Gene Klingler said he hopes to have trolleys in Manhattan by spring 1987, but right now it's just at the stage of seeing if the project is economically feasible.

"I was at the League of Municipalities meeting in Seattle and there was a booth there about these trolley buses," Klingler

Kligler said he thought it was a fairly inexpensive form of public transportation that would work well in Manhattan.

The major source of financing for the trolley car would be through a fare system. Klingler said federal government funding would also be available. The type of trolley being considered would have advertising slots on the sides that could serve as another form of financial support.

"The main thing we want to stay away from is funding through general taxing," Klingler

The main purpose of the trolleys would be to aid the Manhattan public, Klingler said. Certain routes, possibly from Aggieville to downtown and Aggieville to Westloop, would form a city public transportation system.

"Through the trolley buses, we hope to create a Manhattan public transportation system and increase convention and tourism trade," he said. "We want the Manhattan public to be able to get where they want to go as easily and as inexpensive as possible.'

The trolley cars under consideration are from Ocala, Fla. The price range is from $85,000 to $100,000, depending on options selected. The 36-passenger trolleys run on diesel motors and have rubber tires. Plans now call for the purchase of two or three trolley cars.

"The vehicles we are looking at just have the basics - an intercom system, a heater, possibly advertising on the outside and one or two will be handicapped accessible," Klingler said.

Draft registration necessary

From Staff and Wire Reports

The acting director of the Selective Service System, in Topeka June 19, said that young men effectively "brand themselves" for life, and will be permanently ineligible for a number of federal programs, if they fail to register for the draft before

Wil Ebel, who became acting director of the federal agency in March, made the remarks to a news conference after Gov. John Carlin signed a proclamation declaring July "Registration Awareness Month" in Kansas.

Ebel said the federal draft registration system has reached an important milestone this year because men born in 1960, who were first required to register after the Selective Service was reactivated in 1980, will be turning 26 during 1986.

Because the Selective Service does not have authority to accept registrations from men after they turn 26, those who have failed to register by then have permanently forfeited their rights to certain federal student aid and job training benefits as well as to federal employment, Ebel said.

Many men born in 1960 who have failed to register after they turned 18 may be unaware that they will, in effect, be branded for the rest of their lives as a result of their actions, he

"We don't brand them. They brand themselves," Ebel said. "I find it pretty incredible that someone could go from age 18 to age 25 and not register without knowingly violating the law.'

James Upham, associate director of student financial assistance at K-State, said men who have not registered for the draft usually do not apply for federal aid at K-State.

Upham said he could not remember anyone applying for aid who had not signed the student financial aid statement. The statement notes whether the student has registered for the draft, and if he or she has not, the reason for ineligibility for registering. This signed statement is required by financial aid for processing the federal aid applica-

"I think the men who come to K-State are not reluctant to register for the draft," Upham said.

In addition to being ineligible for federal aid, employment, loans and job training, men who fail to register also may be subject to a fine of up to $250,000 and up to five years imprisonment, he said.

Of the men who were required to register for the draft this year, about 99 percent have complied nationally, compared to a compliance rate of 77 percent to 80 percent about five years ago, Ebel said.

He attributed the increase to linking registration to eligibility for federal programs as well as a change in philosophy toward the selective service. Ebel also praised Carlin's proclamation as a way to increase public knowledge of registration requirements.

"Proclamations of that kind are very important to use because we're in the public awareness business," Ebel said. "We want to make certain that every yong man between the ages of 18 and 25 knows the importance of selective service registra-

Ebel said that despite moves to end discrimination based on sex, it is not unfair that women are excluded from registration for compulsory

Citing a U.S. Supreme Court decision that upheld federal legislation requiring only men to register, Ebel said if a national emergency were declared and a draft was instituted, those inducted into the armed services would be bound for combat. He said military regulations currently exclude women from combat duty.

Ebel added that he believes the registration of women would be "highly unlikely" in the future.

Ebel was named acting director after President Reagan appointed the agency's former chief, Thomas K. Turnage, to head the Veterans Ad-

CUSTER BATTLEFIELD, Mont. Whites and Indians gathered by the Little Bighorn River on Wednesday and buried victims of the most famous battle of the Indian wars, 110 years after George Armstrong Custer and 210 troopers made their last stand Bones of 37 troopers of the U.S. 7th Cavalry were formally laid to rest at the Custer Battlefield National Monument, just a few hundred yards from the sun-baked ridge where the soldiers fought their final battle.

The ceremony in southeastern Montana was held at 4 p.m., the hour that historians estimate Custer and his men were wiped out by Sioux and Chevenne warriors after he attacked an Indian village.

The flag-draped casket with the remains was carried by an honor guard from the 1st Cavalry Regiment in a

Reagan says U.S. needs to reassess policy in S. Africa

By The Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. - President Reagan, in a shift of direction, has ordered a high-level reassessment of U.S. policy toward South Africa where the white-ruled government has imposed a state of emergency, an administration official says.

The review has been geared in part toward opening new avenues of communication to blacks and whites in South Africa, including "low-level" contacts with the outlawed African National Congress, said the official, talking late Saturday on condition he remain anonymous.

U.S. officials have made contact with members of the ANC, the Zambia-based group of black activists that is banned in South Africa, the aide said.

The official, who is participating in the study, ruled out the possibility that Reagan would impose any new economic sanctions as a result of the review, or that any specific action was imminent.

The primary goal is to encourage a dialogue between the minority white government and its black opposition.

"We are opposed to apartheid....We are also opposed to sanctions," the official said.

The official said the administration has no intention of abandoning its policy of "constructive engagement," a quiet-level diplomatic attempt to seek change in South Africa. But the review and its effort to contact black opposition groups marks a change of direction for the administration.

U.S. policy is being coordinated with the British government of Margaret Thatcher, who, like Reagan, is staunchly opposed to stiff economic sanctions. The United States and Great Britain are two nations who still "have clout" with South African president P.W. Botha, the official said.

The official also noted that the British have established contact with Oliver Tambo, head of the ANC.

The administration's policy review comes about two weeks after the Pretoria government imposed a state of emergency in an effort to quell violence that has left 1,600 people dead in protests against apartheid over the past two years.

Frustrated by events in South Africa and the administration's policies, the House earlier this month approved legislation requiring the total withdrawal of U.S. business interests from South Africa.

The House bill would require total U.S. disinvestment from South Africa within 180 days of enactment and impose a trade embargo against that country except for key minerals needed by the U.S. defense industry.

The official said Reagan had ordered the review prior to the House vote, and the president has expressed concern about the complex situation in the strategically vital African

The review, conducted by senior members of the State Department and the National Security Council, is to be completed within several weeks and then will go to Reagan, who gave a deadline for its submission, the official said. The aide refused to divulge that date.

The official said the review came about following a trip to South Africa of the so-called Eminent Person's Group, made up of representatives of Commonwealth nations.

The group, which spent six months studying the issue, said it saw little likelihood of a negotiated solution in South African.

Acker ends presidency, begins new job

By SHELLY WAKEMAN Staff Writer

The Duane Acker era has come to a close. Today concludes an 11-year stint as president of K-State for Acker, who will begin a new task with the U.S. Agency for International Development in Washington.

The former president will serve as director for Food and Agriculture within AID, with his main duties including responsibility for technology and science relating to foreign aid programs in agriculture.

Support research and service programs handled by U.S. universities and a series of research centers around the world are also to be under

Acker said he would use the faculty at K-State for counsel, calling it a "valuable resource."

There are about 13 research centers worldwide that AID supports, ranging from "a wheat and corn research center just outside of Mexico City; a potato research center in Peru; a rice center in the Philippines; a dry-land institute in Syria; and an animal disease center in Kenya," he said.

The U.S. provides 25 percent of the base budget for each of those research centers. Acker's office will also be responsible for monitoring that investment.

AID is involved in two different kinds of work with U.S. universities. First, AID deals with training and trouble shooting as well as research to back up specific problem areas.

'For example, when a problem occurs in grain storage and handling anywhere in the world, AID calls K-State - simply because we have the best people in that area," he said. U.S. agricultural commodities," he "AID has a contract with K-State and pays the salaries of a few staff members, and sends people from those countries here for training."

Secondly, the agency participates in programs of specific research projects "where there is a mutual benefit that can result," Acker said. "If we were developing varieties of grain sorghum and millet, there is some genetic material in India that would be useful in Kansas or Texas; there is some in Kansas or Texas that would be useful in India.

"The universities involved plus research centers in India have a collaborative research program. That is what the agency does to support the mission work in 50 to 60 countries around the world," Acker said.

Overall goals of the agency include "concern over the exportation of

State delegates divide on Contras issue

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Kansas Rep. Jim Slattery said Thursday that House approval of $100 million for anti-Sandinista rebels could scuttle Central American peace efforts, but Rep. Jan Meyers said the aid will increase pressure on Nicaragua to implement democratic reforms.

The Kansas delegation divided along party lines Wednesday night as "I don't expect the bottom to fall the House approved an administration-supported $100 million aid package for Contras fighting the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

The split was identical to previous votes this year on aid for the rebels known as Contras.

Republican Reps. Pat Roberts and Bob Whittaker, along with Meyers, an Overland Park Republican, votedin favor of the aid. Slattery and fellow Democratic Rep. Dan Glickman opposed the plan to provide $70 million in military assistance and $30 million in socalled humanitarian aid.

"Congress' action last night was a historic one and I believe one which we will look back on and regret," Slattery said in a statement.

"Handing the Contras $100 million to fight a war against a government with which we have diplomatic relations saddens and deeply concerns me. This vote will make it extremely difficult to achieve a regional peace agreement.

Meyers disagreed. "Without that (the $100 million) I think we would just see the military strength and thus the political strength of Nicaragua continue to grow," she said. The aid package cleared the House on a 221 to 209 vote late Wednesday, reversing a House vote in March against President Reagan's request for $100 million for the Nicaraguan

Minister views Central America 'firsthand'

By KAREN SCHULER Collegian Reporter

Central Americans are not trying to achieve a communist takeover by bringing in weapons from other countries; they are trying to defend themselves, said the Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities for Ecumenical Christian Ministries. Fallon, who recently spent two weeks in Central America with 11 other people, visited Honduras, Nicaragua and El Salvador.

"It was a very intense experience looking at all aspects of the situation: political, social, religious, military...," Fallon said.

The trip was organized by the Institute for Global Education Travel Seminar located at Augsburg College, Minneapolis, Minn.

Fallon said the purpose of the visit was to sort out conflicting stories concerning church and political views.

"I also wanted to see firsthand what life was like over there," he

"We visited with military officers, ambassadors, priests, students and families," he said. "We came back with the concern that our government and the American people are losing concern for peoples of the world."

Fallon said the U.S. government is tending to respond "out of unreal fear of communism and insurgence and out of our own need for economic security and power."

"Out of our fear," he said, "our government is carrying on immoral and illegal intervention to overthrow the Sandinista government."

In 1979, the Sandinista revolution freed the struggling people from the Somosa family. The Nicaraguans have a great deal of pride in the revolution they are having and resented the United States making an east/west communist issue out of it, Fallon said.

In Nicaragua, the group learned that 8,000 to 10,000 young men had been kidnapped by Contras and forced to fight their own people. The group heard the testimony of one young man who fled from the war fight his own people. Fallon said the mixed economy was very apparent in Nicaragua, an experiment in which democracy, communism and capitalism are all zone because he did not want to

There are problems primarily because 60 percent of the national income goes into the war and because of the efforts of the United States to overthrow the government, Fallon said.

"We're attacking farms and development areas. We're zapping their economy and their military,' Fallon said.

'The black market has developed and it's all being affected by the Contra war draining off their economy."

When Fallon spoke with the owner of a large ranch, who also serves as a member of the Sandinista assembly, he was told the government supports private ownership. Due to his Christian concerns, the rancher had given half of his land to the poor farmers. Fallon said this Christian feeling was prevalent in most places visited in Nicaragua.

The land owned by the campasinos (poor farmers) is theirs as long as they are productive, he said. They are required to produce basic crops such as beans, rice and corn, which the government buys at fair market value. The government then sells it in the cities at a lower cost. The Sandinista government also places a strong emphasis on literacy, as indicated by the fact that 90 percent of Nicaraguans can read. Fifteen-year-old boys

Pastor sees repression, fear

Collegian Reporter

During his recent tour of Central America, the Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities for Ecumenical Christian Ministries, found contrasts between the countries.

The situation was not as bad in Nicaragua as it was in El Salvador, Fallon said. "In Nicaragua it didn't feel like we were being watched; we felt free. In El Salvador we felt the repression and fear.'

Fallon said El Salvador is in a state of siege, with 50 percent of its economy going into the war, with poverty and chaos thus becoming prevalent. The Duarte government is becoming less popular and weaker in view of military control and power, he said.

"To deal with this unrest, repression has become heavier, is brutal and terroristic as well as unjust. We felt it was being done unrealistically out of fear of com-munist insurgency," Fallon said. "So people are killed, arrested and human rights are violated in the process of rooting out communism.

While in El Salvador, the group met with Maria Tula, a member of the Committee of the Mothers and Families of the Disappeared, De-Politically and tained Assassinated of El Salvador (Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero). Tula told them she had been arrested early in May and accused of being a member of the Committée of Mothers and a communist sympathizer. She was tortured, raped and released because she would not give them her identity.

People in El Salvador have just disappeared and then later they were found dead somewhere, Tula told Fallon. During the visit, she showed them pictures of family and friends who had been killed and mutilated.

About an hour after the group met with Tula, she was again arrested. When the group left to come back the United States, Tula had not yet been released.

In a state of siege anyone can be arrested without cause and held for eight days of interrogation without being represented, Fallon

The repression in El Salvador is aimed at human rights workers, churches - any organization that has base communities. Base communities are communities where people are taught nutrition, health and sanitation, he said.

At the University of El Salvador, the group met with a journalism student, but they had to talk in private and hide to avoid being seen. Because she was talking about life in El Salvador, the student was afraid of being arrested and later killed.

There is also repression in labor, Fallon said. One of the union leaders requested a visa from the U.S. Embassy to come to the country and visit a labor union meeting. The visa was refused, stating the reason as his communist leanings He told Fallon the letter was as good as a death sentence because he had been identified with the communists. Another woman, Luz Yaneth Alfaro Pena, was abducted and during her interrogation made accusations against the Catholic bishop and the Lutheran pastor.

She accused the two of being communist sympathizers and misusing church money to help the communists. Because of this, people are worried that the bishop or the pastor may disappear and later

The group returned after two weeks with strong impressions of the Central American situations.

'What really hit us was the absolute poverty, where the average income was 50 cents to 90 cents a day and children were dying of diarrhea and unsanitary conditions," Fallon said. "The repression and the lack of a just judicial system also struck us.

'We came back feeling we'd heard their stories and their cries and felt their pain and suffering and shared in that pain when we heard their stories of pain and suffering," he said. "One appeal to us was the matter of solidarity - to stand with these people in their pain and suffering. They want to be our friends and feel we're pushing them away."

The tour was organized by the Institute for Global Education Travel Seminar, Augsburg College, Minneapolis, Minn.

Board approves University request

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

TOPEKA - Despite some setbacks caused by Kansas Board of Regents member Norman Brandeberry, President Duane Acker managed to receive approval for funding requests of nearly $2.7 million for K-State program improvements at his last appearance before the Regents as president of the University Friday.

The delay in approval of the requests arose when Brandeberry, from Russell, moved the Regents approve the funding, but not the line items the funding had been designated for. Brandeberry said the motion was made because he "was not satisfied with the answers" given concerning K-State's proposed Educational Communications Center - part of the program improvement request.

Following considerable discussion, Brandeberry's motion failed and the line items as recommended by the Regents staff were approved.

If approved by the Legislature, K-State would be working with a $114.4 million budget for fiscal year 1988. Fiscal year 1988 begins July 1, 1987. More than $90 million would be allocated toward salaries and wages while $23.4 million would be used for Other Operating Expenses and utilities. A separate budget request of $10.3 million for FY 1988 was approved for the Veterinary Medical Center.

The Regents are requesting funding for an 8 percent increase in unclassified salaries and student

K-State's program improvements which will be written into the Regents Legislative budget request for FY 1988 consist of $1.5 million for the Educational Communications Center; $400,000 for library acquisitions and a catalog and periodical management system; $300,000 for equipment maintenance personnel; $280,000 to set up a degree-granting program in computer engineering; and $215,000 for research in farm management.

The request for the Educational Communications Center is the first of a four-year appropriation request, and will be used to acquire personnel and equipment to begin setup of the satellite communications facility, Acker said. The center is expected to be in operation after the third year of setup. If it receives legislative approval, the center will be fully funded by 1991.

The $400,000 funding for Farrell Library will be split 50-50 between acgisitions for the library and an online computer link connecting the various libraries of the Regents in-

Overall, the Regents will be requesting a funding increase of $45.98 million for the seven state-run institutions for the 1988 fiscal year.

The Legislature appropriated $479.6 million in General Use Funds for FY 1987 — which begins Tuesday. For the FY 1987 budget, the Regents had requested a $51.3 million increase in General Use Funds. The Legislature granted only a $16.6 million funding increase over the previous year's budget.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Regents, said there was a chance the new budget request, and the increased spending it represents. might pass through the Legislature unscathed.

The state of Kansas may be in a small group of states that might benefit from changes due to federal tax reform in the form of increased state tax revenue, Koplik said.

In other business, the Regents granted K-State the authority to accept as a gift the KAKE transmitter tower for KSDB, the student radio

Project unites 900 in global phone call

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Thirteen area residents participated in a global conference call of The Hunger Project Saturday at the home of Edith Stunkel, assistant director of the Center for Aging.

Jay Greenspan, conference call host, said approximately 900 people representing 19 countries in 11 time zones were united in the largest conference call in the history of the international organization.

"The purpose of the call is to come together as leaders of The Hunger Project around the world; to powerfully launch the 1986 Hunger Project Global Enrollment Campaign, the purpose of which is to irrevocably alter the conversation on the planet from 'ending hunger is desirable and possible' to 'ending hunger is achievable," Greenspan said.

Speaking from Africa, Joan Holmes, global executive director, said, "It's evermore clear, after my trip here, what a difference The Hunger Project makes. It's evermore clear that participants are the heart and soul of the organization."

She said 4.4 million people are currently enrolled in the organization with the campaign's goal being to boost the enrollment to more than 5 million by the end of September.

Greenspan conducted an international roll call. A representative of each country greeted the listeners and reported the number of people in attendance at each particular site.

Official hopes to end illegal keg parties

From staff and wire reports

Students may think twice before throwing any future keg parties, if John Lamb, director of the Kansas Alcoholic Beverage Control Division, has his way.

Lamb said he is hoping to crack down on illegal beer parties by initiating an administrative regulation to require the registration of beer

The reason for the crackdown, he said, is the staging of for-profit beer parties, a violation of state law. Being able to trace the kegs through the vendor to the purchaser could help law enforcers put a stop to it, he said.

The minimum legal age in Kansas for drinking 3.2 percent beer increases to 20 Tuesday, and to 21 on Lamb said he is having Richard Hodson, the division's attorney, study the best way to initiate a regulation, would be subject to review by the state Rules and Regulations Board and a legislative committee.

Lamb said retailers who sell the kegs are not breaking the law, but when law enforcement officers break up an illegal keg party and seize the kegs, nobody will admit where they came from or who purchased them.

Steve Brown, junior in finance and employee at Langton Liquor, 521 N. 12th St., said he appreciates the effort to go to the source of the pro-

"It's right that they should go right the heart of who's actually chased," Brown said. "The vendors have no way of knowing who's going to show up at one of these parties, and it's a little impractical for us to try and find out.'

Gordie Kaylor, vice president of B & B Distributors, Route 1, said the distributors do what they can to combat illegal distribution of beer to minors.

'We try to watch it when we hear that there is going to be a high school beer party where it's very likely that minors will be present," Kaylor said. 'We try to stay away from it."

Kaylor said the law regulations concerning the drinking age have harmed the sales of keg beer to retail outlets, but package sales are picking up. Because of this, Kaylor said distributing the beer once it's pur- he feels the regulation to register keg serial numbers won't prevent all illegal beer consumption.

> "I think to some extent, people will take other alternatives to get beer. If a student knows that kegs he's purchased can be traced to him, what's to stop him from buying cases of beer instead?" Kaylor said. "No method of prevention is 100 percent foolproof; therefore, the responsibility lies with all of us."

> Those found guilty of providing beer illegally could be charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor, selling liquor without a license, sale to minors and perhaps running an open saloon, Lamb said.

> Selling or providing beer to a minor can result in a maximum fine of $1,000, a maximum six-month jail term, or both, Hodson said. Selling liquor without a license could result in a potential fine of up to $500 on first offense, $1,000 for second offenders and a maximum six-month jail term.

> If charged with running an open saloon, the offender could face either a potential $500 fine, six months in jail or both, Hodson said.

Offenders found guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, a class A misdemeanor, that offender could spend up to one year in jail, pay up to a $2,500 fine, or both,

Laws clarify fencing for livestock owners

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Even a good fence won't keep all livestock from getting out, and, with that in mind, state legislators have passed a bill relieving livestock owners from certain liability burdens.

As of Tuesday, negligence must be proven before livestock owners are liable for damage done by wayward animals.

Liability changes are only one aspect of the new bill which gives livestock owners a clearer picture of what's right and wrong in livestock fencing.

The new fence laws have removed some ambiguity, said Manhattan attorney Sam Brownback, who has spent the past two years lobbying for fence law changes.

Under the new legislation, ordinary negligence must be proven before any action can be sanctioned against ranchers. Livestock owners will no longer be blanketed with strict liability without proof of fault when problems arise involving their wayward herds.

In addition, standards for legal fences were affected by the legislative changes. Three-wire fences are currently considered legal fences, and electric fences are now also legitimate - unless local officials request otherwise.

The bill gives county commissioners final jurisdiction over local specifics. For example, some counties may decide only four-wire fences are legal, and rescind or alter the decision on electric fences.

Brownback said he has been working toward this kind of legislation for the past few years.

He said fence and livestock laws have been continually enacted since Kansas' early statehood, but old laws were never repealed. Consequently, legislative action concerning damage by unrestrained livestock had become increasingly more ambiguous.

"The main thrust (of the new legislation) was to clean up old, antiquated laws which needed to be removed," Brownback said.

Performer sings of childhood

By DENISE URBANEK Collegian Reporter

Wearing blue jeans and a K-State sweatshirt, country music singer Helen Cornelius entertained a crowd of more than 2,500 people Friday night in City Park.

Cornelius and her band, Southern Spirit, performed a variety of country, pop and gospel music including "The Rose," "Rocky Top" and "Missouri," a song about her life growing up on a farm near Hannibal, Mo. She delighted the Arts in the Park audience by calling several children from the crowd onstage to sing "He's Got The Whole World In His Hands."

The stop in Manhattan was part of a brief tour which included a performance in Dallas Saturday night with entertainer Steve Warner. "We're on tour year-round," Cornelius said. "We don't tour like a rock band. They plan one or two (tours) a year and go out solid for two months without a day off. We go out for Friday, Saturday and Sunday and go back home Monday through

Home for Cornelius and her roadmanager, husband Jerry Garren, is the Nashville, Tenn., suburb of Brentwood. When they're not on the road, they spend time with their teen-age son and daughter.

Cornelius has written more than 500 songs during her career, many of which have been recorded by other artists such as Lynn Anderson, Barbara Fairchild, Reba McEntire and The Oak Ridge Boys.

"I've tried many times to go back and write songs about my childhood. But we were very, very poor, and for awhile after I first left that I couldn't seem to write about it," Cornelius said. "But now I look back on it with such warmth and nostalgia and I want to write about it.'

Most of her songs, however, are not about her at all, Cornelius said. Rather, they focus on friendship, life on the farm and other important aspects of her life.

"I think that when you write, you're writing about yourself more than you realize," Cornelius said. "That's because if you're going to say something about emotions in that song, you're naturally going to say how you feel. You're really giving away your inner self, even if that particular incident has never happened to you."

Cornelius began singing as a child with her two older sisters. Known as the Johnson Sisters, they entertained friends and neighbors at church and in school. After graduating from high school at the age of 17, Cornelius married and began pursuing a professional music career.

Making it in the music business involves willpower and pure guts, the singer said. An aspiring singer must start at the local level - learning stage presence, developing a rapport with the audience and perfecting the voice, she said.

"I used to listen to the radio and try to see how many bars were in each song. I listened to the cliches and the way they twisted the words and meanings," Cornelius said.

"I think if you want to be in this business," she said, "you need to treat it as a business and you need to treat it as an art."

Taxpayers should 'wait and see'

Despite the Senate's recent "lopsided approval" of their tax reform bill, the nation's tax-payers should avoid rushing decisions — because things are not over yet.

Finance Committee chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., has said, "This is a moment of pride for the Senate, a victory for America." But his House counterpart, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., has said, "They (Senate Republicans) have the high road. Now we'd like to let people know that our bill is better for the middle class."

Both versions now go to a joint House-Senate conference committee for a compromise final version. An example of the difference is that a taxpayer earning $30,000 to $40,000 per year would receive a 9 percent cut in the House version as compared to a 5 percent reduction under the Senate bill.

One aspect of the Senate bill favoring the middle-class sector is that some wealthier investors and profitable companies currently benefiting from legal deductions will become taxpayers for the first time in years.

While IRAs and other tax shelters could also be affected, it may be wise to wait until the final version is presented to the president for the last signature. Perhaps Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., summed it up best when she called the legislation "an important step toward real tax reform."

Harassment ruling gives recourse

On June 19, more than 20 years after passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision that said on-the-job sexual harassment is discriminatory and illegal.

The ruling has taken far too long to become a reality. On the other hand, sexual harassment has been far too long dismissed from being reality.

For years, many women have been subjected to the whims of their employers. If a woman seeking a career wanted to win a promotion, she, in some cases, was forced to put up with harassment. If a woman wanted to keep her job and know a feeling resembling job security, she was forced to put up with harassment. In essence, the woman had to sacrifice her dignity to get keep the job she needed. Many women have not faced these conditions, but far too many have.

In its decision, the Supreme Court also said employers could not always escape legal liability even if they did not know, and could not have known, about the sexual harassment.

The decision will not stop harassment but will bring about a means of recourse for those who are emotionally or financially victimized.

Violence destroys abortion debate

A funny thing happened in Denver the second week in June. The National Organization for Women and the National Right to Life Committee both held their annual meetings there meetings there.

Big deal, right? Denver's a big city, with a lot of room, and the two groups probably won't even see each other, right?

Wrong.

Let's just say the two groups don't mix well. NOW supports a woman's choice to have an abortion, but the NRLC doesn't see things that way. Both groups asked their members to avoid incident during the conventions but, people being people, things didn't work out that way.

Friday, 21 anti-abortionists were arrested outside a Planned Parenthood clinic after trying to block the entrance. The next day police nabbed three more for trying to disrupt a NOW parade at the close of their meeting.

If it sounds like I'm picking on the NRLC for being civilly disobedient, I apologize. I don't like abortion myself, and I find it a bit unsettling when a Wichita doctor, who guesses he's performed between 17,000 and 18,000 abortions, says he's proud of the work he does

MICHAEL LELAND Guest Columnist

But I also find it unsettling to read how some anti-abortionists feel they have to make their point known to all. You see, blocking a clinic doorway, or disrupting a parade pales in comparison to blowing the side out of an abortion clinic.

The June 9 bombing of a Wichita clinic was the 44th such bombing in this country since 1982. Some may call that making a point. Others call it terrorism.

NRLC president, John Willke, says the violence occurs not because of the people outside the clinic, but because of those inside. Oh, sure, John. That explanation will hold a lot of water in court if the bombers are caught.

It's quite possible the bombings weren't intended to cause anybody physical harm, as most were done at night. On the other hand, when those like the Rev. R.L. Hymers in Los Angeles ask their congregations to pray for the death of retired Supreme Court chief justice William Brennan, who supports the pro-choice movement, I think it's only a matter of time before some nutcake puts two and two together and decides a bigger point might be made by bombing during business

There are, however, better ways to get a point across than making McNuggets out of an abortion clinic. As my father used to say, "Come on guys, someone's going to get hurt."

KSDB disappointing

Editor

The June 24 issue of The Collegian had a report on the campus radio station KSDB. While the changes mentioned in the report are perhaps desirable, their consequences have caused considerable disappointment to some of us.

Since the end of the spring semester, KSDB has discontinued broadcasting National Public Radio's "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered." These programs provide a comprehensive coverage of international events that we do not get from local radio stations. I called KSDB regarding this and got the explanation that because of all the "improvements" they can no longer afford to have NPR's programs.

It is a shame that a university radio station has decided to drop highly informative and educational programs in favor of more advanced noise. The nearest radio station that carries NPR programs is 92 FM, the radio station on the University of Kansas campus.

This station cannot be picked up very clearly in Manhattan as it is and with the change in KSDB's broadcasting frequency to 91.9 FM we can be sure that it will become impossible.

Under these circumstances, the "improvements" that the report described can only serve to deprive Manhattan residents of some of the best news coverage available anywhere in the country.

B. Ramachandran, Manhattan resident

Libya reports recovery of airman's body

LONDON — Libya Radio, in a report monitored in London, said Sunday night that the body of a second American airman has washed ashore near Benghazi.

The broadcast quoted the Libyan news agency Jana as saying the body was that of the pilot of a warplane shot down by Libyan anti-aircraft fire during "the barbaric American-NATO aggression" on April 15 when U.S. jets attacked Tripoli, the capital, and Benghazi.

The brief report noted the body of an American pilot had been found on May 6 on the beach near the city of al—Zawiyah, 32 miles west of Tripoli.

An Air Force F-111 was lost during the raids that the Reagan administration said were in retaliation for Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi's support of international terrorism.

The U.S. Defense Department identified the missing American airmen as Capt. Fernando L. Ribas-Dominicci, 33, of Utuado, Puerto Rico, and Capt. Paul L. Lorence, 31, of San Francisco.

On May 7, Libyan television showed the corpse found at al-Zawiyah, which was clothed in a flight suit. The television report said that a helmet with the name Lorence printed on it was found near the body.

Western witnesses in Tripoli had reported seeing an F-111 crashing into the sea soon after being hit, apparently by a SAM-5 missile, during the raid on Tripoli.

Crime hits one in four households in 1985

WASHINGTON — One in every four American households was touched by a crime in 1985, but a sharp drop in personal theft kept the proportion of crime-affected households at the lowest level in a decade, the Justice Department reported Sunday.

The department's Bureau of Justice Statistics said that some 600,000 fewer households were hit by crime last year than in 1984. In 1985, nearly 22.2 million households experienced a crime, compared to 22.8 million the previous year. The total has been declining since 1982, when nearly 25 million households were affected.

Households with high incomes and those in urban areas were more vulnerable to crime in 1985, as were black households. Crime affected 26 percent of black households, 29 percent of households with incomes of more than $25,000 and 30 percent of urban households.

One in 13 households was burglarized in 1985 or had a member who was the victim of a rape, robbery or assault committed by a stranger, a category the government agency labeled "high-concern crimes."

The survey, however, is not a measure of the amount of crime occurring in the nation. A household is counted only once, no matter how many times it may be victimized by crime

A household is considered touched by crime if it had a burglary, auto theft or household theft, or if a household member was raped, robbed, assaulted or was a victim of personal theft.

Carbon monoxide fumes knock out diners

ELMSFORD, N.Y. — A malfunctioning water heater spewed carbon monoxide fumes through a crowded seaside restaurant, overcoming 80 late-night diners, authorities said Sunday.

Several people were knocked out by the gas Saturday night at Antun's of Westchester, said police Officer George Coffey.

Eighty people were treated at the scene for varying degrees of carbon monoxide poisoning, including vomiting, lightheadedness and ringing in the ears, he said. Sixty-six were taken to hospitals for treatment, and 19 were admitted, but none was hurt seriously, he said.

The fumes came from a water heater off the main dining area and were sucked into the air conditioning system, said John Antun, the restaurant's owner. He said the restaurant will reopen Tuesday.

Helms' protege commits suicide, police say

GREENVILLE, N.C. — U.S. Sen. John East, an academic and ardent advocate of conservative causes who had planned to retire after one term because of illness, was found dead at his home Sunday, an apparent suicide, police said found dead at his home Sunday, an apparent suicide, police said.

East, 55, a Republican and protege of North Carolina's senior senator, Jesse Helms, was found by an aide in the garage of his home shortly after 8 a.m., said a police statement.

Dr. Lawrence Harris, who conducted an autopsy, said East died of asphyxiation by carbon monxiode.

"The manner of death has all the appearance of suicide, based on the autopsy and the scene," he said.

"A note was found at the scene, the contents of which are considered a personal communication between Senator East and his family," said the police statement.

communication between Senator East and his family," said the police statement.

East's health had been poor in the months before his announcement. The senator, confined to a wheelchair because of polio when he was 24, was hospitalized early in 1985 for hypothyroidism. He also was hospitalized for treatment of a low white blood cell count and a urinary track blockage, and missed much of the Senate's work last year.

About 500 join march to protest apartheid

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — About 500 people of all races carried banners and chanted "Free South Africa" Saturday during a mile-long march to protest the South African government's policy of racial segregation.

Nomazizi Sokudela, a South African, received a key to the city during the rally, which was organized by the Kansas City Anti-Apartheid Network and about 15 local and state religious, union and civil rights groups.

Sokudela, who lives in exile in New York, is a member of the African National Congress, the leading anti-apartheid organization.

She said the rally sends "a signal to the Reagan administration that people here are not prepared to stand by while the apartheid regime continues repressing the people of South Africa."

Several students from the University of Missouri-Columbia said they joined the march to protest apartheid and the university's investments in companies doing business in South Africa.

Board awards loans to farmers, businesses

TOPEKA — The Pooled Money Investment Board has approved $14.9 million in low interest loans to small businesses and farmers in Kansas, Treasurer Joan Finney announced Friday.

The loans, at 7.9 percent interest, went to 286 farmers and 67 small businesses.

The farmers received $10.63 million and the businesses $4.28 million, she said.

The Pooled Money Investment Board, of which Finney is chairwoman, began a program of making idle state funds available to banks to loan to farmers last year and later expanded it to include financially-troubled small businesses.

Quality of Life bond to add recreation facilities if passed

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

During the Aug. 5 primary election, Manhattan residents will have a chance to vote on a $2.8 million "Quality of Life" bond issue.

Kent Glasscock, co-chairperson for "Citizens for Quality of Life," believes the bond issue - if passed will fulfill "the cultural and recreational needs of the city."

Passage of the bond issue will lead to the renovation and construction of six parks and recreation projects.

The first would be to establish an outdoor recreation/sports complex south of Anderson Avenue at a cost of $770,000. The complex would include seven soccer/football fields, picnic tables, restroom facilities, and a softball four-plex.

John Strickler, committee member, said 45 to 50 softball teams must be turned away presently due to lack of facilities. He said this and the increasing popularity of youth soccer are creating a need for more

The second point would be a renovation of the Northview Pool. An expansion of the deck space and bathhouse and the addition of a wading/training pool and concession stand will cost $350,000.

This would be in conjunction with the construction of a pool in CiCo Park, at Wreath and Kimball avenues. The 25-meter pool would include all standard facilities and would increase swimming, diving and other instructional programs at a cost of $695,000.

would be the fourth project. Included in the planned $200,000 renovation will be the addition of an air conditioner, replacement of the ceiling in the auditorium, the creation of a gymnastic area, and the construction of an entrance to make the building handicapped accessible. Strickler said the renovation will improve space and will allow the house to expand community and recreational activities, without the cost of building a new structure.

The construction of a new animal shelter off Sunset Zoo property is the fifth project. At present there is no site for the proposed $125,000 facility. However, Strickler said plans were to have the new building large enough to accommodate more dogs and make room for cats if a possible ordinance is passed

The last point, although not the most expensive, may be the most ambitious. It calls for the development of a Linear Park running from Casement Road, along the levee of the Kansas River swinging along the southern edge of Manhattan, up to CiCo Park. The cost would be Manhattan has traditionally done little to accommodate pedestrians and bicycles, Strickler said. He believes the park would be both a recreation and transportation link between the two ends of the city and would accommodate a public that is presently ignored.

Glasscock said the committee's campaign has an emphasis on public awareness and education. He likes to stress the grassroots idea and volunteer attitudes.

"By August 5, literally hundreds would have given their time and effort," he said. "You cannot get this type of volunteerism by armtwisting."

Lindamood said they are hoping for a good voter turnout. Average turnout for an August primary is about 22 percent.

Deadline to register for the August primary is July 15. Anyone wishing to vote by absentee ballot must do so in the Riley County Clerk's office. Absentee voting begins two weeks before the Aug. 5 election. It is a straight bond issue and may be voted on separate from the primary.

Glasscock said there was considerable discussion on whether to vote on each point of the bond issue separately. However, he said it was decided the goal was to improve the overall quality of life in Manhattan as a community and it would be a mistake to break the community into constituencies.

Lindamood added the most economic way to sell the bonds were as a whole and not separate. While most people are not for everything in the bond issue, she said she believes most people will vote "yes" because it is for the community.

"This is the thing that is right for Manhattan right now," Glasscock

"I thought about it before the game, and I looked at Saberhagen's won-loss record (4-8 before the game), and his ERA (3.46)," said Anderson, who allowed just one run and five hits in the first seven innings of Minnesota's 9-4 victory before tiring in the

with him I guess. It looked as if he was throwing well, but we just jumped on him early, Anderson said.

Saberhagen, who has struggled with two wins in his last nine decisions, was at a loss to explain his poor performance so far.

"I feel like I'm throwing as well as last year, but the stats don't show it," he said. "My curve ball is a little better than last year, my fastball is the same, and my change-up probably isn't quite as Saberhagen allowed eight runs and six hits in one-plus innings.

"I've had every kind of game imaginable. I've won 1-0, lost 1-0, I've gotten a lot of runs early and lost, and I've gotten runs late and won. I don't know what to expect each time out."

Roy Smalley seemed to know hat to expect when he hit a three-run homer off a changeup in the first

"Saberhagen threw him nothing but changeups last week (in Kansas City)," Twins Manager Ray Miller said. "He went up there looking for one and hit it out."

Minnesota's five-run first was keyed by Roy Smalley's 406-foot shot to right field. Leadoff man Kirby Puckett was hit by Saberhagen's first pitch of the game and Tom Brunansky singled with two outs to set up Smalley's 13th homer of the season.

Argentina takes World Cup

By The Associated Press

MEXICO CITY - Jorge Burruchaga revived sagging Argentina with a goal just six minutes from the end of regulation Sunday and lifted his team to its second World Cup championship in eight years with a 3-2 victory over West Germany.

Argentina took a 2-0 lead on goals by defender Jose Brown and forward Jorge Valdano. But Karl-Heinz Rummenigge and Rudi Voeller connected eight minutes apart late in the second half to tie it.

Argentine star Diego Maradona and beat charging goalkeeper Harald Schumacher from 10 yards Maradona also helped set up

Burruchaga then sneaked behind

Argentina's victory kept alive South America's impressive streak of championships when the tournament has been played in the Western Hemisphere. West Germany, which won the World Cup in 1954 and 1974, was seeking to become the first European team to win a world title in Latin America.

The Argentines were in total control of the game until West Germany, pushing all 10 men up into attack, struck for its two goals to tie it.

But Burruchaga, who has been one of the main supporting players to Maradona in Argentina's cast, broke through for the clincher.

out," Duncan said. "The new budget dedicates money to the balances. It's an austere budget with a surplus built in. And with the sales tax, we're in pretty good shape. This shortfall just means that instead of getting fiscally healthy in one year, it will be a two-year process.'

The issue is close to Shields and Duncan because both are members of the consensus revenue estimating group which projects the amount of income lawmakers will have each year from taxes to support state government.

That six-member panel of university economists and state budget analysts has come under fire from some Republicans for missing the mark in recent years. Since November 1985, the panel has reduced by $187 million its income projections for FY86, which ends today, and FY87, which begins Tuesday.

In November 1984, the estimators convened and predicted total income of $1.611 billion from all state taxes in the 1986 fiscal year. The estimators reviewed their projection in March in economic assistance to four Cen-

However, the state tax on individual income performed poorly in FY86, falling far short of expecta-

In November 1985, the group met and slashed by $55.1 million its forecast of income from state taxes for the 1986 fiscal year, dropping the total to $1.556 billion.

The erosion continued through the winter and in March 1986, the group again lowered its projections for the remaining three months of the year by cutting another $9.5 million, leaving the projection at $1.547 billion.

That cut was not deep enough, however, and an additional $25 million shortfall is expected when the year-end report is written.

"I'd say that's accurate from my perspective," Duncan said. "That's the ballpark I'd use. June has gone just about as I'd expected - more of the same."

That's a total $90 million shortfall, dating to November 1985, and represents about 5.6 percent of the entire general fund collections.

Normally, such mathematics would send shockwaves through the bureaucracy as it did in July 1982 when revenue fell $47 million short. However, Duncan and Shields are

In addition, she said that continued their minds.

"I think people have become very concerned about the strategic importance of Nicaragua," said Meyers, pointing to its proximity to the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean.

volunteer to go out to farms to teach because they are proud of what they have learned and they want to help, he said.

The communities in Nicaragua are working on a new constitution. Fallon and his group were there the day teachers were discussing the new constitution with the assembly.

The teachers wanted to know how God would be represented in the constitution, saying they wanted a God of the people and the community and not an all powerful God.

The teachers also wanted to form a geographic assembly with representatives from all walks of life so there would be more input, with the geographic assembly passing recommendations on to the assembly.

'There was a feeling that not only religious freedom, but the church, had a large influence on their lives,' Fallon said. "I feel the revolution came from the Christian church the people and priests began to see the gospel in a different way, as an option for the poor. Christianity is working in the community to bring better health, food - the betterment of the community.

"They're Christian and don't want totality - either communist or U.S. Their basic goal is to find peace with justice and want a chance to do that themselves," he said.

Comedian's performance to aid Vietnam memorial

By The Collegian Staff

When comedian David Naster returns to Manhattan tonight for a performance, his show will be anything but serious.

"Come and let your hair down and have a good time because I'm not doing any serious stuff," Naster said.

But Naster, who will be performing at Bushwacker's, 531 N. Manhattan Ave., for tonight's Comedy Invasion, knows the underlying reason behind the performance is serious. The 9 p.m. show will benefit the Kansas Vietnam Memorial, scheduled to begin construction Friday in Junction City.

Naster said he was at a show not to long ago where there were some guys in the audience giving him a hard time. The comedian, all in fun, returned the favor. After the show, Naster got to talking to them and found out they were veterans. They started talking about the memorial that was

> "I knew that they needed money, so I thought I would help out," he said.

which quickly got Naster's atten-

Naster, who recently was honored as the most popular collegiate comedian by Variety Magazine, said $1 out of every $3 admisssion will go to the memorial.

"I haven't done a show in Manhattan for awhile, and I'm looking forward to tonight's show," he said. "It will be the David Naster first-time-ever-inshorts performance."

Taxes, seatbelts lead law changes

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - For Kansas taxpayers, motorists and medical malpractice victims, Tuesday, July 1, will seem more like a Friday the 13th thanks to the work of the 1986 Kansas Legislature.

The flipping of the calendar from June to July on Tuesday will trigger a number of changes including:

- Requiring Kansans to pay an extra penny tax for every dollar spent shopping. Forcing motorists to wear their seat belts when driving in - Restricting the amount of money citizens can collect for injuries suffered at the hands of negligent doctors.

In addition, Kansans' will find it easier to get people committed to mental hospitals against their will on Tuesday. Drivers' licenses will be more expensive and criminals convicted of sex crimes against children will face more harsh punishment.

The reason for all the changes is simple: July 1 is the first day of the 1987 fiscal year and traditionally is the day when most new state laws take effect.

Not all the changes are expensive, restrictive or possibly explanations of some of the more important new laws to take effect 50 cents to $2. Tuesday:

By TOM SCHULTES Editor

For three families in Japan, World War II is finally over.

More than 40 years after burial, the first of three wooden coffins containing the remains of three prisoners of war was opened at the Fort Riley Cemetery at about 1:45 p.m. Monday.

The bodies were being exhumed so the remains could be cremated, and the ashes returned to their families and homeland.

Representing the Japanese government at private, graveside services were Hideo Numata, consul general of Japan, headquartered in Kansas City, Mo., and Col. Yoshimasa Miyamoto of the Ground Self-Defense Forces.

Miyamoto is currently the resident Japanese liaison officer at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth. Representing Fort Riley was Col. E.A. Lassiter, Judge Advocate of Fort Riley.

According to a prepared statement from the consulate in Kansas City, the three crew members of the submarine Ro 61 were captured during the war, were interned in a POW camp in Colorado, and later died in a Denver hospital on Oct. 29, 1944. They were buried at Fort Riley on Jan. 23, 1946.

The three were identified as Warrant Officer Saburo Nakagawa, Chief Gunner's Mate Kazunori

Numata said "we don't know the details" when asked how, and when, the trio was captured. He said all of the deceased were from the western part of Japan, but tracing their families had taken 23 years because the names were as common as Jones or Smith in the United States.

"As far as I know," Numata said, "there are no other Japanese (POW) graves in the U.S.

The graves were first discovered by a member of the Self-Defense Forces of Japan around 1963. Utilizing the services and records of the U.S. Department of the Army and the Japanese Ministry of Health and Welfare, authorities were able to locate family members.

Lt. Haire, chief of media and community relations at Fort Riley said flowers had been placed at the grave of Nakagawa by unknown donors last Memorial Day. Wreaths placed by the consul general also decorated the three graves. Haire said normal practice would be to destroy the headstones, but if requested, arrangements may be possible for them to also be turned over to the Japanese government. He also said the grave sites would not be used

The three sailors were originally buried at Camp Carson, Colo., but the remains were transferred in 1946 to Fort Riley as part of a U.S. Army consolidation program for the remains of POWs.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa The nation's largest black labor federation warned Monday that the detention of its president could provoke spontaneous protest strikes across South Africa.

In other developments:

The government said eight more blacks were killed in unrest, raising the toll to 93 since the government declared a national state of emergency June 12. Three victims died in clashes Sunday between militants and supporters of moderate black Zulu leader Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi in Soweto, Johannesburg's huge black township.

Two bombs exploded before dawn on a pedestrian bridge over a freeway near Durban, bursting water pipes but hurting no one, the Bureau for Information said. It was the ninth bombing since the emergency.

The government ordered the deportation of West German television correspondent Heinrich Buettgen, the fourth foreign journalist told to leave during the emergency.

The Congress of South Africa Trade Unions, which claims about 500,000 members, said the detention of its president Friday night was "further proof of a direct and concerted assault on trade union freedom in South Africa."

The federation noted that thousands of workers already had staged wildcat strikes at about 100 chain-store branches during the emergency to protest the seizure of union officials and shop stewards. The arrest without charge of the union chief "could spark widespread

Vietnam topic of memorial

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

On July 4, 1985, the citizens of Junction City dedicated a maple tree as a living memorial to Americans who served in Southeast Asia from 1950 to 1975. On that day, three men were inspired. Three men had a dream. They formed a fund drive called Kansas Operation Memorial. Their goal: to raise $50,000 for a state memorial dedicated to all Kansans who served and died in the Vietnam War.

On Friday, the dream will become a reality in the form of the Kansas Vietnam Memorial.

A ground-breaking ceremony for the memorial is scheduled to take place at 1:30 p.m. Friday in the park at Sixth and Washington streets in Junction City.

The three men behind the monument are Jim Atkins, Orville Nelson and Chip Mathes. They had special interest in the project because Atkins and Nelson are Vietnam veterans, and Mathes had an uncle who died in Vietnam.

Junction City donated the land for the memorial and manages the trust fund in which all donations are tax-deductible. Atkins is director of the board of trustees for the fund. Nelson is the treasurer, and Mathes handles public relations.

"The names of 707 men who died in Vietnam will be engraved on the front and back of the memorial,' Mathes said. "This includes men from the National Guard."

Mathes said the names are from the home state of record, which is not necessarily the state of birth.

Those who died from Jan. 1, 1961, to March 31, 1973, will be included.

The names of 38 Kansans still listed as missing-in-action will be engraved in the center of the memorial. A Vietnam Campaign ribbon and a Purple Heart will be engraved above the MIAs, Mathes said.

The memorial will have a 2-foot high limestone and concrete base. The black granite stone will be 26 feet long and 8 feet high. The names, engraved in white, will be 1 inch high. Two soldiers, one black and one white, will be engraved in gold lythochrome, Mathes said.

"A poem from the book 'Dear America: Letters Home From Vietnam' will be engraved on the base (of the memorial). We think

Mandatory seatbelt law now in effect

By AMY TAYLOR Collegian Reporter

Putting on a seatbelt is now the law instead of just another option for the drivers in Kansas.

The mandatory seatbelt law goes into effect today, requiring all drivers and front seat passengers to wear seatbelts, unless exempted by doctor's orders.

"A driver will be ticketed for not wearing his or her seatbelt only if they have been stopped for another offense," said Sgt. Robert Brown of . the Kansas Highway Patrol in Salina. "The emphasis of the law is to try and get people into the habit of wearing their seatbelt. Some people who do not wear their seatbelts will have to be convinced, and hopefully this law can convince them to wear

The law applies to all motor vehicles driven on all Kansas roads, including those which aren't paved, said Sherry Blair, media coordinator for the Kansas Safety Belt Project. "All vehicles are included, except for those made before 1966, when seatbelts were not mandatory equipment in cars," Blair said. "So those people who removed their seatbelts from their cars will have to have them replaced to be in compliance with the law."

Kansas is the 25th state to pass a mandatory seatbelt law. In the other states where it has been in effect for a year or more it has been successful in lowering the traffic deaths and injuries, according to the Kansas Coalition for Safety Belts.

With an 80 percent compliance with the law, 85 lives can be saved a year, and 3,100 injuries can be avoided, saving an estimated $55 million in insurance and medical costs," Blair said.

"But the law shouldn't be the only reason for people to wear their seatbelts, health and safety should be the main reasons.

"If a law saves one life, then it is a good law," Blair said. Most of the traffic fatalities occur within 25 miles of the driver's home, another reason why people should buckle up even when they are going a short distance, Blair said.

"If I hadn't been wearing my seatbelt, I would have either been killed or severely injured," said Richard DeVries, a minister from Cawker City, and an indirect campaigner for the Kansas Coalition for Safety Belts. "I was only a few miles from home when the accident occurred, which gives me all the more reason to wear my seatbelt even on

One of the problems people will have with the law is getting into the habit of buckling up whenever they get into a vehicle, DeVries said.

"It's good (the law) to encourage people to wear their seatbelts, and it's a prudent measure to protect drivers and their children, simply to be safe. The law is like the warning of the speed limit signs, encouraging people to get into the habit of driving at certain speeds, only it encourages people to wear a seatbelt," DeVries

"People will eventually overcome the uneasiness of wearing their seatbelt, and they won't have to think about buckling up," he said.

The benefits of the law are many, especially on long holiday weekends like the Fourth of July, Blair said.

"The Fourth of July holiday is the worst one during the year for traffic deaths and injuries," Blair said, 'with more than 30 to 40 times more injured than on any other holiday. Since more people will be out traveling this year because of the low gas prices, and police will be issuing warnings to those failing to wear their seatbelts, hopefully, this year there will be a decrease in the number of injuries and deaths.

'The law is a good start on the state's effort to make Kansas highways safer for all drivers and passengers," Blair said.

Alumni provide help with career options By The Collegian Staff

The Alumni Learning Exchange is a program, sponsored by University Learning Enhancement and Resource Network, designed to give students practical information about a wide range of careers options.

With help from the KSU Alumni Association, alumni give U-LearN detailed information about their job experiences and their education.

Tracy Fraser, director of U-LearN, said alumni are mailed an informational brochure asking them to fill out a job profile sheet. This is a detailed questionnaire concerning many aspects of career development. The completed forms are kept on file at U-LearN.

Students wanting to use the program are shown specific profile sheets that match their career interests and goals. Because these files contain alumni home phone numbers and addresses, they are monitored by student paraprofessionals who work at U-LearN.

"The files are frequently used during pre-enrollment time," Fraser said. "The students can get information on what classes were most useful to people who are now in the working world."

Fraser said there are approximately 85 profile sheets now on file in U-LearN.

"One of our fall projects is to increase the number of sheets and expand our range of occupations," Fraser said. Advertisements will be placed in the K-Stater, the Collegian and other college newspapers in hopes of encouraging more alumni to participate, she said.

Another goal this fall is to market the Alumni Learning Exchange more effectively to students. Fraser said this will be done using fliers and newspaper

Many patriotic numbers such as "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "God Bless America" will be featured tonight at the Manhattan Municipal Band's annual pre-Fourth of July concert.

The "Star-Spangled Spectacular," a collection of music by George M. Cohen, will also be featured, as will such familiar tunes as "Home on the Range," arranged by James Barnes; "America the Beautiful," words by Katharine Lee Bates and music by Samuel Augustus Ward; and "Stars and Stripes Forever" by John Philip Sousa.

Trumpet soloist Paul Shull, professor of music, will perform "La Virgin de la Macarena," a famous bullfighting tune arranged by Charles Koff. Shull is the director of the Flint Hills Symphony Orchestra, the K-State Alumni Band and the K-State trumpet choir.

Vocal soloist Gerald Reeck, professor of biochemistry, will sing Roy Ringwald's arrangement of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Reeck is a member of the K-State Konza Quartet and a soloist for the First United Methodist Church

The concert will begin at 8 p.m. on the Arts in the Park stage in City Park.

'Comedy Invasion' infiltrates local bar

By SANDY BUDELOVICH Collegian Reporter

For those who need a good laugh now and then, one place to get it may be Bushwacker's during Monday night's Comedy Invasion.

Rich Kriftewirth, manager of Bushwacker's, 531 N. Manhattan Ave., said the idea for a comedy night had a shot-in-the-dark beginning. He said he felt comedy was becoming popular and there was no place in Manhattan that offered comedy on a regular basis.

Kriftewirth said he thought there was a group of people in Manhattan who would be interested in a change. Comedy, he said, would provide a change from the usual weekend atmosphere of live bands and socializ-

State revenue plunges $90 million

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Revenue Secretary Harley Duncan revealed Monday that state income fell $90 million short of original expectations during the fiscal year which ended at midnight Monday, meanwhile, the State Finance Council voted to issue a $75 million certificate of indebtedness to avoid a cash-flow problem in the state's general tax coffers later this Tax revenue was placed at $1.524 billion during Fiscal Year 1986, a 5.2 percent shortfall from what state fiscal experts had projected state government would take in when they made their initial estimates in November 1984.

The certificate of indebtedness the second so far this year - became necessary when revenue collections during the past four months fell $25 million short of projections issued in March, according to Secretary of Administration Alden Shields.

Duncan said with other income to the general fund, the state ended the fiscal year with a balance of $18 million to $20 million, which is about half of what the Legislature and Gov. John Carlin thought would be there when the lawmakers adjourned the 1986 session in late April.

It also means the projected ending balance for the new fiscal year now must be revised downward sharply, Duncan said.

Instead of about $99 million, the shortfall portends a balance of just $74 million, and Duncan said the state Budget Division already is figuring revenue will fall $40 million below the last projection in March.

Sheilds said officials assumed revenues would drop by that amount during the next five months. The ending balance for the state likely will be only $34 million on June 30, 1987, Duncan said.

The finance council, composed of Carlin and eight legislative leaders, voted unanimously to authorize the certificate, which basically is a paper transaction to loan the state general fund some of the money in the multi-million dollar pool of idle state funds.

However, the practical effect of the latest certificate of indebtedness was to repay another $75 million certificate, issued in April, which by law had to be paid back Monday, the last

A certificate of $65 million was issued in December 1982 during the peak of a financial crisis from which the state is still recovering, followed by a $30 million issuance in October 1983 and the $75 million certificate authorized April 2.

Despite the revenue shortfall Duncan said he believes the state can get through the fiscal year without a tax increase, but he said it does dictate that the 1987 Legislature be more frugal in its spending than it thought it would have to be.

And, it means the $172 million the state stands to collect in new revenue because of an increase in the state sales tax from 3 percent to 4 percent which takes effect today won't put the state on easy street. In fact, that revenue won't allow the state to breath easy until Fiscal Year 1988, he said. However, Shields said last week that the sales tax increase is the state's financial salvation.

The $1.524 billion the state took in from tax sources during the fiscal year just ended included $582.15 million from individual income taxes, $489.53 million from the sales tax, $135.82 million from corporate income taxes, $92.01 million from the mineral severance tax, $71.12 million from the compensating use tax, c lerical workers in line with those be-$58.06 million from the cigarette tax ir 1g paid by private companies.

and $32.36 million from the inheritance tax. Lesser taxes accounted for the balance.

The total was down $951,000 from what the state took in from taxes during Fiscal Year 1985, with individual income taxes down $21.31 million, corporate income taxes down $6.14 million and the severance tax down $9.29 million - all the result of a poor

Seatbelt use becomes mandatory

Many Kansans may not I lave realized it, but today is the first day of a new fiscal year. And that means new laws are going int o ef-

After urging by Gov. . John Carlin, the Legislature at ided another full cent to the existing sales tax, raising the state wide tax rate to 4 percent. The mea sure was enacted to increase state : coffers by some $172 million.

Households with an annua il income of $13,000 or less can now qualify for refunds of $15 to $ 340.

For drivers and front-seat passengers, "mandatory" use of safety belts in passenger cars is now in effect.

But using the term "mandatory" may be inappropriate in this case. Because of pressures on legislators, police will not be permitted to issue a ticket until July 1, 1987, if the belts are not used. And then only if another violation is cited - with a fine not to exceed $10. It seems like the legislators are saying, "well, we'll pass the law, but don't worry about obey-

Other laws beginning today increase the cost for driver's licenses, establish limits on malpractice claims and increase judges' powers in declaring persons to be mentally ill.

Although most of the new laws are beneficial to the state at large, one could wonder about the safety belt law. If the Legislature has no intention of enforcing a law, something should be changed.

Safety should mark celebrations

Independence Day traditic mally has been a time of fun fi amily gatherings. But if caution i s not observed, avoidable and t ragic accidents can often occur.

Fireworks, a large part of the mid-summer holiday, often result in injury instead of gratific ation, for youths in particular. According to the U.S. Consumer : Product Safety Commission, 10,300 people were treated in he spital emergency rooms in 198 5 for firework-related accidents.

While fireworks may be discharged within the Man hattan city limits from 8 a.m. Ti iesday through midnight Friday, it is unlawful to use firewor ks on streets, alleys and in any park or public place.

Alcohol is another device often abused during holidays. While the crackdown on driving under the influence is meant to get drunken drivers off the roads, we should remember the whole point is that it is unsafe to drive anything while intoxicated.

Missouri's new legislation prohibiting alcohol on boats may soon become law in other states as well.

Holiday gatherings of family and friends are meant to be joyous occasions. But if safety is not observed good times could end up as disasters.

University leadership a challenge

As new K-State Preside nt Jon Wefald takes on the primary leadership position at the I Jniversity he will face both an opp ortunity to shine and a challenge .

Wefald has displayed an opportunistic viewpoint about 1 \(\cdot\)-State and that will probably be o f great help to him. The new pr esident has said he thinks K-State "is one of the best kept secr ets in Kansas."

As with all leadership cl ranges, followers are encouragied by positive words of their new leaders. A new leader presents the hope for a better and brighter future - and that hope was never more emphasized than now.

Wefald will now carry the responsibilities of the coliseum construction, the bolstering of enrollment, and the retention problem, in addition to reinforcing or redefining the mission of the University.

He will have to be a director for the University in the true definition of the word. Also, he will have to be a diplomat, all the time working with and alongside other Regents institutions' leaders but at the same time aggressively promoting K-State's best interests. This will become a tougher and dirtier job as Kansas' institutions compete for fewer Keeping in mind the leader K-State needs, we wish the new University president a good beginning to his new career and our new future.

Reagan's legacy tough to swallow

It's been said so often it's become a cliche: Pity the person who succeeds Ronald Reagan; what a tough act to follow

That's been evident for a long tin 1e, as far as the ceremonial duties of the pr esidency are concerned. No one does them be atter than

But as we approach the final q uarter of Reagan's White House service, it becomes clear that he will also be a tough ac t to follow in several more substantial - and worrisome - ways.

It's increasingly obvious, for exa mple, that Reagan is going to leave it to his su ccessor to curb the rampant red-ink spend ing which has been the hallmark of his admi nistration. Last week, the White House rel ouffed the latest in a five-year sequence of Senate Republican efforts to reverse the continuing tide of budget deficits.

The bills will come due with integrest - the mounting interest on a national de bt that has more than doubled durng Reaga n's tenure. How much more it will grow in the : 30 months Reagan has left can only be gues: sed, but indications are the administration 1 has once again underestimated the defic it for this year and next, so the news is likely to be worse than we know

Another Reagan legacy, it's increasingly clear, will be the frustration of those followers who voted for him twice in the belief he would deliver the changes in abortion policy, prayer in schools and other social issues which they ardently desire.

Yes, Reagan has appointed hundreds of conservative judges. But in the sixth year of his tenure, the Supreme Court has again affirmed, but by a 5-4 vote, women's right to terminate pregnancies. And it has left intact the constitutional barrier against statesponsored school prayer.

Reaganites may throw the "blame" on those superannuated justices who are too stubborn to resign or die. But what will stick in the throats of true believers and come back to haunt his successor is the fact that Reagan repeatedly has made it plain that the social-issue agenda always takes second place in his priorities.

When Senate passage of the tax-revision bill was threatened last week by the prospect of protracted debate over a suggested antiabortion amendment, Reagan persuaded the amendment's sponsors to withdraw it.

Reagan can get away with that tactic, just as he can get away with doubling the national debt, because none of his supporters thinks him capable of duplicity. He projects such sincerity that he is never accused of hypocrisy.

But it won't be just conservative Republicans who will have to confront that uncomfortable legacy. The deficits will make it difficult if not impossible for a liberal Democratic president to attack unemployment, improve education or reduce the nation's growing economic inequality.

He really will be a tough act to follow.

One man killed; second critically wounded

DODGE CITY - One man was killed and another was critically wounded before dawn Monday in a shooting at a Dodge City trailer park, police said.

The dead man was identified as Tuyen Van Trinh, reported to be in his late 20s.

The shooting occurred in his trailer.

Police said a second man, who was not identified, was listed in critical condition at St. Francis Regional Medical Center in Wichita. Police said they received a call about 2:30 a.m. about a shooting at a trailer court.

Officers responding to the call found one man dead and the other critically wounded. Two handguns - .38- and .357-caliber weapons - were found at the scene. Police Sgt. Dale Agee said investigators were working under the assumption that the two men shot each other.

Man chains tractor to flagpole to protest

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A bankrupt farmer padlocked his tractor to a flagpole near the Missouri Court of Appeals Monday to protest the repossession of his farm. During a brief news conference, Marvin Porter of Kidder, Mo., asked the appeals court to assume custody of the diesel tractor pending the outcome of a suit he has filed against Green Hills Production Credit Association. The credit association has repossessed most of Porter's farm equipment. Porter, 34, and his wife, Teresa, 24, are scheduled to go on trial next Monday in U.S. District Court on 20 charges of selling secured property with the intent to defraud. His lawyer, Fred Slough, said Porter was charged with selling hogs and the tractor, which were secured by the federally chartered credit association. Slough said Porter staged his demonstration to show that he had not sold the tractor and to protest the treatment of farmers who are in financial trouble.

Porter intended to use proceeds from the sale of his farm equipment to help pay his debts - not to defraud the government, Slough said. 'He just wants to stay afloat, pay off his debts and keep everything he's worked for," Slough said. "He has a lot of suits pending, but frankly his chances are dim for Slough said he also will try to prove in court that Porter was suffering from diminished capacity when he sold the hogs. He said Porter couldn't take the stress of losing the farm and may not have realized that his actions were illegal. The tractor was removed from the courthouse shortly after Porter's news conference, and no charges were filed against Porter.

Author wins second award for best seller

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - Chris Van Allsburg put in a good word for the fantastic while accepting a Caldecott Medal for his best-selling children's book "The Polar Van Allsburg, 35, of Providence, was awarded the highest honor given by the American Library Association conference for an American children's book in January. He accepted the award in New York City on Sunday.

The book chronicles a Christmas Eve visit to the North Pole. "The inclination to believe in the fantastic may strike some as a failure in logic or gullibility, but it's really a gift," Van Allsburg said.

"Santa is our culture's one mythic figure truly believed in by a large percentage of the population. It's a fact that most of the true believers are under 8 years old, and that's a pity," he said. The Caldecott Medal was the second Van Allsburg received. He is the sixth repeat winner in the association's history. Van Allsburg also teaches at the Rhode Island School of Design.

Man refuses to jump 10 feet, dies of burns

LATROBE, Pa. - A 66-year-old man burned to death on the second floor of a residential hotel despite the coaxing of firefighters who stood ready to catch him only 10 feet below.

'He was standing out on the balcony. His clothes were on fire, and he was being burned by fire coming out of the window, but he refused to jump in our arms. We had to wait until the ladders arrived to go up and get him," said fire Chief John

Adam Aukerman died Sunday night, and Michael Krawtz, 69, another tenant of the McHenry Hotel, was in critical condition Monday at West Penn Hospital in Pittsburgh, authorities said. Three firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation. The cause of the fire was not immediately determined, Orzehowski said.

Some Social Security benefits to increase

WASHINGTON - More than 2 million Social Security beneficiaries who worked in 1984 will get monthly benefit increases averaging $14.30 in their July checks, it was announced Monday

Dorcas R. Hardy, the new commissioner of Social Security, said her agency will also distribute retroactive checks averaging $265 to the same people on Thursday. The benefit recomputations were triggered by the beneficiaries' earnings in 1984. In recalculating a person's benefits, Social Security drops a year with lower earnings and replaces it with what the person earned in 1984.

Those beneficiaries who did not work in 1984, or whose earnings were not high enough to trigger a recomputation, are not affected and the checks that they receive on Thursday will be unchanged.

But Hardy, who was confirmed by the Senate June 19, said a half-million other beneficiaries will get raises and retroactive checks by the end of the year after their benefits are recalculated by hand.

OPEC fails to agree; price drop foreseen

BRIONI, Yugoslavia - OPEC's attempt to devise a plan for ending the world oil slump broke up in failure again Monday, and analysts said they expected prices to

Despite six days of discussions on this balmy Adriatic island, the cartel leaders headed home with no firm agreements on the key issue of how to lower production enough to prop up prices. Oil ministers, who have met without success on three occassions in four months, said they would meet again July 28.

"Really, OPEC has run amok," said Scott Jones, an energy analyst at the private consulting firm Chase Econometrics Inc. in Bala Cynwyd, Pa. "Production is out of control.' Jones predicted crude oil prices would slip $1 to $2 a barrel, with retail gasoline prices in the United States dropping as much as a nickel a gallon by August. Although a majority of the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries backed a plan for limiting the cartel's oil production to 17.9 million barrels a day in the October-December period, the proposal was not adopted. The goal would be to push prices up to a range of $17 to $19 a barrel. World oil prices currently are in a range of $11 to $14 a barrel, depressed by the oil glut and OPEC's inability to agree on a strategy for ending it.

Wheat supports for '87 crop to be reduced

WASHINGTON - The government's price support for wheat harvested in 1987 will be reduced further to a national average of $2.28 per bushel, the lowest level in a decade, Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng announced Monday.

Wheat supports for the 1986 harvest were cut to $2.40 per bushel from $3.30 in 1985. The reductions were authorized by Congress late last year in the Food Security Act. According to the strategy designed by Congress and supported by the Reagan administration, the lower grain prices will encourage foreign countries to increase their purchases of U.S. commodities. With larger exports, surplus U.S. stocks would be reduced and prices increased at the farm level.

NCAA official reports drugs are problem on every campus

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio - The chairman of the NCAA committee on drug education says every college in the country has a drug problem, and that an effective testing program deters abuse by athletes.

Dr. Robert J. Murphy, an associate clinical professor of preventive medicine and the head team physician at Ohio State University, says data shows that in the last five years 20 percent to 25 percent of college athletes have used marijuana or cocaine - some use both - on an average of once a week.

Murphy, also the chairman of the NCAA's committee on drug education, provided information presented to the Big Ten Conference Awareness Committee on Alcohol and Drug Abuse that found 36 percent of 2,039 athletes in a 1984 NCAA survey had used marijuana within the previous 12 months, 17 percent cocaine, 8 percent amphetamines and 6.5 percent anabolic steroids.

A 1984 multi-college survey compiled by Heitzinger & Associates of Madison, Wis., found that of 2,100 athletes at 12 colleges, 27 percent used marijuana and 14 percent used co- anyone use just one substance, in-

"Every college in America has a drug problem because it's a reflection of our society and of the student body," Murphy said during an interview. "Drug use among athletes is approximately 50 percent that of the general student population."

Cocaine was cited as the cause of deaths this month of Maryland basketball player Len Bias and Cleveland Browns football player Don Rogers. Bias died June 19 and Rogers eight days later.

Murphy said that seldom does stead mixing marijuana with alcohol or cocaine with alcohol.

Murphy said that when an Ohio State athlete is detected using drugs, We feel they should not play ... If they have drugs in their system, they run the risk of injuring themselves as well as causing other players to be at risk because of their lack of perfor-

The solution, Murphy said, is drug testing as a deterrent, not as a way of punishment.

"The Olympic program of testing is based upon identifying (people who test positive for drugs) and of punishing them. Our program (at Ohio State) and the one I advocate is based upon, first, to deter use, and second, to identify the kids with problems and try to get them clean.

"We work with some for two or three years, Murphy said. "If they are in treatment for two or three years and we eventually get them clean, well, that's our goal.'

Murphy said that every athlete, coach, trainer, team physician, manager and other staff member affiliated with the program at Ohio State is tested. In the 1984-85 school three men's teams and two women's teams and that 5 percent of the urine samples showed use of illegal substances.

He added that in tests of four men's teams and five women's teams during 1985-86, 1.5 percent came up

"We consider that (random, weekly) drug testing has proven to be a major deterrent to drug abuse during the season," Murphy said.

He said that when an athlete tests positive the first time, they are rechecked by a second test.

Jackson goes 1-4, gets mixed results in minor league debut

By The Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. - Bo Jackson hit an RBI single in his first professional at-bat Monday, then finished 1-for-4 in his first pro game, a Southern League contest between his Memphis Chicks and the Columbus Astros.

He struck out twice, once on a called third strike in the ninth.

Jackson, batting seventh as a designated hitter, bounced a single through the middle in the first inning, coming through in a two-on, twoout situation. His single made the score 3-0.

He struck out swinging his second time up, and grounded back to the mound on his third.

Jackson struck out leading off the ninth with the Chicks trailing 9-5. They lost by that score.

The Heisman Trophy winner and former Auburn running back made his debut with the Class Double-A team, 10 days after signing with the Kansas City Royals and turning down a reported $7 million offer from the National Football League.

At an afternoon press conference Jackson said the pre-game buildup did not bother him.

"It comes with the territory," he

"I feel great. There's some people nervous but I'll let them worry. I'm just going to go out there and play baseball.

Jackson, a right-handed batter who stands at the plate in a closed and slightly crouched stance, took his first professional pitch - a breaking ball - for ball one, then grounded a 2-1 pitch into center field. It scooted between the fielders on the Chicks' artificial turf infield.

The crowd repeated the standing ovation given him when he came to bat, and the ball was taken out of play for safekeeping.

The first pro pitcher to be victimized by Jackson was Mitch Cook, Columbus' right-handed starter.

By Jackson's next time up, it was the fourth inning, the Astros led 5-3 and Cook had retired eight straight batters. Jackson became number nine, striking out on a low 2-2 pitch.

In the sixth, Jackson again batted with two out, with the score tied 5-5. He chopped the first pitch — up the middle again - but Cook fielded it

Jackson fell behind 1-2 against reliever Earl Cash in the ninth. He took two off-speed pitches for balls, but took a high 3-2 fastball that was called strike three.

Mariners keep KC on losing skid

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE - Mark Langston scattered six hits over seven innings for his fifth straight win and Scott Bradley drove in two runs with a double as the Seattle Mariners beat Kansas City 3-2 Monday night, handing the Royals their fourth straight loss.

Langston, 9-5, struck out eight and walked five while allowing two earned runs. He improved his lifetime record to 4-0 against the Royals.

Seattle scored all three runs in the fourth inning. Jim Presley lead off with a double and Ken Phelps followed with a walk. One out later, Bradley doubled into the gap in right-center to score both runners and then scored on a single by Spike Owen to give the Mariners a 3-2 lead Loser Dennis Leonard, 6-7, winless since June 4, gave up three runs on six hits while walking three and striking out four.

The loss was the Royals fourth straight on their current road trip. They dropped three games to Minnesota in the Metrodome and continued their losing slump here Monday night. The Royals have now dropped two games below the .500 mark, 37-39, and have continued their hitting woes against the Mariners that dates back to last season.

Vandals hit hall, wreck furnishings

By JENNIFER LINDSEY Collegian Reporter

Charges have been filed in Riley County District Court against a 21-year-old Manhattan woman for the burglary of Van Zile Hall and for contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Cara Robinson, 3020 Tumbleweed Terrace, and 10 juveniles were found in Van Zile on May 30 by two KSU Police Department officers.

According to Lt. James Tubach, University detective, the walls and floors had been spray painted, furniture was broken and bathroom facilities were being used, despite the water being shut off. The estimated damage costs are between $6,000 and $7,000.

Charles Beckom, superintendent of K-State Police, said that it is difficult to pinpoint how many people were involved.

"Some of the juveniles were living there, severed from their homes; others just visited," Beckom said. It is also not yet known how long they had been

"These are people who live in the streets," Beckom said. "It is not something that we are a stranger to here in Riley County, in Manhattan or here at K-State." The campus police went to inhearing a rumor that there were people living inside. After Beckom said few details can be given in this case because it is still under investigation.

"It isn't over yet; we're still looking," Beckom said.

Van Zile Hall has not been used as a residence hall for two years. Formerly owned by the Department of Housing, Van Zile is now the property of University Facilities. The electricity, heat and water were shut off after its closing in May 1984.

Beckom said the mess in the hall has not been cleaned up because it has not yet been decided who is going to pay for it.

Although the building now belongs to University Facilities, the Department of Housing was using it for the storage of some furniture, much of which was damaged

Britain and Switzerland on Sunday said that Naidoo likely had been detained, but Meintjies said that Naidoo was free, but in hiding, and planned to attend the executive meeting.

Meintjies told The Associated Press that the president was picked up at his home in Carltonville, a mining town west of Johannesburg. The union chief, the most senior labor leader jailed without trial during the emergency, is also vice president of the 250,000-member black National Union of Mineworkers.

The Labor Monitoring Group, an independent team of academics, said Saturday at least 923 union members were known to be in detention. It said 740 more workers were arrested while striking dairy plants to protest earlier detentions.

Lyle Gramley, chief economist for the Mortgage Bankers Association, said he believed single-family sales for the entire year would total around 800,000 units, about 15 percent higher than last year and the best sales year since 1978.

The average price of a new home climbed to $116,100 in May, 3.8 percent higher than in April and 18.3 percent higher than a year ago. This increase is more than four times the rate of inflation over the past 12 months. Analysts attributed the rise to escalating land prices.

said. Fund-raising events for the memorial so far have included a hog roast, chili feed, mountain oyster feed, sales of "Vietnam Veteran" and "I Support Kansas Vietnam Veterans" hats and T-shirts, a benefit by comedian David Naster, and donation cannisters in area businesses, Mathes said. According to City Treasurer William Zoeller, the fund drive had raised nearly $12,100 by June 1. "But a lot of money has come in since that time," he said.

Veterans will sell hats and T-shirts at the ground-breaking ceremony Friday. The Kansas Operation Memorial fund drive will receive support from Coors beer distributors across Kansas.

"Coors distributors will be donating 10 cents to the fund for every case of Coors and Coors Light sold in Kansas from July 14 to July 19," Nelson said. "There will also be (donation) cannisters in every bar in Kansas.'

Coors established a Vietnam College Fund and has helped with memorials in Colorado, Washington, D.C., and four or five other states, he said.

Nelson said the granite for the project will cost about $43,000. Klugman Monument Co. of Wichita will engrave the stone and put it in place. 'Many materials and services for the project have been donated,' Mathes said.

The engineering plan was donated by Kaw Valley Engineering. Also donated were the limestone base, electrical work and concrete, Mathes said. Other expenses include sidewalks leading to and around the memorial, benches, flagpoles and landscaping.

"Junction City was chosen because it's centrally located and next to Fort Riley," Mathes said. "The 1st Infantry Division went over in 1963. They had many casualities in Vietnam."

Besides the maple tree dedicated last year, the park at Sixth and Washington has an arched memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the Civil War. There is a memorial from American war mothers to the Geary County World War I veterans. Buried near a large fountain in the center of the park is a bicentennial time capsule, to be opened in 2076.

Friday's ceremony is part of Junction City's Sundown Salute Celebration. Veterans and their families are invited to march in the Sundown Salute Parade at 11 a.m.

Scheduled to take part in the ground-breaking ceremony at 1:30 p.m. from Fort Riley include Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Henry Wake, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Victor Ruiz and Maj. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart III. Wishart is the commanding general of the 1st Infantry Division and Fort Riley.

Screening commences

Vice presidential hunt begins

By The Collegian Staff

The search for a new vice president for institutional advancement at K-State is underway.

The vice presidential search committee began reviewing about 30 applications Monday morning, said Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chairman of the com-

The final candidates, who will be interviewed in public, will probably be named between July 10 and July 15, Reagan said. The new vice president should be named by the end of July. The position begins Aug. 15, he said.

"The position has two main responsibilities: enrollment management and public relations,' Reagan said.

Some of the other responsibilities will include institutional development and alumni affairs.

Reagan said he would like to see a new vice president get new admissions counselors organized and get recruitment underway for the fall as soon as possible. The University will have a staff of up to eight admissions counselors added to the recruitment

The applicants for vice president could have learned of the position in one of three ways, Reagan said. The University published an advertisement in the Chronicle of Higher Education. The committee also sent a letter to 170 universities addressed to each of the universities' presidents. The presidents were believed to be a good source of possible applicants who might be good in the position. The applicants may have learned of the position by word of mouth, he said.

President Jon Wefald appointed a committee of 10 to select four or five candidates to be interviewed.

The committee members include: Reagan; Mike Johnson, former assistant to the president; Steven Johnson, student body president; Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design; Elizabeth McCullough, associate professor of textiles; Don Hoyt, assistant provost; David Schafer, Faculty Senate president and professor of animal sciences and industry; William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services; Larry Weigel, director of the Alumni Association; and Nancy Twiss, adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences.

HEAT STRESS PREVENTION TIPS

- 1. Become acclimatized to hot weather activity through 7 to 10 days of graduated exercise.
- 2. Wear light colored, loose, porous clothing.
- 3. Be familiar with the early warning signs of heat stress: dizziness, muscle cramps, extreme fatigue, coordination problems, chills, headache, unsteadiness, nausea.
- 4. Remember that temperature and humidity, not the sun, are the crucial factors.
- 5. Eat a proper, balanced diet and replace lost fluids.
- 6. If heat stroke occurs, remove outer clothing and cool the victim IMMEDI-ATELY. DON'T WAIT, GET HELP IMMEDIATELY.

Jon Wefald, new K-State president, filled his first day with meetings and Tuesday and has spent the time being brought up to date on campus issues planning sessions in his office in Anderson Hall. Wefald began as president and scheduling his calendar for the next six months.

Planning, meetings fill Wefald's day

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

The first day of work for President Jon Wefald was not one of quiet relaxation in a cushy office; instead, it was filled with meetings and planning sessions in a sparsely furnished office. "Basically, what I wanted to do today was to go through the calendar," Wefald said Tuesday. Wefald was reviewing the invitations to local events and meetings going on in the area for the next six months, he said. Wefald had also met with the provost and vice presidents to be brought up to date on campus issues, he said. But Wefald already appeared up to date on the problems facing the University.

Wefald said that after a May meeting with the eight deans and various department heads he realized a big priority at K-State would be to secure faculty salary increases.

"Faculty salaries are totally and completely inadequate," he said. "We've got to have well-paid and well-informed faculty." Salaries for unclassified positions at K-State are below those of the peer institutions against which K-State is evaluated, he said.

"If we want to give the best education, we need to have the best faculty." he said. The better the faculty are, then the higher the quality of students K-State can attract, he said.

With the "Brain Drain" causing the migration of the best and brightest Kansas students to other states, Wefald said it was important these students be given a reason to stay in the state. The 'Brain Drain" theory asserts that the intelligent people who cross the state's borders also take with them potential economic development. Keeping those students in Kansas by offering them the best in education is essential to building the state's economy, Wefald said. "What's good for the faculty, is good for the state of Kansas," he

Increasing the quality of the faculty could help the state's economy in another way.

"The greatest resource in the future is information. The greatest source of new wealth is going to be information," he said. Wefald pointed to Japan and Taiwan as examples of countries which "invested heavily in information" and have gained economically by harnessing it. "I think we can turn Kansas into one of the brain powers of the nation," he said. "Kansas State can play a role in helping turn the state around. We should talk to the governor and the Legislature and talk them into (approving the Board of Regents' funding increase requests)."

But increasing faculty salaries is only one of the tasks Wefald said he must confront.

"We know we have to do a better job in recruitment and retention," he said. "This is a superb university, and we want to take this message to the state." K-State is considered the statewide institution, Wefald said. The University enrolls students from more of the state's 105 counties than any of the other state universities, he said. K-State will also seek the brightest of the international students, Wefald said. A five-year game plan for K-State was also on Wefald's agenda of things to do.

"There will be a lot of things going on after July," he said.

Wefald spent Monday touring the campus - familiarizing himself with the buildings and the people. Everyone has been friendly, he said, and the University is one of the prettiest he has ever seen.

Black labor union may stage protests

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - A bomb blast injured six women and two small girls at a downtown bus stop Tuesday. Elsewhere in Johannesburg, leaders of the black mineworkers' union voted to protest the detentions of colleagues by staging disruptive actions.

The mineworkers' move could affect the output of the world's largest gold producing nation.

The nation's largest labor federation, the mostly black Congress of South African Trade Unions, said Tuesday its executive committee drafted a plan for a nationwide action to protest the detentions and other effects of the state of emergen-

The federation includes the miners' union. A spokesman said local affiliates would be consulted about the plan. He said the proposed protest might be scheduled for July 14, but no final decision on details had been made.

Tuesday's bomb explosion, across from 50-story Carlton Center office tower, the nation's tallest building, was the 10th in South Africa since a state of emergency was imposed June 12. The blasts killed three people and injured 98.

Injured Tuesday were five white women, a black woman and two white children - a 2-week-old baby, reported badly hurt, and a 3-yearold, slightly injured.

The government blamed the bombing on the outlawed African National Congress. The black guerrilla organization has refused to confirm or deny responsibility for any recent explosions.

Also Tuesday, police commanders in four regions banned several antiapartheid groups from holding meetings. The orders extend an existing ban on outdoor rallies to include indoor meetings and affect such groups as the United Democratic Front, the country's largest anti-apartheid coalition.

The ban affects districts of eastern Cape Province, southwest Cape Province, northern Orange Free State, and the East Rand area directly east of Johannesburg.

The latest bombing came a week after explosions at a fast food restaurant and a hotel in Johannesburg injured 19 people.

Information Bureau for spokesman Leon Mellet said the blast was "in line with the adopted policy of the ANC of indiscriminate

Judge sentences 3 sanctuary activists

By The Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. - Sentencing began Tuesday for eight sanctuary activists convicted in a conspiracy to smuggle aliens into the United States, with three defendants drawing five-year suspended sentences. U.S. District Judge Earl Carroll levied no fines, but also barred the three from contact with anyone violating immigration laws - a restriction the three said would make it difficult for them to maintain their ministries and other activities that grow out of their faith.

The sentencing, expected to wind up sometime today, was for six people found guilty May 1 of conspiring to smuggle Salvadoran and Guatemalan aliens into the United States. Two were found guilty of related misdemeanors, and three were acquitted.

The eight who were convicted were activists in the movement that helps Central Americans it considers to be refugees entitled to political asylum in the United States. The U.S. government contends the aliens are economic refugees, and thus are not entitled to sanctuary in this country.

Those sentenced Tuesday were Margaret Jean "Peggy" Hutchison, 31, of Tucson; Sister Darlene Nicgorski, 42, of Phoenix; and Philip Willis-Conger, 28, of Tucson.

All three were convicted of conspiracy, as were the Rev. John M. Fife III, 46, a Presbyterian minister from Tucson considered a founder of the church-based grass-roots effort; the Rev. Ramon Dagoberto Quinones, a Roman Catholic priest from Nogales, Mexico; and Maria del Socorro Pardo de Aguilar, 60, of Nogales, Mexico.

Each conspiracy conviction carried a possible five-year prison term and $10,000 fine, with other felonies carrying the same time and $2,000 fines, and misdemeneaors $500 fines and six-month terms

Carroll, meeting objections from the first three sentenced, said he had carefully worded his decisions on the restrictive terms of their probation to permit the defendants to remain active but to bar them from breaking

He recommended they seek clarification from their attorneys and probation officers about what activities would be permitted.

Serial killer receives short reprieve

By The Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. - A federal judge Tuesday refused to grant serial killer Theodore R. Bundy a lengthy reprieve, but blocked his scheduled Wednesday electrocution for 24 hours to give him time to take his case to an appeals court in Atlanta.

The ruling by U.S. District Judge William Zloch delayed the execution until 7 a.m. Thursday, five hours before Bundy's second death warrant for the murders of two sorority sisters would expire.

Bundy, a 39-year-old law school dropout, also was convicted of murdering a 12-year-old schoolgirl and has been linked by the FBI to as whose case was recently the subject for a television movie, was being kept in a death-watch holding cell at the state prison in Starke, a few feet from the prison's oak electric chair where Florida has executed 16 men since 1979.

Department of Corrections spokesman Vernon Bradford said when he saw Bundy on Tuesday morning, "he appeared to be nervous, which I guess is pretty natural. It was his eyes more than anything else that made me think he was nervous."

Bradford said Carole Boone, who married Bundy while he was on trial, visited her husband Tuesday with her son from a previous marriage.

Still scheduled to die Wednesday morning was another mass murderer, Gerald Stano, 34. His attorneys prepared appeals for consideration by a Brevard County circuit judge and the state Supreme Court. Stano was condemned for killing a Port Orange teen-ager and has been linked to dozens of sex slayings in Florida, New Jersey and Penn-

In Bundy's case, Zloch first rejected the request for a six-month stay, then huddled with lawyers from both sides and granted the 24-hour delay so Bundy's legal team could take the case to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"The 24-hour stay would still allow the carrying out of the execution," said Assistant Attorney General Gregory Costas. He called Zloch's ruling "an extension" rather than a stay because the death warrant remained in effect.

Bundy and Stano declined news media interviews Tuesday. Bundy also refused to see two Salt Lake City detectives who hoped he would discuss two slayings and three unsolved disappearances that occurred when he was a Utah law student in 1974, said prison Superintendent Richard Dugger.

In Florida, he was convicted of the Jan. 15, 1978, slayings of FSU sorority sisters Lisa Levy and Margaret

He also was sentenced to death for the Feb. 9, 1978, slaying of Kimberly Diane Leach, who was abducted from her Lake City school.

Summit talks begin

Russia asks to renew plans

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union, which had canceled preparations for another Reagan-Gorbachev summit, has proposed that they be resumed, a senior official said

It was the first public step by the Soviets toward scheduling the next summit since they called off a preparatory meeting between Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George P. Shultz after the April 15 U.S. bombing raids on Libya.

Vladimir F. Petrovsky, deputy foreign minister, told a news conference that diplomatic contacts were under way for a new meeting between Shevardnadze and Shultz, but he made clear that the two sides were far from setting a date for a second summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

At their first summit last November in Geneva, Reagan and Gorbachev agreed to meet again this year in the United States.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes welcomed Petrovsky's statement and said the United States hopes it indicates "a willingness on (the part of) the Soviet Union to move forward to preparations for a summit, which we would like to have."

"We are certainly ready for such a meeting between the secretary and the foreign minister, but there has been no specific date set for such a meeting," he said.

Petrovsky said even the Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting hinges on chances of "tangible" progress in arms control.

The Soviets have expressed reluctance to set a date for the summit until they see improvement in the international political climate and are assured of a concrete agreement on some aspect of

U.S. officials have said since the meeting was canceled that they were ready to hold the summit but awaited some move from the Soviet Union. Petrovsky said the Kremlin has "proposed to the United States to set in motion a preparatory mechanism" for a meeting between the two foreign ministers and diplomatic contacts have "now embarked on a practical phase." He would not say where and when Shultz and Shevardnadze might get together.

Speakes said in Washington that "preparation, ideas and framework for the summit" were discussed when Soviet Ambassador Yuri Dubynin met with Reagan at the White House a week ago.

His "seat of leisure," as he calls it, is a green, vinyl-covered barber chair sitting next to the large barbershop window that displays a view of North Manhattan Avenue. His blue eyes sparkle with a youth that defy his 80 years.

He's been babying the kids as an Aggieville barber for 62 years now, since Haynes first came to Manhattan in 1924 from Clifton, a town on the border between Clay and Washington counties.

"I came to Manhattan looking for a job," he said, "Aggieville was the first place I landed. I've been here customers included Civil War

According to Haynes, the area known as Aggieville was first developed around 1900, with only a few stores, including a grocery store and a barbershop.

He said it was not until after World War I that a "building boom" occurred and resulted in most of the buildings on Moro Street and the buildings housing Haynes' shop on North Manhattan

"This barbershop and a restaurant called The Canteen used to be in the basement of Anderson Hall," Haynes said. "But a bunch of the downtown businessmen got together and decided it was unfair business competition, so those businesses were moved to these buildings down here.'

Haynes said The Canteen played a big part in how Aggieville got its name.

"Nobody started calling it Aggieville until around 1911, when a traveling cookie and cracker salesman named Tyson sent a postcard from Chicago to The Canteen. As a joke, he addressed it 'Aggieville, Manhattan, Kan., Haynes said. "Back then, restaurants had a showcase where they displayed things, and the owner of the restaurant put the card in there. Everyone saw it and began calling this place Aggieville.

"Aggieville was really the first shopping center in Kansas," he said. "It used to have all kinds of clothing stores - a Duckwall's dime store - and Aggieville Hardware, which was one of the biggest hardware stores around."

Putnam Hall 'respects' residents' sleep, quiet

By DENISE URBANEK Collegian Reporter

"Shhh! It's quiet hours!"

Although it's a familiar phrase to many who live in the residence halls, it isn't one that is likely to be heard in Putnam Hall.

Last year Putnam residents were part of a pilot program called RESPECT, an acronym for Residents Encouraging: Study, Peaceful Environments and Community Thinking. The basis of the RESPECT program is that residents have the right to sleep or study in their own rooms at any time, said Rosanne Proite, assistant director of Housing.

Putnam, originally a women's hall, was reopened as a co-ed residence hall after a decrease in requests for the hall forced the Department of Housing to close it at the end of the 1983-84 school year, Proite

During the time Putnam was closed, housing officials met with student groups and asked them what they would like if they could have the best of all worlds, Proite said.

"What came up consistently was that people wanted to be able to study and sleep and have a good time," Proite said. With that in mind, the RESPECT concept was developed.

To participate in the RESPECT program, residents must agree to follow certain guidelines which include 24-hour quiet hours. The noise level in the rooms must not be heard in the corridor, and residents must keep their doors closed when entertaining guests or listening to music, Proite said. In addition, residents also agree to help plan or present one program during the year. "The basis for the required involvement was a concern that people would think that they could go there and cloister themselves," Proite

The residents' involvement was exemplified by several educational programs including presentations such as "Dress for Success" and "Date Rape." A coffeehouse hour was held each month for residents to show off their talent, said Kelli Nichols, Putnam Hall director. Putnam also hosted the student body presidential debates sponsored by the KSU Association of Residence

Aside from the noise restrictions and required participation, there is no difference between Putnam and other halls, Nichols said.

"We have the same problems that other halls have," Nichols said. "We do have noise problems."

"When you want to be with people, all you have to do is step off of the floor," Proite said. "It didn't matter what time of the day or night I would walk into that hall, there would always be something going on."

"It's fun to live there," said Karen Holston, junior in mathematics. "It's a lot quieter - I didn't realize how quiet it was until I visited friends in other halls."

Jon Lane, junior in information systems, said he enjoyed the closeness of the group and the people

Schedules challenge working students

By AMY TAYLOR Collegian Reporter

The average college student's day is spent in classes, watching television and studying, according to Ron Smith, counselor at the K-State Counseling Center. For an increasing number of K-State students, their day also includes a part-time job.

Instead of going home after class and relaxing, they must get ready to face another five to eight hours of time that cannot be used for studying or socializing.

Being a working student can create some stressful situations, such as having a deadline at work and also having an important test or paper due. To help alleviate this problem, students must learn to manage their time, said Smith.

"I usually have 15 to 16 hours of class a week. Plus, I have two jobs and work about 20 hours a week. This gives me little time for anything but school and work," said Denise Urbanek, senior in journalism and mass communications and political science, student writer at University Relations, and receptionist at Goodnow Hall.

"Sometimes the pressure can really get to me, so I've learned it's really important to not put things off. I have to do them right away or it won't get done," she said.

Realizing the amount of responsibility students takes on when they decide to work, students should develop a "plan of action," and stick to it, Smith said.

'Discipline is important; the student has to realize there must be a balance between work and school. Some students can get that balance, while others overload themselves by taking too many classes and having too big of a work schedule," Smith said.

"I have found out that it depends on how many hours you are taking, plus how many hours you are working. I usually try to gear my work schedule to how many difficult or time consuming courses I have," said Darryl Kuhlman, senior in biology and employee at the K-State Beef Research Unit.

"When I first started working, I wasn't used to organizing my time, so I had a few problems at first, but after I realized what I had to do, things have been working out just fine," Kuhlman said.

Along with the pressures and stress of working while in school, there are some beneficial outcomes too, Smith said.

"Besides the many personal rewards such as the feeling of success and accomplishment, the working student gets important work experience and the opportunity to learn how to get along with people - skills which are needed for any type of job," he said.

"Working at the Beef Unit has given me an opportunity to learn things I would not have been able to if I wasn't working," Kuhlman said.

"For instance, all the cattle at the beef unit are on various types of weight gain or drug tests. The workers at the unit are in charge of determining rations, measuring and distributing the feed. We have to be accurate, and give them the precise amount of feed, or it may ruin the test," he said. "Knowing that, I have learned how very important it is to follow directions and get along with my co-workers."

The contacts and friends working students make now can prove to be beneficial in the future, providing information about employment prospects and opportunities, said Smith.

"Before I started working on campus, I was not as familiar with it and didn't know so many people. Now that I have worked here (at University Relations and at Goodnow and West halls), I feel much more secure as a worker and as a student," Urbanek said.

According to Smith, most students are working to pay their way through school; however, there are some students who are working for other reasons too.

"I'm working because I enjoy having something to do in my spare time, and being able to meet a lot of new people," said Mark Besinger, senior in marketing and student supervisor in the dishroom at Kramer Food Center. "I also work for the experience of dealing with people and being in a management

"Working gives me a chance to get away from the pressures of classes. At Kramer, I can concentrate on other things, and worry about my classes later," Besinger said.

But education is still the most important component of a working student's life. They have learned that the emphasis should be on school, and not so much on work, Smith said.

"Since I've been working and going to class, I've learned to put priorities on things that are most important to my education, and letting the other things wait until I can get to them. I also feel I've gained a tremendous amount of experience," Urbanek said.

"Working students who often feel the resentment of not being able to take part in the activities their friends are doing, should keep in mind they are getting a head start on life and their career, and will be far ahead of their friends in the end," Smith said.

Steadfast marchers deserve praise

While the attention of many American's will be focused on the re-dedication of the Statue of Liberty and local fireworks displays this Fourth of July holiday, "The Great Peace March" rolls on.

Although the march, sponsored by PRO-Peace under the direction of David Mixner started with great intentions and massive publicity, it didn't take long for things to break down.

But, as reported in the June issue of Mother Jones magazine, PRO-Peace was not a bush-league operation.

Mixner is a veteran campaigner, including the 1969 Moratorium Day against the Vietnam War. In 1977, he led Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley's reelection campaign and in 1984 he served as co-chairman of Sen. Gary Hart's presidential bid.

Howard Cushnir, director of communications for the effort and author of the Mother Jones article, said the "organization's operating strategy was spelled out, a strategy that could be summed up in the phrase 'blue smoke and mirrors.' If enough people believe it, after a while that momentum will actually exist."

While the number of marchers has been greatly reduced from the original 6,000, "The Great Peace March" is not dead. In fact, the remaining marchers will be visiting Omaha, Neb., during the Fourth of July weekend.

In the face of the continued push for "Star Wars," the passage of Contra aid and the president's continued push to send National Guard troops to Honduras, the marchers should be congratulated for not giving up.

Election promise misleads public

Daniel Remeta and John Carlin. What, you may ask, do these two men have in common?

Actually, probably not very much. Remeta, a convicted murderer, is on death row in a Florida prison. Carlin, of course, is the governor of Kansas: the same governor who was in favor of capital punishment during his election campaign and then vetoed every capital punishment bill sent to him since changing his address to Cedar Crest.

After Remeta was convicted of murder in Kansas, he was sent to Florida, where he was also convicted of murder and sentenced to die in the electric chair.

Governor Carlin had the chance to have Remeta brought back to Kansas to serve his life sentence here, but Carlin decided not to extradite Remeta.

As candidates gear up for the November gubernatorial elections, the political arena will soon be the place where Kansans can again listen to and question the candidates about their stances. As yet, none of the candidates have publicly addressed the issue of capital punishment in this state.

But a concern of all Kansans

When the smoke clears, all the votes are counted and the state of Kansas has a new governor in November, Kansans should be confident that the person holding the highest office in our stae governemt will make decisions which are accepted by the majority of the people of the state, and not let personal convictions override the voice of the voters.

Supporting Contras only solution

On June 23, Steve Milligan wrote in a Collegian guest column his views concerning President Reagan's proposed aid to the Nicaraguan Contra forces. We have some differences of opinion.

First of all, speaking of the president, he wrote, "It is obvious that he wants to escalate the suffering of the Nicaraguan people." I am deeply saddened that a person could publicly present such a grossly distorted view of our president and his interests in Nicaragua. I am one of many Americans who reelected Reagan because we believe in him and what he stands for. He is not out to escalate suffering. In fact, the exact opposite

Having followed the Nicaragua situation closely, I am convinced that aid to the Contra forces is currently the only viable hope of restoring responsible government to that

The Sandinista government has demonstrated increasing oppression toward the people of Nicaragua, especially the conservative Catholics, evangelical Protestants and the Miskito Indians. To end the Sandinistan regime and establish a democratic form of government responsive to the people would be a tremendous step forward in protecting the innocent among the Nicaraguan people.

Secondly, despite what the members of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America believe about Nicaragua not becoming a totalitarian Marxist-Leninist state like Cuba,

Lenin wrote, "Treaties are only for getting breath for a new effort. They exist to be broken as soon as expedient. Peace propaganda is to camouflage war preparations." DAN WALTER

It is extremely naive to believe that the Sandinista government would behave crossgrain to their ideology and current practices as a result of signing a mere treaty. Communists do not work that way

Finally, it was contended that U.S. involvement in Nicaragua will hinder any permanent peace. Perhaps the question to ask is, what kind of peace do you want? Should the United States have stayed out of World War II to allow Hitler to maintain a uniform "peace" in Europe?

If the United States backed out of Nicaragua completely right now and the Contra forces were crushed, would there be "peace" in that country?

Adolfo Calero is commander in chief of the FDN (Nicaraguan Democratic Force), the major segment of the Contra forces. He said, "There are a lot of people who promote a type of peace at any price for the Nicaraguans, which they would never accept for themselves.. Peace, we believe, is not the absence of conflict. Peace is the state of human dignity, sovereignty, and harmony which can be achieved only through a government which has the consent of the governed." Amen.

Propane truck, train collision claims three

VALLEY FALLS — Three people were killed and two were critically injured Tuesday when a propane truck collided with a freight train on the edge of this small northeast Kansas community, authorities said.

The semi-trailer truck exploded and the train derailed after the collision at a crossing on Kansas 4 on the southeast edge of town, said a Jefferson County sheriff's dispatcher who would not give her name.

Tom Little, operations manager for Medevac Mid-America Inc., a Topeka ambulance service, said paramedics sent to the scene about 5:45 p.m. reported three people were dead. Two people were critically burned and were being transported to a Topeka hospital, Little said.

Fire departments from several surrounding communities extinguished the fire, the sheriff's dispatcher said. Valley Falls, population 1,200, is about 25 miles northeast of Topeka.

Group urges farmers to vote 'yes' on poll

WICHITA — Kansas wheat farmers should vote yes on the wheat poll being conducted by the Agriculture Department to send a strong message to Washington in favor of mandatory production controls, three Democrats said Tuesday

The poll is non-binding, but a large vote in favor of production controls would "give legislators in Washington as well as administration officials a good message as to whether wheat farmers like the current farm program or don't like it," said U.S. Rep. Glickman, who represents Kansas' Fourth District.

Glickman and Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin joined Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower on a four-stop flying tour of farm states to stump for "Yes" votes on the poll. They were scheduled to stop in Omaha, Neb., Wichita, Oklahoma City, Okla., and Amarillo, Texas. "I can guarantee every farmer that if the wheat referendum comes back "no," there will be no push in Congress to change anything this year," Harkin said at the Wichita press conference.

Hightower said the current federal wheat program will have a $2.28 loan rate in 1987 while a program with mandatory controls would raise the rate to $5.04. He and Harkin said the United States is a price leader in the world wheat market.

When the United States raises its wheat prices, other countries follow and adjust their selling prices to slightly less than current U.S. prices, they said.

Polling places now handicapped accessible

TOPEKA - Eighty of the state's 105 counties are in or near compliance with a new federal law that requires polling places to be accessible to the handicapped, Secretary of State Jack Brier said Tuesday

Brier also said steps have been taken recently to assure handicapped accessibility at voting places in Johnson County, the last of the state's four largest counties to achieve compliance with the federal mandate.

Thirty-two counties have total accessibility for disabled people at polling places while another 48 counties are nearing 100 percent accessibility and should be in compliance by the Aug. 5 primary election, Brier said.

John Reinhart, a spokesman for Brier, said the other 25 counties "still have almost five weeks to do something.

Reinhart said officials in the secretary of state's office are continuing efforts to help officials in the counties that are not in compliance with the federal requirements. The 25 counties who Reinhart said may not comply by Aug. 5 are Allen, Barber, Brown, Butler, Chase, Cherokee, Cloud, Coffey, Cowley, Decatur, Dickerson, Finney, Franklin, Harper, Hodgeman, Leavenworth, Lincoln, Linn, Nemaha, Osage, Pawnee, Republic, Saline, Washington and Woodson.

Former official allegedly embezzles funds

KANSAS CITY - A former administrator at the Shawnee Mission School District and a private contractor were charged Tuesday with conspiracy to embezzle school district funds

Walter E. Ferguson Jr., 52, of Overland Park, the former associate superintendent for management services for the school district, and Billy Joe Huff, 40, of Lenexa, were charged with conspiring to siphon $16,000 from an account that was to be used for installing ceiling fans in district schools.

The money allegedly came from 20 checks totalling $52,425 given to Huff to pay for installation of the fans, said Robert Davenport, special agent in charge of the Kansas City FBI office. Each man allegedly received about $8,000, according to court

Ferguson is scheduled to appear in court Wednesday. No hearing date has been set for Huff. Both men face sentences of up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine if

Police arrest daredevil for soliciting officer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Stuntman Evel Knievel was arrested last week after he allegedly solicited an undercover police officer posing as a prostitute, police said Monday. A Sept. 10 court date was set for Knievel, 47, who was charged with soliciting for immoral purposes. He was released after posting $500 bond.

Police said Knievel, who gave his name as Robert C. Knievel of North Royalton, Ohio, approached undercover Officer Bessie Curtis about 4 p.m. Thursday near Main Street and 34th Terrace. The area is often frequented by prostitutes.

Officials would not release details of the encounter or allow the arresting officer to be interviewed.

Police Chief Larry Joiner confirmed that he met with Knievel Sunday afternoon at Knievel's request at police headquarters. Joiner would not say what was discussed. Knievel was in Kansas City to attend several events last weekend, including a radio station's party Friday night and the wedding of a Grandview businessman

Hospice to receive Medicare certification

WICHITA - Hospice of Wichita has become the first hospice in Kansas to become certified by Medicare, which will pay the medical bills of about 30 percent of the hospice's patients, according to patient care coordinator Cynthia Houser. Hospice of Wichita provides health care for terminally ill patients and their families, allowing patients to die at home. The hospice benefit actually became available through Medicare on Nov. 1, 1983, the same day that Hospice of Wichita opened, but it took several years for the hospice to become eligible to apply, Houser said. To qualify, a patient must be 65 or older, have a terminal illness, have a person in the home to care for him and not be on a curative treatment program.

Besides Hospice of Wichita, Kansas has five other paid-staff hospices and about 25 volunteer hospices. Only those with paid staffs can apply for Medicare certification.

Seattle continues Royals slump; KC loses fifth consecutive game

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE - Pinch-hitter Ricky Nelson's tiebreaking single keyed a four-run eighth inning Tuesday night and led the Seattle Mariners past Kansas City 8-5, the Royals' fifth straight loss.

Danny Tartabull led off eighth with a single off Dan Quisenberry, 0-2. Tartabull took second on a sacrifice and, after a two-out intentional walk, Nelson singled to left for his first hit of the season. It was the first pinch-hit for the Mariners in 22 tries since Dick Williams became Seattle's manager on May

Nelson, who was called up from the minors last week, then stole second and John Moses followed with a two-run single. Phil Bradley then greeted reliever Steve Farr with an RBI single.

Pete Ladd, 4-2, pitched the final 1 3/3 innings for the victory.

Kansas City scored two runs in the seventh to cut the lead to just two runs and stranded runners in scoring position when the inning ended.

The Royals tied the game in the eighth with another two run rally but again, stranded runners on second and third with consecutive strikeouts by Jorge Orta and Rudy Law ninth with a double and Angel Salazar gained his 12th RBI of the season with another double. The inning ended with Salazar standing on second base.

The Royals fall to three games below .500 with the loss and have lost five straight, a season high.

They have now lost four out of five games that the two clubs have played this year and have los every game played in Seattle.

Kansas City has been struggling against last season's American League West cellar finishers. The Royals lost 12 of 15 games to the Mariners last season when they went on to win the league title in the last weekend of play.

Topeka Sizzlers name former NBA assistant to head team

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - John Killilea, a former assistant coach with three National Basketball Association teams, has been named head coach of the Continental Basketball Association's Topeka Sizzlers.

Killilea, whose appointment was announced Tuesday by Bernie Glannon, the team's owner and president, succeeds Bill Ficke. Ficke headed the team last season, its first, when it was based in Kansas City, Mo., but was unable to reach terms on a new contract with Glannon.

Ficke compiled a 25-23 record with the Sizzlers and led the team to a playoff berth in the team's initial

"We went about the task of selecting a new coach with the idea of attracting someone with proven qualifications on a professional level, and John Killilea was on the top of our list." said Glannon.

He called the new coach one of the foremost defensive authorities in the game. Killilea spent the the past year conducting basketball clinics throughout the country. Included in that stint was a short midseason defensive camp with the Sizzlers.

Killilea has been an assistant with the Boston Celtics from 1972-77 where he served under Tommy Heinsohn, the Milwaukee Bucks from 1977-83 under Don Nelson and, most recently, the New Jersey Nets under Stan Albeck for two seasons.

He is a 1952 graduate of Boston University and has 34 years in basketball, 16 of them as a coach and scout at the professional level.

Big Eight splits $2.1 million

Tournament lucrative

From staff and wire reports

MISSION - The National Collegiate Athletic Association has mailed checks totaling $22.1 million to member institutions and conferences as their 60 percent share of proceeds from the Division I men's basketball championship.

The payments were announced Tuesday by Richard Schultz, chairman of the Division I Men's Basketball Committee. Each team advancing to the tournament's Final Four received $892,966.

Other amounts paid included $714,373 for the regional finals, $535,780 for the regional semifinals, $357,187 for the second-round and $178,593 for the first-round.

Except for the Final Four, institutions shared in revenue only for games in which their teams participated.

The Atlantic Coast Conference, with six teams including finalist Duke in the championship, received $3.2 million. The Southeastern Conference was next with $2.8 million, followed by the Big Eight with $2.1 million, the Big Ten with Ten with $1.7 million, the Big East and Metro with $1.4 million each and the Sun Belt with $1.2 million.

Most conferences which have automatic qualifiers for the tournament have a revenue-sharing formula to distribute the money among their members

In 1985, the NCAA estimated that 249 of the 284 Division I institutions received tournament revenue through the conferences' method of sharing the money. It said that it is anticipated that almost 90 percent of the schools will get money from the 1986 championship.

Gross receipts for this year's tournament were a record $41.1 million. an 18.2 percent increase from 1985. Of that amount, $33 million, or 80.3 percent, came from television rights fees. Ticket sales amounted to $7.4

The NCAA's expenses for the tournament, including administration, allowances to schools that hosted games and transportation and per diem payments to participating schools, were $4.2 million.

K-State received "a couple hundred thousand dollars" from this year's tournament, according to Athletic Director Larry Travis.

The Big Eight Conference divides all tournament and bowl revenues from participating football and basketball teams equally between the eight member institutions. This season, Iowa State advanced to the Midwest Regional semi-finals, while Kansas advanced to the coveted Final Four in Dallas.

The Big Eight sent a record five teams to the NCAA Tournament in 1986. Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Iowa State and Missouri were all selected to the 64-team field.

"Sure it helps," Travis said of the conference's dividing of post-season revenues. "If we go they share also. That is why the conference is so good...They (the major conferences) are all done that way.'

The Big Eight runs off of revenue that the member schools make during the season, and does not share in the post-season money division with Early Tuesday in Johannesburg, at the close of a five-hour meeting, leaders of the National Union of Mineworkers voted to launch disruptive actions to protest the state-ofemergency detentions of 10 senior union officials.

The action followed detention of a mineworkers' union vice president who also is president of the Congress of South African Trade Unions.

The union represents nearly half the country's 550,000 black miners.

The Chamber of Mines, representing mine owners, in a statement urged release of the union congress leader. Federation leaders, most in hiding to avoid detention, issued a statement after meeting on Tuesday which said, "Demands have been formulated and a legitimate program of action has been proposed." It said details would be relayed to employers, who "must effectively pressure the state, since it is they who will have to remove repression.

Under state-of-emergency restrictions, the detained president may not be named and the specific types of protests planned by the unions may not be reported. The Labor Monitoring Group, an independent team of academics, said Tuesday 226 union members were among at least 1,500 people who were held without charge.

When the Union receives a bounced check, law requires that a certified letter be sent to the person, Thoman said. Certified mail can be delivered only to the addressee and must be signed for. Postage for a certified letter is $2.92.

Kansas statutes require that returned checks be paid within seven days of receiving notice of a returned check, he said.

The post office will return the letter to the Union if it is not delivered to the addressee in five days. The Union automatically sends a second letter with regular postage to the student. If the student doesn't respond to the second letter, the county attorney can prosecute, Thoman said.

The student's name is placed on a non-acceptable check list, making it impossible for the offenders to write a check anywhere in the Union.

Aggieville used to carry more of a town atmosphere, and more town residents shopped there then, Haynes said. Aggieville even had its own baseball team, of which Haynes was a member. The team won the city league championship in 1938.

Haynes remembers when Aggieville began to change from townoriented businesses to a collegeoriented area.

"It all started changing during the 'hippie days' - whenever all that hippie stuff started," Haynes said. "You'd come down here at night and they'd (hippies) be lying in shop doorways with their long hair and filthy clothes. I think that's what drove a lot of the town residents away and made this area more of a college hang-out."

Haynes said he thinks Aggieville is growing out of its college-oriented

"I think Aggieville has had its biggest growth in the past two years, and it's been for the better," he said. "With all of the new businesses coming in and the facelift it's getting, Aggieville is getting a better name than it used to have. More of the town residents are coming back to shop in Aggieville.'

As for turning 80 June 9, Haynes said he doesn't feel any different.

"Right now, I'm just doing what I enjoy," he said. "I take the 'overflow' on cutting hair, and I still cut the hair of my old friends who I've been working on for 50 years. I've also started reading the Bible a lot lately. I've never been wellversed in it, and I've got to be able to pass that 'final examination."

Court reaffirms civil rights hirings

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court reaffirmed race-conscious hiring and promotional preferences Wednesday, parting company with Reagan administration officials who insist that personnel decisions generally must be made on a colorblind basis.

The court's rulings in two disputes, one by a 6-3 margin and the other by a 5-4 vote, represented a major victory for civil rights groups and women's organizations which have pushed affirmative action programs in recent years.

At the NAACP convention in Baltimore, Executive Director Benjamin Hooks hailed the rulings as "a tremendous victory" and "a significant rebuke" to the administration.

But at the Justice Department, Attorney General Edwin Meese said he wasn't disheartened.

"We will continue to hold to the moral position that the court itself in each of these cases has reestablished as the ultimate goal that we would have a colorblind society and that we would not have racial preferences," he said.

The Supreme Court rejected the administration's argument that affirmative action should be limited to actual victims of past bias to avoid "reverse discrimination" against the innocent, primarily white people.

'We reject this argument and hold that (federal law) does not prohibit a circumstances, affirmative raceconscious relief as a remedy for past discrimination," Justice William J.

"Specifically, we hold that such relief may be appropriate where an employer or a labor union has engaged in persistent or egregious discrimination, or where necessary to dissipate the lingering effects of pervasive discrimination," Brennan

In one of the cases, the justices approved by a 6-3 vote a plan that reserves about half the promotions in Cleveland's fire department for qualified minority candidates.

In the other, the court ruled 5-4 that a union representing sheet metal workers in New York and New Jersey must double its non-white membership to 29.3 percent by August 1987. The union, formerly allwhite, had been found guilty of racial discrimination.

As in past rulings on affirmative action, the court was fragmented. The two cases yielded nine written opinions authored by five justices.

But in each case, seven justices rejected the administration's narrow view of permissible affirmative ac-

"They ruled against us," said Meese. But he said the court and the administration both want to achieve ultimately the same goal: "a colorblind society." Bill McEwen, a spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers, praised the rulings. "We're pleased that the Supreme Court has reinforced the concept of affirmative action and has recognized its value as a tool to help eradicate the present effects of past discrimination," he

Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, said, "These decisions underscore the nation's bipartisan commitment to affirmative action goals. The Supreme Court has repudiated the (administration's) attempt to gut affirmative action."

In the sheet metal workers case, federal courts ordered the union, Local 28, to expand its non-white membership, noting that it refused to admit blacks until 1969 and had an "egregious" history of discrimina-

The court-ordered quota of 29.3 percent is based on the percentage of non-whites in the New York-New Jersey labor pool.

In the Cleveland case, a federal judge issued a consent decree in 1983 that calls for about half the promotions in the fire department to go to minorities. City officials and the Vanguards of Cleveland, representing black and Hispanic firefighters, agreed to the preferences.

The plan was challenged by Local 93 of the International Association of Firefighters, which said the preferences unlawfully discriminate against whites.

Detainees total 780

South Africa to file charges

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - The government said Wednesday criminal charges ranging from murder to assault will be filed against 780 people detained under the three-week-old state of emergency.

The detainees who face charges will have access to lawyers, Bureau for Information spokeswoman Ronelle Henning told a news conference. If convicted, they could get lengthy jail terms.

The bureau refuses to say how many people are being held incommunicado and without charge under the nationwide emergency imposed June 12.

South African and foreign monitoring groups estimate the number of detainees at 1,800 to more than 3,000. The prisoners are known to include trade union leaders, priests, journalists and anti-apartheid activists.

White opposition Progressive Federal Party legislator Ken Andrew said he suspected the charges would amount merely "to a smear story put out to justify the repressive actions of the authorities.'

Under the state of emergency, the Bureau for Information is the only source of official information. Emergency restrictions prohibit the media from reporting statements that the government considers subversive and bar reporting on the activities of security forces. The regulations also ban the naming of detainees.

Despite a spate of bombings the government blames on the African disruptive action to protest detentions of labor union leaders, officials sounded confident the crackdown has quelled 22 months of black unrest

"Although the radical element may be regrouping, the state of emergency is having the desired effect of restoring peace in the country," Henning said. "The African National Congress is out of touch. ... The people of South Africa will indeed share power but it will be done through negotiation.

Two of the eight people wounded in the latest bombing - an explosion Wednesday at a downtown Johannesburg bus stop - remained hospitalized, including a 2-week-old baby cut by flying glass. It was the 10th bombing in South African cities since the emergency was declared.

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu condemned the bombings as terrorism. He said many blacks suspect the attacks - which have killed or wounded primarily whites - were the work of right-wing white extremists, while whites blame the outlawed ANC.

"The problems of our country cannot be solved by the violence of injustice, oppression and exploitation, nor by that of those who seek to overthrow such a repressive system," Tutu said in a statement.

"There is much goodwill still left can't we get together and talk? Can't those recognized as authentic leaders and representatives of all

National Congress and threats of tion, whose president is among hundreds of trade union members reportedly jailed without charge, issued a July 10 deadline for their release. It also demanded an end to harassment of shop stewards and

> The 500,000-member, mainly black Congress of South African Trade Unions said it would "take effective measures" if the deadline was not met. It already indicated it will stage a nationwide protest July 14.

The curbs on the press under the emergency forbid reporting of many details of union activity or their calls for action.

Thousands of black miners Wednesday stopped buying from concession stores and bars at mines in the first in a series of actions to protest the detention of some of its leaders, the National Union of Mineworkers said.

Union spokesman Marcel Golding said two senior union officials were detained Wednesday night, raising the total to 13.

Aggieville celebrates July 4th with carnival, entertainment

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

The Aggieville shopping district will have its own form of Fourth of July activities with the Old-Fashioned Independence Celebration on Saturday.

Bill Jacoby, executive director of the Aggieville Merchants Association, said that the 1100 and 1200 blocks of Moro St. will be closed to traffic Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 6

Organizations and charities will begin the event by opening carnival booths at 9:30 a.m. Jacoby said the Merchants Association will supply these booths free of charge. The organizations will be required to purchase their own prizes, which Jacoby said the Merchants Association will obtain from the Kansas City Carnival Supply Co.

Jacoby said two blocks of ice will contain Aggieville business cards. Participants may register to win prizes from these businesses by guessing the correct time a particular business' card will thaw from

At 10 a.m., Ballard's Sporting Goods will sponsor a pet parade. All types of pets may be entered and each participant will receive a ribbon. Specialized categories such as biggest and best-dressed pets will be awarded trophies, Jacoby said.

At 1 p.m. in Triangle Park, located at the corner of Anderson and Manhattan avenues, events such as the three-legged race, sack race and egg race are planned, Jacoby said. These events are sponsored by Aggieville businesses and prizes will be

At 3 p.m., Woody's Ladies' Shop will sponsor a Miss Liberty Look Alike Contest. There will be a $25 prize for first place, Jacoby said. From 4 to 6 p.m., the National Association of Jazz Educators will put together a band featuring the '40s big band sound that will supply music for a street dance. Other celebration events will be a pool tournament at Fast Eddy's and a watermelon feed at Last Chance Saloon. The feed is sponsored by Last Chance and Aggie Station. The Aggieville Merchants Association and Kite's Bar and Grill are sponsoring a 16-team men's slowpitch softball tournament. The tournament will take place at the ball diamonds at City Park and Northview Park, Jacoby said.

Other local activities, sponsored by the Manhattan Jaycees, will be held at Tuttle Creek River Pond State Park from 10 a.m. until dusk. Scheduled events include a car and craft show, a treasure hunt for children under the age of 13 and games for the entire family.

Also scheduled for appearances are Billy Bob and the Q-Roo, along with blackpowder firearms demonstrations by Wilderness Men.

Kansans from throughout nation once again return to their hometowns to reunite with family and friends to celebrate the biggest birthday party of the year - the Fourth of July.

"Happy Birthday, America" seems to be the theme echoed in the firework displays, parades, aerial shows and carnivals across the Fourth of July celebrations are not new to Kansas. Many Kansas towns can brag of celebrations that generations of families have returned to for more than 100 years.

In the northeast part of the state, several celebrations are planned beginning Friday, with many running through the holiday weekend. Below is a rundown of some the area celebrations planned for the weekend.

JUNCTION CITY

Junction City will begin its Sundown Salute Celebration at 6:15 a.m. Friday with a flag-raising ceremony, followed by a 10-kilometer Coors Freedom Run at 7:30 a.m. Additional 1-mile runs will begin at 9 a.m., with a Frisbee® contest following at 9:30

The Sundown Salute Parade will begin at 11 a.m. at the Junction City High School and will proceed along Sixth Street before disbanding after passing the park at Franklin Street. Entries will include Vietnam veterans, floats, fire engines, clowns, costumes, bicycles and pets. Prizes will be given for the best parade entries, including special children's divisions.

Activities in the park during the afternoon will include displays by the Geary County Historical Society, a historical fashion show at 12:45 p.m., the Kansas Vietnam

Memorial ground-breaking at 1:30 p.m., the Smoky Hill River Band at 2:15 p.m., bicycle rodeo at 2:45 p.m., a raffle at 3 p.m., the Smoky Hill River Gang at 3:15 p.m., and games for children at 4 p.m.

Evening activities will take place at Dedication Point, which is just west of the dam at Milford Lake. Skydivers will give a demonstration at 7 p.m. Fort Riley will provide a 50-gun salute to the nation at 7:15 p.m. to mark the opening of evening ceremonies.

At 7:40 p.m., the Wheatland Express Bluegrass Band will play, followed by the 1st Infantry Division Band at 9 p.m. The fireworks display will follow at 10 p.m., ending the celebration.

Vic Davis, chairman of the Sundown Salute Committee, said the Sundown Salute celebration is one of the oldest continuous celebrations in the area.

"When the celebration began 14 years ago, patriotism was out of vogue," he said. "However, because people are more patriotic today, everyone will probably enjoy the celebration more."

WAMEGO

John Lang, a member of the Wamego Chamber of Commerce, said, "Anyone who has ever graduated or lives in Wamego tries to come back for the Fourth of July. All the (high school) classes try to hold their reunions at this time.'

Lang said Wamego will be holding its 114th July Fourth celebration this year. Wamego's planned activities include an antique Chrysler car show, antique engine show, a parade at 11 a.m., carnival from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., a dance starting at 9 p.m., and a fireworks display at dusk.

Wamego also will have an air

Wefald's quarters undergo refurbishing

By The Collegian Staff

While President Jon Wefald is busy attending meetings and planning sessions, the University maintenance staff is busy working to refurbish his office and the president's residence.

According to George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, the president's office, which has not been painted since 1978, is being painted and re-carpeted on the University's regular eight-year maintenance cycle.

"President Acker brought his own furniture," Miller said. "In all my years of higher education, I've never seen this happen. New furniture has been ordered for Wefald's office."

students majoring in interior design, includes mauve carpet, gray-white walls and accents of plum and gray. The office will be furnished with a walnut desk and bookcase, two side chairs, two wing chairs and a conference table with eight chairs.

A chandelier in the conference room is to be moved to the dining room of the president's residence and a new fixture providing more light will be installed.

The cost for renovating the office and residence of the president is $49,000 beyond the aiready-budgeted The office plan, designed by routine painting and maintenance cost of $35,000 - a total cost of $84,000, Miller said.

The renovation of Wefald's office is being funded partially by University maintenance funds.

Miller said some of the funds for the maintenance and renovation of the president's office in Anderson Hall and the president's home at 100 Wilson Court come from the University reserve fund which in turn is funded through state appropriations.

Since the president's house is a University building, it is supposed to be maintained on the same schedule as the other buildings on campus. According to Miller, the house is being painted, cracks are being filled, floors and doors are being fixed.

No maintenance has been done on the residence since 1975. Worn carpets and sun-damaged drapes will also be replaced. The exterior trim and gutters will also be scraped and painted.

Wefald said Tuesday he will be moving into the house around July

Doctors give advice for safe summer health

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

Sun and heat.

They're the prime ingredients of summer. But they're also the key elements in sunburn and heatstroke conditions which threaten people as well as animals every summer.

This weekend, Fourth of July festivities will lure thousands of people into the sun and heat for long periods of time. How long an individual should participate in an activity without taking a rest or a break depends on many conditions, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center.

Those conditions can include an individual's age, general conditioning, water consumption, clothing, temperature and humidity affect one's ability to tolerate sun and heat.

'Avoidance of sun, heat, and excessive fluid loss is the most important consideration," Tout said.

Heat exhaustion and heatstroke are the main health hazards people should be aware of when they're outside in the summer months, he said. "The life-threatening situation is heatstroke," he said.

Heat exhaustion and heatstroke can also occur in the shade, Tout said. "If you're in a shady area and there's no wind, the humidity is 90 and the temperature is 94 degrees. the same thing can occur.'

Heat exhaustion, which precedes heatstroke, may occur when summer heat causes a person to sweat and his water intake is insufficient, Tout said.

Signs of heat exhaustion are fatigue; weakness; pale, clammy skin; profuse perspiration; headache; nausea; and possible fainting, he said.

'These symptoms don't necessarily all have to occur, and they don't necessarily have to occur in this sequence," Tout said. "Some people just get some of the signs. These symptoms are what I would look for in a friend if he and I were out on the Young children and older people may be more susceptible to heat and sun, he said.

"Confusion clouds their judgment, and they don't stop and do things they ordinarily would," he said. Behavioral symptoms to watch out for are confusion, failure to take orders, and behavior not in keeping with their usual personality, Tout hot, dry, red skin; noisy breathing; and possibly unconsciousness, he said.

Symptoms of heatstroke are high temperature; a rapid, strong pulse;

If any of these conditions occur, emergency medical care should be sought, Tout said. In the meantime, victims should be cooled down immediately by using methods such as sponging their bare skin repeatedly with cool water or alcohol; placing them in a tub of cold water until their temperature falls; or applying cool, wet cloths and moving them to an area with air conditioning or fans, he

Several popular beliefs concern the prevention or treatment of sun and heat reactions by taking salt tablets, drinking alcoholic beverages, avoiding ice water and taking vinegar baths for sunburns.

"Salt water or salt tablets should not be taken. There's no reason to," Tout said. "I don't know of any athletic department using salt tablets yet (for athletes)."

He said he didn't believe drinking ice water when the body is hot is bad or a shock to the system.

"That's more myth than truth,"

He said drinking alcohol can actually increase water loss in some individuals.

Displays require permits

"Alcohol is used by some individuals to replace water loss, but they're really not able to replace the fluid loss to the same degree as they could with water," he said. Drinking alcohol also affects a person's inability to perceive his need for water, he said.

"Heat and alcohol is just a dangerous combination," Tout said. Sunburn can result in water loss, but it doesn't dry out the skin, he said. For those being exposed to the sun for the first time, he suggested a sun protector with a sun protection rating of 15. "If you're starting to turn pink, you're probably already in trouble,' Tout said.

He also said it was a myth that using vinegar baths would help a sunburn. For overexposure, he suggested application of a cool, wet compress or a plain, wet towel and sitting in front of a fan. "Sun doesn't have much effect on animals, with the exception of white ones," said Robert Taussig, small animal clinician at the Veterinary Medical Center.

White animals have no pigment, so they may get sunburned, especially the shorthair ones, Taussig said.

"The other major problem we see is with dogs," he said. Problems occur when a dog is tied in a backyard, can't get shade to escape the sun and can't get water, he said. Heatstroke could also occur if a dog had shade but no water, or had water but no shade, he said.

"The end result is heatstroke," Taussig said. "Depending on the weather, we get an average of two heatstroke cases per week of hot weather.'

The best treatment for heatstroke in animals is to put them in a tubful of cold water, he said.

"If this isn't available, turn the hose on them, then turn a fan on them," Taussig said. "Take the animal to the nearest veterinarian as soon as possible. Of all the domestic animals, pigs and rabbits are most susceptible to heatstroke." Cats rarely get heatstroke, he said. In addition, animals that are very young, very old or obese are more susceptible, he said.

By The Collegian Staff Despite the fact that Independence Day is not until Friday, some places in Riley County are already legally celebrating, said Capt. Nick Edvy of the Riley County Police Department. From 8 a.m. to midnight July 1 through July 4, it is legal to discharge fireworks in Manhattan and Ogden as long as it is done on private property. In other areas of the county, July 4 is the only day fireworks can be set off and then only from 8 a.m. to midnight, Edvy said. Besides being able to discharge fireworks only on private property and the time restrictions set, fireworks may not be thrown from a moving vehicle, toward a moving vehicle or toward a person, Edvy

Also, as in previous years, bottle rockets, cherry bombs and M-80s, are banned by the county, he said. Possession, and discharge of such devices is also a violation of Kansas

Firework sales in Manhattan and Ogden began July 1 and will end Friday. Sales for all other areas of the county began June 27 and will continue until July 5, Edvy said.

This year, the Manhattan Jaycees will sponsor a display of fireworks at Tuttle Creek Lake. But if a neighborhood wants to get together and have its own fireworks display, the neighborhood needs to obtain a city permit for a block party with the agreement of the entire neighborhood, Edvy said.

He said that action would make it possible to block off the street and have the fireworks display. The RCPD anticipates a lot of complaints, especially during the late hours of the day. Warnings will be given by officers and fines issued if the need arises, Edvy said.

Nation celebrates statue's anniversary

Information compiled by KAREN SCHULER Collegian Reporter

The Statue of Liberty is a monument that means one thing - The United States of America.

Lady Liberty will celebrate her 100th birthday with a big extravaganza July 4. The story of Liberty's birth is one not to be forgotten. In 1865, Edouard Rene Lefebure de Laboulaye proposed building a monument in honor of American independence which the French helped achieve. It was to be a gift for America's Centennial in 1876, National Geographic reported in its July issue.

Frederic-Auguste Bartholdi, a 31-year-old sculptor, started planning the design of the statue. It is said Liberty's face resembles that of his mother, according to National Geographic.

In 1870, he began making clay models for the statue, ending with a full-size model built in 11 separate

To begin, a framework was built with wooden beams covered by strips of lathing. The frame was then covered with plaster which was sculpted to the likeness of the statue, followed by copper sheets molded to fit the statue. Bartholdi created interest and enthusiasm about the statue by exhibiting different sections of it before final presentation.

One example of this was the displaying of the torch at the centennial celebration of 1876 in Philadelphia before the rest of the statue was completed. According to National Geographic, the head was shown in Paris at the Universal Exposition of 1878.

Joseph Pulitzer, editor of the New York World, put an image of the statue in the paper's logo and shamed New Yorkers throughout the pages of the paper for accepting the gift without having a place to put it.

But when the statue finally arrived in the United States June 17, 1885, enough money had been raised by the people of New York to build a pedestal for it.

"Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free," a poem written by Emma Lazarus, identifies the statue as a "Mother of Exiles." The poem was written to help raise money for the pedestal.

Combined with works by Walt Whitman, Mark Twain, and Bret Harte, the poem was auctioned for $1,500 at an art exhibit in 1883. The statue was given a home on Bedloe's Island for immigrants to see when they came to America - the land of

After many years of wind and rain the Statue of Liberty began to oxidize and corrode, resulting in the past three years being spent on the restoration.

And July 3, President Reagan begins a weekend of celebration as he relights the torch, accompanied by French President Francois Mitterand and assorted other dignitaries.

ST. MARYS

Ron Martell, president of the St. Marys Chamber of Commerce, said the St. Marys Fourth of July celebration "has been going on for eons."

"St. Marys really was a pioneer in fireworks displays because it began sponsoring one over 25 years ago," Martell said.

Martell said the St. Marys celebration centers around the fireworks display that the fire department sets off in the city park. The display will include both ground and aerial displays. A special ground display will honor Kansas' 125th birthday, Martell said.

"St. Marys' celebration is not a carnival. It is mainly a family gathering," he said. "It is not money oriented...like the larger towns; it is family oriented."

Martell said he expects about 500 people to attend the St. Marys celebration.

TOPEKA

The Fourth Annual "Go 4th" at Washburn University in Topeka will take place Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Organizers expect over 150,000 people to attend this threeday event, located in the southern portion of the Washburn University campus near 21st Street and Washburn Avenue.

Activities will take place from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Friday and Sunday and from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Saturday. A special "Concert in the Sky' fireworks display will take place at 10 p.m. on Friday. The 22-minute show will be synchronized to a mixture of popular, classical, contemporary and patriotic music.

Activities will include the Mulvane Art Fair, Antique Car Show, Quilt Show, Kaleidoscope and the KSNT Amateur Talent Show. Over 440 other non-profit, non-commercial booths also will be on hand.

On Saturday, the Renaissance Festival will conduct tryouts. Performers from the Renaissance Festival will also be present to entertain. The Renaissance Festival, which begins Sept. 6, is a re-creation of a 16th century harvest festival.

Entertainment for Friday evening will include Jay McShann, a famed local jazz performer. The Kansas City Spirit Orchestra and Kansas City Symphony also will provide musical entertainment.

A concert given Saturday evening by Blood, Sweat and Tears with David Clayton Thomas will be a reunion of the original group. The evening's entertainment will also include performance by Paul Revere and the Raiders.

A final fireworks display and laser light show will close the Spirit Festival Saturday night.

City restricts beer, alcohol possession

By The Collegian Staff

As with all other holidays, some people like to get out and celebrate. Some of these people will celebrate with beer and liquor on the Fourth of Alcohol consumption and possession within the Manhattan city limits is illegal anywhere on public property, right-of-ways and streets. This includes the city parks. Alcoholic consumption is also illegal in moving vehicles and on state and government property.

The only place within the city where it is legal to consume liquor outside of clubs and taverns is on private property, said Capt. Nick Edvy of the Riley County Police Department. Ogden has basically the same rules as Manhattan concerning alcohol and where it can be consumed and in one's possession, he said.

In the county at Tuttle Creek Lake, beer is allowed in the parks, but only in certain areas such as some of the camping areas. If it is posted that alcohol consumption is not allowed in a certain area, then the regulation is not to be ignored. If there is not a sign posted prohibiting alcoholic beverage consumption, then it can be assumed that consumption of beer is allowed. But Edvy stressed that only beer may be consumed in those

Although beer is allowed in certain areas at Tuttle Creek, liquor is not permitted at all, Edvy said.

The Arts in the Park stage will not contain the usual entertainment this weekend. But the stage will not be empty.

The City Park stage will be filled with performers in the Fourth Annual Local Talent Variety Show, which will begin at 8 p.m. Saturday. A variety of musical acts will be presented during the two-hour show, said Don Cukjati, director of Arts in the Park.

"The acts include bands and vocalists performing different types of music," Cukjati said. The performers are selected through tryouts and are judged for quality, stage presence, ability and

The talent show was created by Cukjati four years ago to give local bands and musical performers a chance to perform on a big stage with professional sound

Cukjati said he always thought a night should be set aside for those interested in performing.

Vicki Meinhardt and Dave Calovich, associate news director and news director respectively of KMAN, will be masters of ceremonies for the show.

Damage from Bob and Sweet Revenge, a rock'n'roll band from Manhattan, will perform at 8 p.m. tonight. No concert has been scheduled for Friday.

U.S., Europe halt tariffs; American farms to benefit

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The United States and the 12-member European Community on Wednesday called a six-month cease-fire in a trans-Atlantic trade war that U.S. officials say is threatening up to $1 billion a year in American farm sales.

Both sides agreed to back off recently announced retaliatory tariffs and counter steps through Dec. 31 to give negotiators a chance to finish their work, U.S. officials said.

"Both sides now have running room to negotiate for a final settlement," Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said in announcing the truce.

Trade officials said the agreement should help bring about a slight increase in slumping U.S. farm sales in Europe.

Under the truce, the Reagan administration agreed to hold off on threatened restrictions on European white wine, beer and certain food products that might have taken effect this week.

In return, the European trading bloc agreed to compensate U.S. farmers with other agricultural purchases for sales lost because of an increase in Spanish tariffs on U.S. corn and sorghum that took effect March 1

But Baldrige cautioned that the United States was prepared to move ahead with trade retaliation next year if the negotiations fail to produce an accord that would compensate U.S. farmers for lost

"Never mind the politics of it, the president isn't going to sit by and watch American farms lose half a billion dollars of trade to Spain and another half billon to Portugal," the secretary said.

The new Portugese restrictions are not expected to harm U.S. farmers until at least next year, and thus were not included in the steps announced Wednesday.

Trade tensions between the United States and the European Community, also known as the Common Market, intensified earlier this year with the entrance of Spain and Portugal into the trading bloc.

In joining the community, the two countries had to abide by a set of regulations that give trade preferences to European farmers.

The result was what U.S. officials said could be a loss of up to $1 billion a year in sales in Spain and Portugal - in the past among the best European markets for

The new restrictions came at a time when American farmers were already feeling the impact of competition from heavily subsidized European products.

In retaliation for the new Portugese and Spanish restrictions, the administration announced in May that it would impose new restrictions on white wines, brandy, beer and various other European products.

The European Community then retaliated against the U.S. move by announcing new tariffs on additional U.S. products.

Police checkpoints in dispute

By The Associated Press

Police will block roads to catch drunken drivers over the Fourth of July weekend in some states, but not in Oregon and Michigan, where courts recently ruled that the tactic was unconstitutional.

In Florida, state police shun roadblocks despite a favorable state Supreme Court ruling in February.

'We do not employ them because of manpower limitations," said Wayne Evans of the Florida Highway Patrol's legal office. "We feel that a better use of our people is on roving patrol.'

Like the state courts, law enforcement officials disagree about roadblocks. Some police departments believe they have an important deterrent effect, even if they produce few arrests.

"Roadblocks themselves are essential in overall law enforcement because of the high visibility," says Bill Wilson, spokesman for the Georgia State Patrol.

In Michigan, Wayne County Circuit Judge Michael R. Stacey issued a permanent injunction on June 24, saying police check lanes violated Fourth Amendment guarantees against unlawful searches. The state has not decided whether to appeal.

The Oregon Court of Appeals, the state's second-highest court, ruled June 11 that sobriety checkpoints violate the state constitution's protections against unreasonable and seizure. The attorney general is appealing the decision.

Portland lawyer Robert Durham, who represented a woman who was tested at a checkpoint but not arrested, said the ruling followed precedents that "individualized suspicion" should be required to justify police stops.

In Portland in 1985, there were 3,029 arrests for drunken driving, of which nine were made at checkpoints. At the checkpoint which generated the lawsuit, police stopped more than 1,000 drivers and made two arrests

Florida's Supreme Court ruled: "The state's compelling interest in protecting the public from drunk drivers outweighs any minimal intrusion into their privacy which a proper roadblock procedure might Florida's court, like others which have upheld roadblocks, said they must conform to uniform written guidelines. In some states, such as North Carolina, advance notice of a roadblock is required.

The U.S. Supreme Court has not ruled on such roadblocks, but implied in a 1979 case that they are acceptable. Ruling in Delaware vs.

Prouse, the court said police may not selectively stop drivers who are not suspected of breaking any law.

In a different context, the Supreme Court ruled in 1975 that immigration agents could not randomly stop vehicles to search for illegal aliens, but in 1976 the court upheld the use of roadblocks for that purpose.

In Massachusetts, where a challenge to roadblocks is working its way through the courts, state police plan to have four roadblocks over the Fourth of July and Boston police plan two, said Jon Robbins of the state Executive Office of Public

In 1985, Massachusetts conducted 127 roadblocks and stopped 50,541 cars, and arrested 550 people for drunken driving. Through June 15 of this year, 39,045 cars had been stopped at 81 roadblocks, with 427 arrests

Manion inferior judicial prospect

Thanks to parliamentary procedures, the nation's courts have been saved from the appointment of an inferior prospect to the federal court system.

Indiana lawyer Daniel Manion has been the subject of a bitter debate following his nomination by President Reagan to the federal district court system. Those defending Manion include the president and Attorney General Edwin Meese III. Those opposing the debate include the deans of about 40 law schools throughout the nation.

By switching his vote to "yes,"

Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., was able to delay the confirmation. Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., had demanded an immediate vote.

The administration charges the opposition's main reason is that Manion is a conservative. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said in televised proceedings that Reagan should be able to nominate conservatives due to his overwhelming victory in the last election.

But Sen. Joseph Biden said the issue was one of competency, using examples of poorly written case briefs and opinions.

But one may also wonder if Manion would have even been nominated if not for his conservative leanings.

Regardless, nomination by political ideology ignores every principle behind the "checks and balances" system taught to students from their first introduction to the governmental struc-

Vietnam memorial long overdue

While the United States honors the Statue of Liberty's 100th birthday this Fourth of July weekend, construction will begin on a Junction City monument honoring veterans of the Vietman War.

A ground-breaking ceremony on the Kansas Vietnam Memorial will take place at 1:30 p.m. Friday in the park at Sixth and Washington streets. The memorial, dedicated to all Kansans who served and died in the Vietnam War, will include more than 700 names, many of which were part of Fort Riley's 1st Infantry Division sent over in 1963.

A fund drive, called Kansas Operation Memorial, was started to raise money for the $50,000 memorial. As of June 1, just over $12,000 had been raised. Even though City Manager William Zoeller said "a lot of money has come in since that time," it appears that more support is needed to help pay for the black granite monument.

It has been 13 years since the Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Vietnam pact was signed in early 1973. Enough time has passed for the veterans of the Vietnam War to be honored for their patriotic service to the country.

The memorial is a large step toward showing appreciation. States without a Vietnam memorial should take notice of the fine gesture shown by concerned Kansans.

Humanity displaced for 'efficiency'

So the House of Representatives has passed a bill approving aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. To hear the president and supporting members of Congress speak, one could easily conclude that they have totally forgotten the content of the bill: $100 million in aid to an inadequate band of guerillas composed mainly of leftover supporters of the corrupt Samoza regime which no other faction in Nicaragua, including the Sandinistas, the Miskite Indians, nor the general population, seems to want.

Despite the president being refused the opportunity to twist arms in a speech in front of the House of Representatives, and the refusal of NBC, CBS and ABC to carry the speech he did make, the president's oneman, one-sided publicity stunt did reach the

A congressman is reported to have changed his vote to "yes" on the Contra aid issue after the president took the time to meet with him personally. He had never met a president in person before, and said he was so much in awe of meeting this glorious god-like figure that he couldn't refuse to do what was asked of him. Who says an old actor can't still perform, even if it's not at doing the job he's supposed to be doing?

On a radio news broadcast, I heard reports of the president praising the "bilateral unification toward U.S. foreign policy."

I heard a congressman, in an interview,

KALE BALDOCK Guest Columnist

praise the "efficiency" the congressional system has demonstrated in getting the Contra aid bill through. If I'm not mistaken, he likened the working of the House of Representatives to the working of a welloiled machine.

But what about the issue? It's as if the bill could have been to abolish left-handed, blond children of German decent, and it wouldn't have made any difference as long as the process had been carried out "efficiently.

The idea of efficiency at all costs, though it sounds incredibly paradoxical, is nonetheless a pervasive attitude in our modern American culture. Sure, dump your waste into the rivers - it costs too much to refine it or dispose of it safely.

Put as much plastic into an automobile as you possibly can (even internal engine parts) - they're cheaper to produce that way. They break down and wear out sooner, which means more sales. The long-term costs to our environment from such an attitude are bound to be unspeakably tragic.

But what about now? This efficiency philosophy has clearly run away with the minds of many of our most powerful politicians. The real tragedy is that the product of human life is immediately at stake. This is the desired product of the current trend toward "political efficiency."

The government is not investing in plastic timing gears for Chrysler engines. The government is investing in senseless torture and killing, which the Contras have been propagating and will continue to do so until they are either irradicated by the Sandinistan army (the most powerful in Central America), or are given a massive shot in the arm in the form of a full-scale U.S. military invasion.

In my opinion, this whole situation with Nicaragua is inevitably headed toward a U.S. invasion. President Reagan knows it. Secretary of State Shultz knows it. They are just being careful not to fill us in on how, after we've committed $100 million to a lost cause (most of which won't even make it to Nicaragua, judging from what has happened to the money we've already sent), we will be in too deep to pull out, and will have to com-

Oh well, I'm sure it will all be carried out quite "efficiently."

Kale Baldock is a graduate in educational psychology.

Sandinistan oppression unfounded

Dan Walter began his guest column concerned about "a grossly distorted view of our president and his interests in Nicaragua." He then proceeded to write what could be judged only as a perfect example of "a grossly distorted view.

The first distortion is that he does not state the reality of who it is he "represents."

"Americans for Biblical Government" is the political arm of the Great Commission International, and, according to former insiders, does not exist outside of that rightwing, fundamentalist association of 30 to 50 churches centered around college campuses.

Walter's assertions about oppression of certain factions by the Nicaraguan government simply cannot be substantiated. The government admitted mistakes in relocating Miskito Indians, but the policy was stopped and amends were made, and all were allowed to return.

The so-called oppression of the Conservative Catholics comes from a bishop who has condemned the relatively minor civil problems but has never spoken out against the violent atrocities of the Contras.

And as for evangelical protestants, their claims simply do not stand up in the face of overwhelming testimony of the thousands of Americans (including over a hundred Kansans) who have been to Nicaragua and state that the church has been, and is a part of the government, and a part of the very good and helpful changes that have been made, even though Walter would claim that "communists don't work that way." But he hasn't been there; these others have! Even distribution of Bibles has more than tripled since the Sandinistas took over

Walter suggests the need for "responsible government" in Nicaragua. Please consider the following:

Infant mortality was reduced more than half - 58 per 1,000 compared to 120 per 1,000 under Samoza; malaria was reduced 40 percent and polio eliminated in 1982; there are 309 health centers compared to 56 under Samoza; Nicaragua was named "Model Country in Health Care" in 1983 by the World Health Organization.

Also, 88 percent are now literate compared to 48 percent under Samoza; 17,000 Adult Education Centers have been established: women's rights have been enacted with equal pay for equal work, allowing 60 percent of pay four weeks before and six weeks after Plus, seven parties participated in the elections with free TV and radio time for all and 91 percent of all registered voters voting. The Sandinistas were elected with 67 percent of the vote. The Sandinistas have the consent of the governed, to which Walter said "Amen" as a principle. So be it.

Finally, the issue of what is biblical government must be seriously considered. Are there biblical values that suggest the only solution to the problem is to "hire" an army to attack, kill and maim peasants, farmers, women and children, and destroy schools, farms and food co-ops?

No! If that is the only solution (and it is what the Contras have done and will do with "our" money), then no one should try to claim that it is a biblical solution! Biblical government would speak of justice, mercy, love of enemy, compassion, liberty, feeding the hungry and caring for the poor.

The policy of the Reagan administration is the real "grossly distorted view" and will again force a small country that would be our friend, to be our enemy and seek aid and support from those some say are our enemies. Senseless deaths will again be our misery and this simply is not, nor can ever be claimed as biblical.

If you really want to know about Nicaragua, speak to Susan Angle or Don Fallon. They have both been there since April. Or speak to Jan and Neil Flora — they have been there many times. They have views based on personal experience, on facts, on reality.

Wage cuts prompt union worker's strike

ARKANSAS CITY - Union workers struck the Ark City Packing Co. after the company demanded a wage cut and reduced benefits.

Local 340 of the United Food and Commercial Workers Union set up picket lines early Tuesday over a company offer to cut wages by $1.50 an hour.

Ike Clark, union local chairman, said about 350 of the plant's 430 production workers are members of the union.

The union had sought a raise in base pay from $8.50 and hour to $9.50 over a three-year period with no changes in benefits. Clark and Ted Steadman, spokesman for plant owner John Morrell and Co., said no new talks were scheduled.

Steadman said the plant has been operating on a limited basis by supervisors and non-union workers.

Blind man blames dog for reckless driving

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - William David Bowen insisted that he couldn't be charged with driving under the influence of alcohol because he wasn't the real driver of the car - his dog was.

The 34-year-old Louisville man is legally blind.

Bowen was arrested April 26 when officers spotted his car weaving in the road. They didn't believe that he was blind and charged him with driving under the influence, reckless driving and having no operator's license.

"When he was down taking a Breathalyzer test, he refused it and said 'The only reason I'm refusing is because I wasn't driving. He was,' and he pointed to his dog, an Alaskan Malamute named Sir Anheuser Busch II, which he called Bud," said David Kaplan, Bowen's attorney.

Arresting officers said Bowen had gone about a mile after leaving a tavern where he had an argument with his girlfriend, who left leaving behind Bowen, the dog and 'When the place closed, I had to get the car home somehow,' Bowen said in court May 28.

He said in court that Bud was in the passenger seat and barked to tell him the colors of each traffic light he approached. When reminded that dogs are color blind, Bowen said Bud had been trained to distinguish changing lights.

"What he told me was that he had taught the dog to tell green (stoplights) from red," said Kaplan. "He would bark twice for green and once for red and the dog would help him. He's not totally blind but has peripheral vision and can make out a form on either end of his eyes.

Chileans stop work in military rule protest

SANTIAGO, Chile - Tens of thousands of shopkeepers, truckers and bus drivers stopped work Wednesday to protest military rule. Three people were reported killed by gunfire and scores were arrested.

Factories, mines, ports, banks and government offices remained open, but the shortage of buses in Santiago and Conception, the two largest urban areas, forced thousands of commuters to walk or hitchhike.

Waitresses wearing gas masks served tables in a cafe near the downtown Plaza de Armas as riot police fired tear gas and water cannons to scatter hundreds of demonstrators.

Strike leaders called it a successful first round in their battle to drive Gen. Augusto Pinochet from the presidency he seized in a bloody military coup in September 1973. They said the strike would continue Thursday.

'Many Chileans, in spite of their fear of reprisals, are demonstrating peacefully their desire for a return to democracy," said Juan Luis Gonzalez, president of a twomonth-old Civic Assembly that called the strike. "This is the beginning of the beginning in our campaign of civil disobedience."

Two young men and a 13-year-old girl died in slum neighborhoods patrolled by the army. The government news agency ORBE said all were killed by gunfire from utility vans not further identified. The Rev. Liam Holohan, a Roman Catholic priest, said police shot one young man in the back when he refused to halt during a 2-5 a.m. curfew.

Wheat leads decline in commodity prices

TOPEKA - Slumping commodity prices, led by an alarming drop in the price of wheat, sent the index of farm prices tumbling in Kansas during June, the state Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said Tuesday.

The all-farm products index sank to 129 percent of the 1977 base year, down 11 points from May and off 18 points from June of 1985.

Wheat led the decline, falling 81 cents a bushel from $2.99 in May to an average of just $2.18 in mid-June

That price was 75 cents below what wheat was bringing in Kansas in June 1985, and the lowest since September 1977. "An abundant supply of new crop wheat coupled with large carryover stocks are responsible for the price decline," the service said in its monthly report. While less dramatic, declines in prices were almost across the board on other commodities as well between May and June. The average price for corn fell a dime a bushel to $2.52; sorghum slipped 18 cents a bushel to $3.84, and soybeans were down two cents a hundredweight at $5.10. A year earlier, corn was bringing $2.80, sorghum $4.51 and soybeans $5.66.

Luggage bomb explodes at airline counter

MADRID - A bomb planted in luggage exploded Wednesday at the El Al Israel Airlines counter at Barajas Airport, and police said at least three people, including a police officer, were injured.

Police said one of the injured was an "Arab-looking" man who was believed to be the owner of the luggage. They said he was under arrest. An El Al employee also was hurt, they said. The explosion occurred at 3:30 p.m. (8:30 a.m. CDT), 15 minutes before the weekly

El Al Flight 396 was to depart for Tel Aviv. The national news agency EFE quoted an employee of the Mexican airlines, Aeromexico, as saying an El Al employee took the suitcase containing the bomb off a conveyor belt when he saw smoke pouring from it. EFE quoted the Aeromexico employee as saying the El Al worker shouted to people standing nearby before the suitcase exploded, injuring him. The El Al check-in counter is not separated from the other counters in the international terminal Spanish National Radio said damage was extensive and that smoke filled a large part of the airport's international terminal. In Tel Aviv, El Al spokesman Nachman Kleiman, told The Associated Press that only an El Al employee was injured.

Kleiman said early reports indicated the bomb was planted in a bag carried by the last passenger to be checked in for Flight 396. The passenger was not hurt, he said. "The only one that was injured was one of our own people, very lightly in tha hand," Kleiman said. He said the bomb appeared to have been "something as small as an aerosol can.' Israel radio said the bomb was to have been smuggled onto Flight 396. Last April 17, an Irishwoman with explosives in her carry-on luggage was stopped shortly before boarding an El Al flight at London's Heathrow Airport. Police said the explosives had been planted by her Arab boyfriend.

Earlier today, the Israeli ambassador to Spain, Samuel Haddas, arrived in Madrid from Tel Aviv on an El Al flight.

Sean Missick, 2, talks to the goat at the children's section of Sunset Zoo. Missick was enjoying the opportunity to pet and feed the farmyard animals at the zoo.

Imagine standing in a small field with a little rock pool where two black swans are gliding peacefully across the still water. Beyond the pool, there is something moving in the tall grass.

Suddenly - a small marsupial animal, startled by a sound, pauses from its grazing long enough to pop its head up. The animal, a wallaby, sees that the surroundings at the Sunset Zoo appear safe and continues feeding on the tall grass.

Wallabies, four to be exact, are the latest additions to Manhattan's Sunset Zoo population. The three males and one female were born in a New Zealand park about two years some of the money for the wallabies and new facilities. Endowments, promotions and donations were the main resources of money for the zoo.

Manhattan businesses helped raise

"KQLA wanted the zoo to buy kangaroos and call them Q-Roos," Steve Matthews, zoo curator, said.

Zoo officials decided to buy wallabies instead because they are heartier and could adapt to Kansas climate better than kangaroos; however, the wallabies have had a few problems.

"Since they were shipped from New Zealand, they had some stomach problems and we had to medicate them," Matthews said.

After arriving, the wallabies were kept inside for a time until their health improved, making it two

> The wallabies are accustomed to people and are very tame, Matthews said. The zoo has built new facilities located on some abandoned grass land next to the camel exhibit so people can see the wallabies better.

Wallabies haven't been the only recent addition to the Sunset Zoo.

The zoo has received a grant to hire a veterinary technician and a horticulturist, Matthews said. The horticulturist will be designing plans for long-range floral gardens. The veterinary technician will check the animals daily to keep a "close animal health observation."

Currently, the zoo staff is unable to watch the animals as closely as it would like. The staff checks on the animals when they are fed and clean the cages, but there is no one to keep a close watch over the animals

An additional change that may take place if the Quality of Life bond issue passes Aug. 5 is the removal of the animal shelter. If the bond passes, the animal shelter would be moved to another location, Matthews said.

"The problem with the animal shelter is that the dogs are unhealthy and the zoo animals are healthy. People come in to see the dogs, pet them and carry the diseases out to the zoo animals," he said. "If the bond passes, money will be there to build a new shelter.

Another problem with having the shelter at the zoo is that the zoo cannot be accredited.

"We have to be accredited to trade animals with other zoos, but we can't be with the shelter here," Matthews

Still, the zoo is able to maintain what seems to be an impressive variety of animals. There are the usual lions, tigers, bears and monkeys. ## Athletic directors hope athletes mold into 'Total Persons'

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

The recent tragedies and scandals in the college athletic world have left a huge black eye on the entire system. The list of assailants reads like a who's who of big time athletics.

Len Bias recently collapsed and died of cocaine intoxication in his University of Maryland dorm suite while celebrating his being drafted No. 2 in the National Basketball Association college draft by the world champion Boston Celtics.

Jan Kemp received more than $1 million dollars from the University of Georgia for being dismissed from her job as director of the remedial studies program because she complained that athletes were being allowed to compete when they were not meeting minimum requirements.

Several Texas Christian University athletes, including Heisman Trophy candidate, Kenneth Davis, were dismissed from the Horned Frog football team for admittingly accepting cash payments from a wealthy oil tycoon booster.

The Memphis State basketball team has a head coach, Dana Kirk, accused of being involved in organized gambling. Their athletic department was caught giving out more money to scholarship athletes than NCAA rules stipulate. A recent NBA No. 1 draft choice, William Bedford, was caught driving a university booster's luxury car around town for personal use. And, only three of the last 45 basketball players to attend Memphis State earned degrees none were black.

These are just a few of the scandals that have made the headlines of recent sports pages.

K-State has instituted a program for its athletes to help dismiss some of the pressures and problems facing Wildcat athletes - the Total Person Program.

K-State Athletic Director Larry Travis was in charge of a similiar program at Georgia Tech, where he was an assistant athletic director under Homer Rice, designed to help alleviate some of the scores of problems that confront today's college athlete. Assistant Athletic Director Steve Miller was chosen by Travis to run the Total Person program when Travis was named to the K-State job. The program is more elaborate and incorporates more facets than at Travis' previous stint.

"It is designed to enhance the athlete's opportunity for education outside of the classroom and the athletic field," Miller said. "It is a program designed to give an athlete a number of opportunities that don't have to do with the academic knowledge and the athletic knowledge. While Miller admits there is no way of policing athletes 24-hours a day, he said the University is working on preventing problems before they arise instead of discussing ways to rectify a situation after it happens.

The Total Person program not only counsels athletes about drug usage and alcohol, but also teaches such things as employment interview techniques, table manners, and establishing a financial package upon graduation.

But, everyone is now talking about the drug of the 80s - cocaine.

"Obviously cocaine will be an issue of impact this (next) year but the truth of the matter is it was no different last year." Miller said. "The only reason it is any different now is that there has been some highprofiled problems.

"The cocaine problem is no greater or smaller this year than it was a year ago, I believe, there has just been more attention drawn to

Although not specifically under Miller's jurisdiction, the current athletic department officials keep computer run-outs on athletes classroom progress and study hall attendance. The Academic Counseling program keeps an accurate tab on how well athletes are advancing toward their desired degrees.

"You want to practice preventative measures, not post measures," Miller said. "You want to recognize the problem before it oc-

Miller said it is easy to address problems after they happen, as in the case of Maryland developing task forces to investigate drug usage on campus and athletes educational progress after the wake of the Bias investigation.

"We want to address potential problems before they happen," Miller said. "Hell, it is not difficult to say 'geez, look we have a problem, let's address it."

K-State was one of the forerunners in college athletics by initiating drug testing several years ago. Miller said the University's policy is when an athlete is tested positive for recreational drugs it is kept between the administrating doctor and the athlete.

On the second offense, the coach of the athlete's respective sport is notified, and the third offense results in loss of scholarship or playing time depending on the coach's discretion.

'This whole idea about drug testing is still very, very vague and very gray in the sense that the NCAA is still having difficulties in pinning down what is to be tested for, what the reactions should and should not be, and how we should handle these situations," he said. "It is not a cut-and-dried issue." K-State is entering the second year of the programs and Miller is hoping that a little prevention goes a long

"The idea of the programs is to practice preventative measures to allow the athlete...to give the athlete every available opportunity to succeed. We have a responsibility to those athletes and our responsibility is not limited solely to their performance on the field. These are people, and the idea in the Total Person program is you're coaching people not events or sports.

For K-State crew coach Don Rose, getting the Big Eight Championship trophy in the men's varsity eight competition more than a month late still tastes sweet.

Rose and the K-State crew's varsity eight squad won the Big Eight Championship's race "by three feet" at Lawrence in May only to have Kansas protest the race on the grounds they were misdirected by the race official, and thus insufficiently able to win the race.

The contingent of referees at the championships voted to re-row the race, which Rose and the Wildcat rowers declined to do.

'We had several reasons we did not re-row," Rose said. "We did not interfere with their boat, the referee instructed them to move over. And we felt medically it was a real bad decision...It was the last race of the day. Our people rowed pretty hard to win that thing and I didn't think they national level with a meeting in Indianapolis, Ind., by the judge/referee committee of the National Rowing Association. He was informed of the decision on Tuesday!

"I think it is a right decision," Rose said. "Why should we suffer. when they rowed their guts out. If indeed the referee telling them (KU) to move sideways cost them, it is unfortunate. But, it is still not the fault of, the other team involved."

Rose said the two crews came, close together and Kansas was forced to steer closer to the shore. Kansas, immediately following the race, protested the decision because the crew was forced to move and they said it cost them the race.

Kansas claimed its team was forced to move, when in effect, it should have been K-State's crew who should have been told to move.

"Their coach was talking about it during the race," Rose said. "We: moved into the middle more but after the early part of the race the crews were close sideways. We won the Lennell Moore, a 1985 Indiana University recruit out of Allen County Community College, is on campus this summer trying to become eligible to play at K-State next season.

Moore, who will be a junior athletically, played his first year of collegiate basketball at Porterville (Calif.) College before transferring to Allen County. At Allen County, the 6-7 forward averaged approximately 10 points and 10 rebounds per game according to his coach, Neil Crane.

He was unable to receive a scholarship to Indiana because he lacked some school hours to gain admission.

"He has to do a good job in summer classes and at that point we will evaluate him," Coach Lon Kruger said. "He is more of a finesse-type player. He shoots the ball pretty well and can get some rebounds.

Another possible addition to next season's team is Atchison High standout guard Dale Birch. Birch, who averaged more than 20 points per game, is interested in walking on to the Wildcat program.

"We've talked to him about it and he seemed pretty interested," Kruger said. "It sounds like at the moment he will come, but I'm sure a lot of people will be talking to him."

Hagler surprises ex-champ Leonard with retirement option

By The Associated Press

BROCKTON, Mass. - Marvelous Marvin Hagler, earning top dollar at the top of his sport, surprised the boxing world Wednesday by saying he may retire as undisputed middleweight champion rather than fight Sugar Ray Leonard.

Facing perhaps the biggest payday of his lucrative career, Hagler said his family's wishes for him to stop fighting and his desire to quit while healthy have led him to think "very seriously" about retiring.

"I just need a little bit more time" to consider the future, Hagler said at a news conference at which it was thought he would accept the offer by Leonard, who said he would come out of retirement to fight Hagler.

"My mother, my grandmother and my wife have always been looking forward to the day when I can finally give up the game of boxing," said the 32-year old Hagler. "I've made enough money in the game.

Goody Petronelli, Hagler's co-manager, said he hoped a decision would be made within a month. Bob Arum, promoter of all Hagler's fights since 1979, said he feels that decision will be to retire.

"He's given a lot to boxing," Arum said. "It takes a lot out of him in the sense that he has to be away from his family for so long, the training, etc. He may not retire but my betting after this is that he will."

"He just wants to keep happiness at home," Pat Petronelli, Hagler's other comanager, said. "That's his decision to make, whether he wants the happiness or whether he wants to wipe out Sugar Ray Leonard."

Leonard, the former welterweight champion who has fought just once in the past 52 months, has said he would come out of retirement only to fight Hagler this year. His camp was stunned by Hagler's announcement.

Mike Trainer, Leonard's lawyer, said he had spoken Wednesday with his fighter before Hagler's announcement and discussed the possible options.

"That's one we never talked about," Trainer said.

"But of course he never really said he was retiring. So we are back where we were 60 days ago, when Leonard said he wanted to fight him," Trainer said. "He (Hagler) is a sincere man, an honest guy and we have to take him at his word."

Arum said Hagler was not simply giving Leonard a dose of his own medicine. On Nov. 9, 1982, Leonard attended a black-tie affair at which he was expected to say he would fight Hagler, who was in attendance. Instead, Leonard announced his retirement.

"I really don't believe that to be the case," Arum said when asked if Hagler was getting back at Leonard. "I believe that he was about to say he'd actually announce his retirement and then decided that he would leave the door open in case he has second

Coleman takes lesser of two evils with 'Cats

The saga of Norris Coleman almost took another dramatic twist last week in the wake of the University of Maryland's former basketball star Len Bias' sudden death. Coleman came to K-State last year to play basketball and what the 24-year-old Army veteran got was a whole mess of trouble from the National Collegiate Athletic Association. A mess that resulted in the NCAA deciding that because of Coleman's six-year-old high school grades, he could go somewhere else and play the sport he loves immediately, or stay at K-State and sit out almost a year before he could play.

For a man of his age, that decision seemed natural. If a path was to be beaten into professional basketball, it appeared the NCAA had decided Coleman should leave K-State to follow his dreams.

And Norris agreed. Left with the options, Coleman was ready to pack his bags and take his spectacular jump shooting and rebounding show to Maryland.

But at the last moment Coleman stuck with the Wildcats. Talk of loyalty and love of the Wildcat fans were the supposed reasons for Coleman's decision, but more likely Coleman is staying because of a strong confidence that he can gain an injunction on the NCAA ruling which states he has to sit out until Feb. 27, 1987, and stay at the school he loves.

Despite the probable suit which would make Coleman eligible for next season, Coleman's decision has, ironically, turned out to be much less trouble than heading for Maryland. And the last thing Coleman wants is more problems — he left the Army to play basketball and get a college education. The only attention he sought was the attention his unique talents would bring him, not attention from the ills of college athletics.

Coleman was wooed by some of the great collegiate basketball talents of today and yesterday. Kenny "Sky" Walker at Kentucky, Artis Gilmore from Jacksonville and Len Bias from Maryland all became involved in the recruitment of Coleman.

What Coleman decided was that all the great talent a school could throw at him wouldn't sway his decision. After all, Coleman has proven he can play with the best of Coleman chose Maryland for the same reason he chose K-State - its coach. When Jack Hartman resigned at K-State, Coleman was very disappointed, but Maryland's Charles "Lefty" Driesell represented a leadership figure who could replace Hart-

The waves Bias' death from a cocaine overdose are generating are getting bigger every day at Maryland.

And the next victim of Bias' death might be the coach which almost impressed Coleman enough to leave a school he loves. Charges that Driesell is too tolerant to drug usage and unsatisfactory educational progress by his players might be leading to Driesell's firing as basketball coach at Maryland.

This is not the first time the Maryland basketball program has had a problem with drugs. The past few years have been spotted with arrests and other drug related incidents concerning Driesell's players

And those problems might be catching up to the flamboyant coach. Norris Coleman was almost sucked into those turbulent waves of controversy at Maryland.

Coleman is no doubt sighing with relief as the criminal investigation of Bias' death possibly includes the lifestyles of some people who would have been Coleman's teammates at Maryland.

With all of that in mind, I'm sure a little court battle with the NCAA must seem like small patotoes to a kind young man who doesn't have a large ego, says few bad words about anyone, is a hard worker on and off of the basketball court, and just wants to play basketball and get an education.

There are many problems with college athletics, but none can be greater than when an overzealous rule enforcement organization and an incident involving substance abuse can nearly suck under an innocent young man and possibly ruin a very promising career.

That isn't the point of college athletics.

As it turned out, deciding to stay at K-State might just have been one of the wisest decisions of Norris Coleman's life - there must be times when Coleman thinks how much simpler things would have been if he had just stayed in the Army.

Tax code revisions to affect state laws

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Federal tax overhaul would result in sharply higher state taxes in more than half the states unless rates in those states are lowered to match expected changes in the federal tax code.

Many states haven't calculated the fallout, but at least nine predict revenue increases from higher taxes totaling more than $100 million a year under provisions of the Senatepassed tax bill.

The increases could be as much as 10 percent to 20 percent in many states, depending on how state taxes are tied to federal levies. New York, for example, would tax its citizens an extra $2 billion, some officials say. Kansas would collect an extra $120 million.

In all, an Associated Press survey shows that federal tax overhaul proposals, if enacted by Congress as expected this fall, would result in higher state taxes in at least states, regardless of whether individuals would be helped or hurt on their federal returns.

The result could be legislative disputes over whether to roll back

"Tax policy will be one of if not the major issue for state legislatures in 1987." said Gerald Miller, director of the National Association of State Budget Officers. "This is not an issue that can be swept under the rug. They can't ignore it.'

Michigan officials are already moving to lower rates, and a similar proposal is under study in New York.

A few states - principally Nebraska, Vermont and Rhode Island - have an even thornier problem: They calculate personal income taxes as a percentage of federal tax liability, and so the federal changes would cut revenues if officials do not halt the tax loss.

Both the House and Senate have approved lower tax rates and a conference committee is meeting later this month to forge a compromise that is likely to eliminate or reduce many tax advantages.

Grassland provides living laboratory

Konza Prairie Research Natural Area. Clark traps the mice on a regular computer to aid in studying the effects of the environment on the mice.

By KEVIN CHESTNUT

Collegian Reporter The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area gives ecologists a unique opportunity to study the tallgrass prairie.

The prairie, which remains largely untouched by man or machinery, is a living laboratory with blue skies, tall grass and clear streams that contrast sharply with the cold, sterile atmosphere found in many research labs.

This summer, four graduate students in the Division of Biology have been awarded graduate summer fellowships to study various ecological niches of the Konza Prairie.

Donald Kaufman, associate director of the Konza Prairie, said this area represents the world's largest tract of tallgrass prairie set . aside for ecological research.

"The Konza Prairie provides a unique experimental laboratory for scientists and students to study the interactions of complex biological communities and other environmental factors such as soil, climate, fire and topography," Kaufman said.

Bryon Clark, graduate in biology, is conducting research on the prairie this summer.

"I'll be studying primarily the white-footed mouse, the deer mouse, the prairie vole, the west harvest mouse and the short-tailed shrew," Clark said.

His research will show the effect that burning, a common ranching practice, has on small mammals. To accomplish this, Clark has selected a 13-hectare grid with different topographic qualities and divided it into two sections.

The mammals that live within the area are humanely captured. identfied and tagged and then returned to the area they came from. One-half of the grid will be burned every four years. After the area is burned, the animals are recaputerd and counted, Clark

This shows how quickly small mammals will repopulate an area after a rancher burns the habitat. Contrary to popular opinion, the mice aren't killed in the fire. The mice simply move to another place before they come back to their original home, he said.

Another student researching on the prairie this summer is Karen Hooker, graduate in biology.

She will be studying the chemistry of King's Creek, a stream cutting through part of the nature area.

King's Creek is a good source of basic data because of the low nitrate levels in it. Nitrate is associated with pollution, which is a common problem in many streams, Hooker said.

Pollution in streams whose water ultimately ends up being used for irrigation or human consumption, is an important issue for scientists to research. Water in streams is filtered somewhat by algae and the sediments in the stream itself, Hooker said.

The late Lloyd Hulbert, professor of biology and world-renowned ecologist, was instrumental in acquiring the Konza Prairie. In 1971, when the first parcel of the prairie was deeded to the Endowment Association by the Nature Conservancy, Hulbert said that everything humans do to land causes many ecological effects.

Rocky Ford site of Army rescue

From staff and wire reports

A man and woman swept away in a paddle boat were pulled to safety by an Army helicopter crew just above the falls at Rocky Ford on the Blue River early Saturday. Richard Caron, a soldier from Fort Riley, and Laurie Henshall, Wichita, spent more than two hours clinging to a tree at the edge of the falls, in a paddle boat they had put in about a mile upstream at River Pond.

The combination of a swift current and winds gusting to 40 miles an hour apparently put the boat out of control and swept it to the falls, located on the edge of Manhattan.

Just a few feet above the falls, they roped their boat to a large, dead cottonwood tree and held on until the helicopter arrived from Fort Riley shortly after 11 a.m.

Sgt. Jack Hastings, an Army medic, pulled them ashore while clinging to the helicopter in what observers called an extraordinary act of heroism.

As the helicopter maneuvered within a foot of the water, Hastings jumped out, securing himself to the aircraft with a "monkey strap" that is used to hoist people to safe-

Spec. Mark Rayner, a member of the helicopter rescue crew, said Hastings then untied the rope holding the 10-foot aluminum paddle boat to the tree and "got a good grip and wrapped himself in the (boat's) rope.

As Hastings held on, the helicopter, piloted by Warrant Officer Mark Low, slowly pulled the paddle boat to the west side of the river, about 100 yards upstream.

2nd Lt. Gregory Carroll, co-pilot of the MAST 177 helicopter rescue unit, said that because of the size of the tree and its angling limbs, there was a clearance of only about two or three feet for the copter's

"It was very tricky because the wind was not directly off our nose," he said.

The current swept Hastings downstream when he jumped into the water and away from the paddle boat, and he had to be maneuvered back into position by the helicopter.

"Them boys put their lives on the line," Pottawatomie County Deputy Sheriff Robert Baker said of the Army crew. "The guys flying the helicopter did a tremendous job as close to the water as they got. The wind was really blowing. Baker said the boaters' chances for survival would have been minimal if they had been swept over the falls. Baker said at first officials thought they might shut down the tubes at the old dam and try to rescue the couple by boat. But the water was moving at 15,000 cubic feet per second, too swift to safely attempt the rescue that way.

The Army helicopter arrived at 11:02 a.m., 30 minutes after its help was requested, and Carroll said the rescue took about 15 minutes.

Other than the lake incident, a dispatcher for the RCPD said nothing major had happened in the county during the Fourth of July weekend, similar to hospital

According to emergency room personnel at The Saint Mary Hospital, there were "just a couple of injuries related to fireworks."

"I guess everyone was just more careful," a hospital spokeswoman

Survey discloses correlation between grades, DUI arrests

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

The fall 1985 grade point average for K-State students arrested for driving under the influence was 1.99; however, the all-University GPA was 2.79, according to a recent study conducted by Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service.

"This difference in GPAs leads me to believe alcohol is having a definite effect on GPAs and is probably affecting student retention as well," said Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service.

Arck conducted a study of the 1985 fall semester GPAs of students arrested for DUI during that term, and is currently finishing the results for the 1986 spring semester.

Arck said this could be a doubleedged situation. "Maybe the students are drinking because they have bad grades causing more grade problems."

DUI refers to charges filed by law enforcement officials against persons operating or attempting to operate a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicants, stimulants, depressants or controlled or illegal substances.

Between August and December 1985, 44 students were arrested for DUI in Riley County. The national average estimates that only 1 in 2,000 drunken drivers is arrested, Arck said. When applied to the campus statistics, the results show the possibility for as many as 88,000 drunken student drivers on the roads in Riley County, Arck said.

All totaled, there were 375 arrests for DUI in Riley County last year, Arck said. If that statistic is compared with the national average, there could be as many as 750,000 drunken drivers on Riley County roads, he said.

"Just knowing those statistics makes me buckle up when I get in the car," he said.

According to Arck, there were approximately 150 fewer arrests for DUI in 1985 than in 1984 in Riley County, but he added that even with this decrease, the statistics are still

During the last school year, four University students died in alcoholrelated accidents, he said. The national average estimates that 1 in 10,000 people die in alcohol-related accidents. Arck said this means a K-State student is twice as likely to die in an alcohol-related accident as an average U.S. citizen.

The legal drinking age will increase from 19 to 20 July 1. Arck said a possible consequence of this measure could be that some people under 20 may drive around and drink alcohol because they aren't old enough to go to bars.

"Many people in the alcohol and drug prevention field feel that raising the drinking age wasn't realistic," Arck said. He said he would prefer that stricter laws against DUI be adopted rather than increasing the legal drinking age.

"If you don't believe drunken driving can change your life, just ask Mike Atherton," Arck said.

Atherton is currently serving a three-to-10-year sentence at Lansing State Penitentiary for the 1984 death of Lola Boleck Tucker. Tucker died after an automobile accident with Atherton. Atherton was found guilty of driving under the influence.

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

Despite the recent controversy concerning their safety, extendedwear contact lenses are still widely available in Manhattan.

The lenses were subjected to close scrutiny earlier this year when they were linked to the formation of corneal ulcers.

If the cornea develops an abrasion, and it becomes infected, a bacterial corneal ulcer can develop, said Manhattan ophthalmologist Stanley Lowe. If left unchecked, this infection can lead to a loss of vision, scarring, or total loss of the eye.

The severity of the infection depends on the type of bacteria. Lowe said the most harmful bacteria can cause damage to the eve in as little as eight hours after infection.

He said he has seen one K-State student develop this type of infection.

While most of Manhattan's optometrists still prescribe extendedwear lenses for their patients, Lowe said he never has - and never will prescribe them.

"Contacts act like a bandage over the eye," he said. "When you take them out, you feel it if something is wrong. Since you don't remove the extended-wear lenses as often, you may not know if something is wrong. and in some cases, a corneal ulcer may develop. Lowe said this happens in too many cases for him to feel comfortable about prescribing the extended-wear lenses.

Optometrists interviewed said the biggest problem with extended-wear contacts is not the lenses themselves, but the wearer's failure to follow the instructions exactly, and a lack of follow-up treatment. All Manhattan optometrists who offer the extendedwear lenses have a follow-up pro-

Optometrist Ronald E. Price said he does offer the extended- wear lenses for his patients, but added they aren't the best solution for Lifestyle, eye health, hygiene and mental attitude should be considered when choosing a contact lens, Price said. He said he discusses the pros and cons with his patients and leaves the final choice to the patient.

Optometrist Douglas Stigge said early warning signs to look for include redness of the eye, soreness, itching, mattering or other discom-

Treatment of the ulcer requires medical attention, Stigge said, with corneal ulcers treatable by an ophthalmologist or medical doctor. Stigge said Kansas laws prevent optometrists from prescribing medication of any kind.

Dr. Bruce Oberhelman, also an optometrist, said the trend is shifting toward a harder, gas permeable lens. Oberhelman said this new lens is safer, more durable, less expensive and gives better vision.

But, Oberhelman noted, the Food and Drug Administration has not yet approved gas permeable lenses for overnight wear in the United States, although the lenses are currently available in Canada.

Public OKs tax increase for education, poll states

By The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - A majority of the public is willing to pay higher taxes to boost teacher salaries and improve teacher training, according to a Gallup poll released at Thursday's opening session of the National Education Association's annual conven-

Fifty-nine percent of those surveyed said they would favor more funds for public education and teacher training even if it meant higher taxes.

That compared with 52 percent in 1985, and 45 percent in a similar 1983 survey

The poll also found 54 percent back higher teacher salaries even if that meant higher taxes.

Don Cameron, executive director of the 1.8 million-member NEA, called the NEA-Gallup poll "good news for people who believe in America's public schools.

Asked at a news conference what kind of public backing it would take to actually get higher school taxes, Cameron replied: "I think it's high enough now. I think it was high enough five years ago. But I think by the time the politicians feel comfortable, it would need to be over 90 percent."

Meanwhile, NEA President Mary Hatwood Futrell, in her keynote address to more than 7,000 teacher delegates, urged her the idea of a national board of professional standards proposed in a report last May by the Carnegie Task Force on Education and the Economy

"I believe a national board could offer much to our profession," she said. But she said states should retain the power to license teachers, and state boards should continue to operate. Her position has drawn fire as too timid from her archrival, American Federation of Teachers President Albert Shanker. He has insisted that state certification boards are part of the reason teachers lack the prestige of other professions, such as law and

Still, interviews with several teachers after Futrell's speech suggested that NEA members considered her position sufficiently bold, with several predicting sharp debate on the matter during the convention, which ends Sun-

Meanwhile, in Chicago, where 3,000 American Federation of Teachers delegates were gathering for Friday's start of their biennial convention, AFT leaders called for radical changes in schools to overcome students' "unacceptably mediocre" performance and avert "a backlash against public education."

AFT delegates vote Sunday on the report, "The Revolution That Is Overdue," by 16 union vice union to give qualified support to presidents and local leaders.

Parking tickets increase from last year

By The Collegian Staff

enrollment.

Enrollment figures between the fall semesters of 1984 and 1985 decreased by 522 students, said Don Foster, registrar.

The reason for the increase in parking violations is that violators simply refused to obey the laws, said Sgt. Reese Jackson, head of the traffic section of KSU Police Depart-

"Our biggest problem," Jackson said, "is that people just park their cars without reading the signs or anything.

Students and faculty who are in violation of campus traffic laws pay one of two fines.

Cpl. Andrew Amaro of the traffic enforcement division said most parking fines are the standard $8 fee. The most common violations that require such a fee are parking without a permit, parking in reserved stalls and improper parking.

Improper parking is a broad term, Amaro said, but it can include backing into a parking stall, parking in a driveway or parking on a yellow curb. Other violations, however, can result in a $25 fine.

These violations include blocking a driveway, vehicle, fire hydrant or fire lane; restricting traffic flow; or parking illegally in a handicapped or restricted stall, Amaro said.

Failure to pay fines, or excessive traffic violations in a short period of time can result in an excessive violator ticket. This ticket also carries a $25 fine.

The money collected from these violations, Amaro said, goes directly back into the parking fee fund. The money is then used for road improvement, new traffic signs and additional bike racks. The only way the violations situation can be alleviated is if students assume more responsibility, Jackson

"Students should read the signs and obey them," Jackson said.

Food, festivities end July 4th celebration

By The Associated Press

Americans enjoyed a final fling of the long Fourth of July holiday weekend Sunday with fairs, picnics, and a day at the beach, while others clogged highways on the way back home.

Twenty-four men bellied up to a table Sunday on New York City's Coney Island for the 70th annual Nathan's Famous hot dog eating contest.

"I feel fine, just great, actually," said winner Mark Heller, who crammed down 15½ dogs in 10 minutes at the landmark restaurant. The record is 17 wolfed down in 1978.

Police said they had handled scattered reports of violence but there was no major trouble.

The Chicago bureau of the Associated Press reported the death toll on the nation's streets and highways stood at 350 as the long Independence Day weekend neared an end.

The National Safety Council had estimated that 500 to 600 people could die on the nation's roads between 6 p.m. Thursday and midnight Sunday, local times.

By 4 p.m. EDT Sunday, 350 deaths had been reported, with California accounting for 37 fatalities and Texas 33.

The council estimated that 34 million Americans would travel during the four-day weekend.

Safety Council spokeswoman Carole Unterberg said 530 traffic deaths could be expected to occur during a non-holiday July weekend.

During last year's four-day Fourth of July holiday period, 442 people were killed in trafficrelated accidents. The toll for the last three-day holiday, in 1983, was 447. There was no tally for 1984's one-day Independence Day holiday.

Democrats propose ag plans

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Democrats, after a year of writing and editing, have unveiled what they advertise is a blueprint for future agricultural policy and what they hope will be an attractive political message in the Farm Belt.

The document, prepared by a task force of the House Democratic Caucus, does not advocate an overhaul of federal farm policy. In fact, its main proposals are familiar items from last year's farm bill debate.

But in several respects, Democrats set themselves apart from the current farm program, said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Wichita, who helped prepare the document. The document recommends:

 Targeting of farm subsidies to smaller producers.

More aggressive supply management to help cut commodity surpluses.

 Giving producers an opportunity to vote on farm program options, particularly any proposal for mandatory production controls.

In general, the Democrats suggest that America's depressed farm economy can best be helped by controlling overproduction and at the same time pursuing a tougher trade policy to expand overseas markets, fighting foreign agricultural subsidies and promoting U.S. farm exports.

In addition, the document expresses support for agricultural extension programs, more forbearance by lenders for debt-plagued farmers, agricultural research including expansion of the ethanol industry and greater hunger relief efforts using U.S. farm products.

"We were not writing the recipe or the chemical equation for a major new experiment here," said Glickman, a member of the Agriculture Committee. "We were basically designing the outlines of Rep. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., the chairman of the task force, said the document represents a roadmap of "where Democrats ought to go.

"It will be used as a blueprint, not necessarily one that will not allow a variance of some kind as we write agricultural policy in the future, but it is one that we find common agreement so it will be one on which we base future legislation," Daschle said.

The document blames the "last five years of Republican policies" for agriculture's woes, but is careful not to sharply criticize the 1985 farm law which Democrats helped write.

"The 1985 Food Security Act sets farm programs moving in a new direction, but is is not a complete reform. We can use it as a starting point for further, broader progress," the document states.

Daschle and Glickman both said

Daschle and Glickman both said the document was put together to stimulate thinking on long-term farm policies, help develop a common agricultural identity for Democrats and assist the party's candidates in upcoming elections.

ment, sort of a Democratic farm ponent to it and that manifesto, is couched in very broad terms in order to bridge a division datory or voluntary-man ponent to it and that bushel-based rather acreage-based system."

within party ranks between those who support mandatory controls on production and those who oppose them.

In its section on supply management, for example, the document

"While it is sound policy to price U.S. food surpluses for international sale, it is also good policy to concentrate on cutting surpluses to boost actual farm income. That must be our long-term goal, one we can reach through new measures to manage supply more effectively."

What are the new measures?

The documents suggests a stronger conservation reserve program to take marginal land out of production, better acreage set-aside requirements to qualify for federal subsidies and tougher enforcement measures to ensure that producers can't idle some land while collecting payments for restricted crops on other acreage.

"For the future, Democrats will push to expand proper supply management tools so that farmers can decide their own best course," the document states.

Glickman puts it this way: "I do think that what we are implictly saying in that is for supply management to work it must have either a mandatory or voluntary-mandatory component to it and that would be a bushel-based rather than an acreage-based system."

Architecture students publish 'Oz' magazine

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Staff Title

Renowned architects from all over the country are contributing their work to K-State's architectural journal, Oz.

"We ask notable practitioners or architects in design professions to write a theme the editors have established," said Ray Streeter, associate professor of architecture and design and a faculty adviser for

The student-run publication, which is printed annually, is designed with a certain theme that contributing architects try to follow when submitting their work.

The student editors, who are selected through an application and interview process, contact the notable architects by writing a letter explaining the theme for the next publication.

"They try and be as broadminded as possible when selecting contributors," Streeter said. The magazine is compiled of famous architects' work, as well as student and faculty projects, he said.

"If it's good, it's a chance for them to get something published," Streeter said.

Streeter said the publication helps the students get experience in an activity that cannot be taught in the classroom. "You can't really learn architecture and design (in the classroom) because you're not doing it. With Oz, you are producing something real and tangible rather than a design that remains on paper," Streeter said.

Streeter said the editors, who are usually fifth-year students, are given a great deal of responsibility because the production of Oz is dependent on their work.

"The editors have contact with internationally famous architects," Streeter said.
The production of Oz began in 1979.

Streeter said the first issue of the magazine was publishing just about anything the editors could get people to contribute.

The last issue printed was the

0,,,,,,

"We're now at the point that we can be very selective about the articles we accept," Streeter said.

Next year's theme is "Beyond Complacency." Streeter said the staff is "looking for unusual things that challenge the position that architecture is in today."

Streeter said next year's issue will be the best produced so far.

"Next year's magazine is going to be good. We put together a wish list of contributors, and they accepted it. It's the ideal situation," he said. The editors sent letters to approximately 40 of the top names in architecture, requesting their submission of work, he said.

"Twelve people already have said 'yes' and these people are big names," Streeter said.

The publication is funded by a $15 cover price, private donations from architects and alumni, and an allotment from the Design Council of the College of Architecture and Design.

Streeter said freshmen, sophomores and juniors in architecture are urged to participate in the production process as staff. The staff help with layout of the magazine, and sales when the publication comes out in May.

Oz magazine has been reviewed favorably in comparison with Harvard Architectural Review and the Yale Perspecta. Both are architectural journals produced by the colleges, Streeter said.

"I think now it has reached that point that I always dreamed it would," said Streeter, the publication's first editor.

Senator votes against convictions

While her act may please some but confuse others, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., is providing a good look at the political maneuvering involved in govern-

With her vote on the confirmation of Indiana lawyer Daniel Manion to a federal court position, the Kansas Senator showed the nation how the game is played.

Reportedly, Kassebaum, who was originally opposed to the nomination, struck up a deal with Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

Goldwater, in favor of the nomination, would vote "yes," offsetting the "no" vote of Kassebaum. Thus, both could vote their convictions, and in case of a tie, Vice President George Bush could cast the deciding vote.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the confirmation -Sen. Goldwater failed to show up for the vote.

Sen. Kassebaum, not wanting to be the one to send the Reagan nominee packing, switched her vote to the affirmative, leaving the door open for more maneuver-

Sen. Harry Byrd, D-W.V., also switched his vote to "yes," allowing him to call for a reconsideration of the original vote.

Kassebaum admitted Manion may not be the most desirable, but said similar choices had been approved in the past - and will continue to be approved in the

The next time the senator switches votes, at least she could play for higher stakes, like defense contracts or water projects. Then her constituents could at least receive something from her maneuvering.

Evangelism attracts fake leaders

The membership rolls of several churches in the United States are up. The New York Times recently reported that overall membership around the nation grew 1 percent in 1984. Most of the membership gain went to the conservative and evangelical churches. Many of the mainstream religions experienced a decrease in congregation size.

While more people around the nation are feeling the need to find spiritual guidance, some unwary souls may be taken in by one or more of the increasing number of suspect prophets.

Fulfillment will come at a high premium and do little other than lighten the purse of individuals who are convinced by the religious leaders who care more about donations than the spiritual welfare of their followers.

Religious activities are an integral part of the lives of many people. They willingly contribute to help their church in its philanthropic mission, and through the teachings of their religious leader they receive instruction and gain spiritual peace. But when a church leader sits in the lap of luxury and offers little in the way of spiritual support, something is Almost all churches, in one way or another, stress wisdom. When changing religion or joining a religion for the first time, people should be careful of the get-richquick evangelist who lifts up a person's soul with one hand and picks the person's pocket with the

Statue honors republican idealism

Last weekend marked one of the most celebrated events known to Americans - the rebirth of a national symbol.

The Statue of Liberty was the center of attention at its unveiling on a rainy day 100 years ago and, in many ways, has remained the center of American ideology and folklore. But Americans have transformed the original conception behind the statue into something new

In 1865, Edouard-Rene Lefebvre de Laboulave, a French scholar and member of the National Assembly, conceived of the idea of building a statue to honor America.

Laboulaye was a passionate opponent of authoritarian regimes and considered the United States' republican form of government the closest to perfect of all the world's governments. By building a statue that honored America's government, he hoped to steer his country toward republicanism and away from the monarchial form of government then threatening the country

He contacted Frederic Auguste Bartholdi and encouraged the sculptor to sail to America in May 1871 and search for the best location for the statue. Bartholdi decided upon Bedloe's Island in New York harbor.

Standing over the gateway to the New World, "Liberty Enlightening the World" would shed her light of liberty upon the world, showing other rebuilding countries the best model for a government - or so her creators had intended.

This nationalistic vision was congruent with the expansionistic attitude of the

SUSAN BAIRD Collegian Columnist

American people. American industries were invading foreign markets just as the government was invading open prairie with the railroad. The vision held true through the Spanish-American War and extended into Theodore Roosevelt's administration.

In 1903, a plaque engraved with the lines from Emma Lazarus' "The New Colossus" was added to the pedestal. Lazarus' image of Liberty as the "Mother of Exiles" changed America's perception of the statue and itself.

Instead of shining her light upon people in other countries, Liberty cast her light upon the "golden door." The message welcomed the "huddled masses" and "wretched refuse" from Europe's shores and promised a new beginning for those longing to escape hunger and tyranny.

This vision was more appropriate for turnof-the-century America. Between 1892 and 1924, 16 million immigrants from the Old World entered the New World by way of Ellis Island, the inspection station for newly arrived immigrants.

Not only did this vision reflect the period, it captured the foundation of America itself. From the landing of the first English settlers in Jamestown, this country has been a nation of immigrants.

Today, the government has an immigration ceiling of 270,000 persons per year and not more than 20,000 from a given country. But the tide of humanity entering the country has almost equalled that of the earlier mass immigration period.

Congressional arguments about immigration-law reform once again center around issues associated with the immigrant population: crime, poverty and job losses of Americans are increasing, and the native English language is being corrupted by terminology from foreign tongues.

Even though some racist groups would have Americans believe foreigners are quietly invading the country, the total foreignborn population was about 7.5 percent in America's immigrant tradition has made it this country's destiny and obligation to welcome those who have fled poverty and oppression in search of a better way of life. America can no more turn back the refugees now than it could 85 years ago.

The repaired Statue of Liberty has been given a new golden torch to shine on the door, but it has not been given a new message. Just as she welcomes the newcomers who knock on the "golden door," we must open it for

Hot-air balloon hits gothic cathedral tower

REIMS, France - A hot-air balloon was ripped apart when a gust of wind blew it into a tower of the Reims cathedral, but the two women aboard escaped unscathed,

The women, pilot Helene Dorigny and passenger Edmonde Baes, climbed from the balloon's basket and descended the tower stairs. The building received minor

The accident occurred just after a group of balloonists took off together Friday night at Reims, capital of the Champagne district 75 miles northeast of Paris. The cathedral at Reims was built during the 13th and 14th centuries, and is a monument of French Gothic architecture.

Annual Spanish bull-running festival starts

PAMPLONA, Spain - Thousands of revelers packed the main square of this provincial capital Sunday to begin the weeklong San Fermin Festival of bull-running, dancing and drinking made famous by Ernest Hemingway in "The Sun Also Rises." City Councilman Joaquin Salanueva set off the traditional rocket, or chupinazo, from the City Hall balcony to open the annual festival.

The first mad dash, in which fighting bulls chase those daring enough to run before them through the narrow streets, was set for Monday morning.

The bulls run half a mile from their corral to the bullring, where they will die at the hands of bullfighters later in the day.

Since the festival began in 1591, the running bulls have gored death 52 people.

Teacher waives hearing on porno charges

DODGE CITY - A former Spearville High School teacher has waived a preliminary hearing on three charges involving a child pornography investigation. Charles R. McBratney, 45, of Dodge City, waived a hearing Wednesday in Ford County District Court on two counts of sexual exploitation of a child and one count of McBratney, who was freed under $25,000 bond, was charged originally March 20 with the sexual exploitation charges after U.S. Postal Service inspectors uncovered what they called a large-scale child pornography operation.

He was accused of photographing 10 Dodge City boys between the ages of 9 and 16 in sexually revealing positions. The charge of indecent liberties was filed last month after further investigation, Ford County Attorney Dan Love said.

Air Force detains marchers for trespassing

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. - About 240 people, including members of the Great Peace March, were detained briefly Sunday for trespassing on Offut Air Force Base during a peaceful protest by about 500 demonstrators, authorities said.

"It was inevitable. They were going to come out to Offutt and protest (against nuclear arms) and they did," said Lt. Col. Ralph Tosti, public affairs officers for Offutt, headquarters of the Strategic Air Command. Tosti said about 240 people crossed a white line at the Bellevue Gate, which constitutes unauthorized entry into the military base located just south of Omaha. "I thought it went very well," he said. "They did a good job of letting us know which gate they were going to be at and what time. It was all very peaceful." Offutt has been the target of peace protests since about 1979, Tosti said.

Tosti didn't know how many of those detained were participants in the Great Peace March, which currently is camping at nearby Lake Manawa in Iowa. The peace marchers set out from Los Angeles on March 1 to walk across the nation promoting disarmament. They hope to arrive Nov. 15 in Washington, D.C.

Farm Aid II concert helps nation's farmers

MANOR, Texas — Tens of thousands of Fourth of July revelers flocked to a race track Friday where Willie Nelson presided over a rousing, 18-hour Farm Aid II concert aimed at helping save the nation's farmers from financial disaster.

Organizers said nearly 40,000 tickets were sold, and crowds began streaming through the Manor Downs gates as soon as they opened at 6 a.m. Thousands more spent the morning stuck in an 11-mile traffic jam.

Beginning the concert about a to "the concert for America."

The Beach Boys, Waylon Jennings and Judy Collins all performed during the opening hours. Nelson joined several acts. Also on tap were country stars Kris Kristofferson and Jerry Jeff Walker; rockers like Steppenwolf and the band X; and cajun fiddler Doug Kershaw and funk rocker Rick James.

The concert was Nelson's second Farm Aid. The first, last September in Champaign, Ill., raised about $9 million. According to Nelson and his aides, $4.3 million so far has gone to rural relief projects in 40 states. The money has paid for telephone hot lines for farmers, scholarships, legal aid and seed for farmers who otherwise wouldn't have been able to make this year's crop, said Bill Wittliff, an Austin screenwriter who is overseeing the fund.

The concert was carried live on the cable television channel VH-1, and viewers were asked to call a toll-free number to make donations. The telephone number to make donations is 1-800-FARMAID.

Crooner dies watching Liberty celebration

LOS ANGELES - The death of crooner Rudy Vallee as he watched the Statue of Liberty celebration on television was a "happy way for him to go," his publicist said Friday. Vallee, who died Thursday night at age 84, had been ill with throat cancer and had suffered a slight stroke while in the hospital.

Vallee, idolized in the 1920s and '30s as the first star crooner in a string that ran from Bing Crosby to Frank Sinatra to Elvis Presley was with his wife, Eleanor, at their Hollywood home when he died.

"Rudy was watching the unveiling of the Statue of Liberty and he remarked, 'I wish we could be there; you know how I love a party.' Then he took a big breath, and he died," Eleanor Vallee said.

Vallee was hospitalized in February for treatment of throat cancer shortly after recording the song "Junior Movie Star," Harris said. It has yet to be released. A Mass was scheduled for Saturday at St. Charles Roman Catholic Church in North Hollywood, Eleanor Vallee said. Vallee will be buried privately in Westbrook, Maine, where his parents are buried.

Indians axe KC's 9th try for victory, 5-0

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND - Tom Candiotti pitched a four-hitter as the Cleveland Indians won their seventh consecutive game Sunday and handed Kansas City a club-record ninth consecutive defeat, beating the Royals 5-0.

The Royals suffered eight-game losing streaks in 1971, 1974 and 1980. Their current 10-game losing streak on the road also is the longest in club history. The Royals ended the road trip 0-9.

Candiotti, 7-6, struck out four and walked four in pitching his second shutout of the season. The knuckleballer has seven complete games, accounting for all his vic-

Kansas City's Dennis Leonard, 6-8, went 71/3 innings and was charged with all the Cleveland runs in suffering his fourth straight setback.

Leonard walked Tony Bernazard with one out in the bottom of the third inning. Bernazard stole second and took third when Julio Franco lined a single off Leonard's left foot. One out later, Andre Thornton singled for his 10th RBI in the last four games.

The Indians made it 2-0 in the seventh when Chris Bando singled with two out and scored on Bernazard's double and wrapped it up with three runs in the eighth.

Joe Carter led off with a single and stole second. One out later, Mel Hall was intentionally walked and Pat Tabler's single gave Cleveland a 3-0 lead. Dan Quisenberry relieved Leonard and was greeted with RBI singles by Brett Butler and Cory Snyder.

The Royals' biggest threat came in the fourth inning when they loaded the bases with one

Becker dumps Lendl for title

By The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England - West Germany's Boris Becker cranked his power game up another notch Sunday to defeat Ivan Lendl 6-4, 6-3, 7-5 and retain his title in the 100th men's singles championship at Wimbledon.

"A man, a young man, a boy whatever you want to call him, call him champion," Lendl said of his 18-year-old conqueror.

It was a championship performance in every way by Becker, who thrilled the crowd on Centre Court with 15 aces and, in the clinching game, a spectacular cross-court backhand volley while he lay on the ground.

The victory in the world's top grass-court tournament was worth $196,000 and made Becker the youngest player to reach the milliondollar career earnings mark in ten-

And once more, he stood at the end of the two weeks as the best player on

"All during the tournament, I felt very good out there. It seems to be my court," Becker said.

But her bid to become the first player since Billie Jean King in 1973 to win three Wimbledon titles in a single year fell short. Navratilova teamed with Pam Shriver to take the women's doubles on Sunday before Americans Kathy Jordan and Ken Flach defeated Navratilova and Switzerland's Heinz Gunthardt for the mixed doubles crown.

Sunday's crowd of 19,807 included British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and West German President Richard von Wiezsacker, but the last day of Wimbledon's 100th edition belonged to the strawberryblond right-hander from Leiman, West Germany, who this time beat Lendl, the world's top-ranked player.

"This match had everything," Becker said, "the defending champion against No. 1. To win in three straight is a pretty good feeling."

Becker's victory wasn't as overpowering as the set scores would indicate. But when he needed it, he was able to reach back for an ace, a service winner or a volley to punctuate a Lendl, the reigning U.S. Open and French Open champion making his first appearance in a Wimbledon final, won only nine fewer points than Becker in the entire match. And when he walked off the court as runner-up, it appeared that the 26-year-old Czech had gained the admiration and respect of all. At the beginning of the third set, the crowd got behind Lendl, who has never traveled with a large fan club. T-shirts supporting the top seed could be spotted in the stands and two girls wore tops saying "Smile, Lendl," a call for him to break out of his usual dour on-court appearance.

It also might have been in recognition of a tournament in which Lendl struggled at times but came out the winner - until the final day.

"I think any time you play well, it's a success," Lendl said. "That's one part about it. The other part is that if you don't win, it's never a complete

The only completely successful one on a day that saw the sun darting in and out of the clouds was Becker.

Lendl took the early lead, breaking Becker in the fifth game of the match from deuce, the final point a running backhand down-the-line shot produced from behind the baseline. But Becker broke right back.

The teen-ager broke Lendl again, this time at 30, to win the first set.

He then began the second set with three consecutive aces, his eighth, ninth and 10th of the match. When Lendl hit a backhand service return wide, Becker had completed a love

He then took the only service break of the set in the eighth game at 30 when he ripped an inside-out forehand service return that Lendl volleyed long.

That made it 5-3, Becker, and he closed out the set with another love game, this one including his 14th ace.

Becker was just one set away from his second straight victory, but Lendl still wasn't ready to just give the crown to his opponent. Becker had to earn it.

Lendl held serve at love to begin the third set. He then broke Becker for the second time in the match in the second game, taking the final four points after the West German had taken a 30-love lead.

When he held serve at 15, Lendl had a 3-0 lead and looked as if he would at least force the match into a

Horner hits four homers

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA - Bob Horner of the Atlanta Braves became the 11th player in major-league history to hit four homers in a game Sunday, over five at-bats against the Montreal Expos. The Braves still lost the game

Horner, who raised his season total to 17 homers, hit solo homers in the second, fourth and ninth innings, and a three-run homer in the fifth.

He fouled out to first in the seventh inning after the first three homers.

The last man to hit four homers in a game was Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt at Chicago on April 17, 1976, in a 10-inning game. The last man to hit four in a nine-inning game was San Francisco's Willie Mays at Milwaukee on April 30, 1961

Horner had never before hit more than two homers in a game, though he had done that 18 times

"In my wildest dreams I would never have expected to do anything like that," Horner said. "I had a good week to-payments and eliminates the break for capital gains income and the value of tax shelters.

These changes serve to raise a family's taxable income, but for federal purposes, most taxpayers will benefit from lower tax rates. But if state rates stay the same, while the taxable income rises, the results are higher tax bills and higher revenues for state government.

In many states, that translates to personal income tax increases of 10 percent to 20 percent, Miller said.

The windfall is as much as $2 billion in New York, according to a state Republican Party estimate. Other big annual increases estimated by state officials include: $250 million in Missouri, $120 million in Kansas, $150 million or more in Michigan, up to $200 million in Colorado, $123 million in Illinois, and at least $200 million in Ohio.

Minnesota expects an extra $360 million over two years. In Virginia, a $130 million windfall is seen from the tax bill passed earlier by the House, and the Senate version would produce far more, though state officials don't have an estimate yet.

At least 17 more states see lesser increases, or anticipate an increase but haven't yet reached an estimate.

Some states are eying the windfall. In Virginia, officials are looking for money for roads and have no plans to roll back taxes. In Illinois, Senate Revenue Chairman Dawn Clark Netsch said the windfall will barely make up for the erosion of state money that resulted from the 1981 federal tax cuts.

"It's possible we might need that money just to maintain the status quo," said Kansas Gov. John Carlin. Iowa House Speaker Don Avenson said the windfall may be used to offset what he figures is a loss of $150 million to $250 million a year through federal budget cuts.

revamped its policies to place increased emphasis on vigorously investigating domestic violence cases. The Minnesota Department of Corrections, meanwhile, receives reports on battering incidents from shelter programs, medical professionals and human service professionals as well as police.

In San Francisco, police officers investigating domestic violence are trained to consider "extreme mental anguish, hysteria or uncontrollable display of emotions" as indications of trauma and grounds for a felony arrest.

In Westchester County, N.Y., San Francisco, and some other areas, prosecutors have established a special staff unit to handle domestic violence cases. In Duluth, Minn., one city attorney is assigned to each case of domestic violence, along with one victim advocate who is employed by the Women's Coalition, a shelter for battered women.

"Prosecutors' offices have traditionally offered few incentives for prosecuting attorneys to become involved in domestic violence cases," says Goolkasian's study.

The report adds that in the past:
"Prosecutors' perceptions that these cases would rarely result in convictions, and that judges would not impose meaningful sentences even if convictions were obtained, served to reinforce the same message: Handling domestic violence cases would do little to advance a prosecutor's career."

The old attitude, combined with the reluctance of many battered women to cooperate with law enforcement agencies because of their emotional attachment to the abuser, resulted in few prosecutions and continued assaults, the study says.

Under newly adopted approaches, prosecutors who can gather enough evidence sometimes file charges despite opposition from the victim. In cases that result in police arrest, the Seattle city attorney's office automatically files charges against the suspect and then makes initial contact with the victim. In cases where no arrest is made, the victim is contacted to obtain information on the case and discuss possible prosecution.

Buyers explain text ordering procedure

By MORGAN CHILSON Collegain Reporter

Several times a year, after paying fees, students swarm to the Union Bookstore and Varney's Book Store to purchase the required textbooks. Rarely do they consider the ordering system which makes those books available to them.

"It's a fairly complex system," said Jerry D. Fields, book department manager. Fields is responsible for ordering textbooks for the Union Rockstore Instructors must have their requests for textbooks in by March for the fall semester, he said.

Though this may seem early, Fields said he needs to know how many books should be bought back from students at the end of the spring semester. Information received from the instructors is shared with Dan Walter, textbook manager of Varney's.

"We have a good working relationship (with the Union)," Walter said.
"Around the country, there's a lot of discord between university bookstores and privately owned bookstores."

The difficult part of ordering begins after the textbook reports have been received.

The enrollment for the fall semester must be determined as closely as possible in an effort to decide how many textbooks must be ordered for each class. These decisions are made using the preenrollment lists, looking at average enrollment from preceding semesters and using the instructor's estimate of how many will be in the class. Information is also available on what percent of students bought books for each class the previous semester.

Fields and Walter use all the available information to decide how many texts to order. Because there is no way to be sure of how many books will be required, ordering is something of a gamble.

"An instructor may get offended at either us or the Union, maybe from slow service a previous semester, and announce to all of his students at the beginning of the semester that he wouldn't go to that particular bookstore," Walter said. When this happens, the bookstores run short on certain textbooks.

Fields said that students prefer used books because they save 25 percent on the purchase, compared to new texts.

"Students are saving a lot of money by buying used books," Fields said. "If they pay 25 percent below full cost, and then sell the books back for 60 percent, they're saving."

Both bookstores try to obtain used books from used-book wholesalers or directly from other universities.

"Used books are getting easier to find," Fields said. "Two out of three books are used now."

Used books are bought back from students at the end of each semester and if there still are not enough available, the textbook managers make an attempt to find them elsewhere, he said.

To order books from a used-book wholesaler, the bookstores send a list of texts needed. Using Federal Express or Telex, the wholesaler then returns a list of how many of each book he has in stock. The textbook manager then submits an order by telephone and the books are sent directly to each store.

Only when the bookstores can't acquire enough used books or a text comes out with a new edition must Fields and Walter order new books.

Educators adopt plans for reform

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — American Federation of Teachers delegates on Sunday overwhelmingly called for abolishing undergraduate degrees in education and raising starting salaries for teachers in fields where shortages exist.

The 2,600 delegates ignored dissidents' charges that they were sacrificing union solidarity and ratified a report entitled "The Revolution That is Overdue," drafted by union President Albert Shanker's top lieutenants.

The delegates roared their approval after Shanker, in a dramatic floor speech, implored them to "send the people of this country a message that the American Federation of Teachers will still (take) risks to bring about improvements for our profession and for our schools."

The report warned that without radical changes, the nation would face a massive teacher shortage.

It called for more power and self-regulation by teachers, abolishing undergraduate degrees in education and shifting professional preparation to graduate school. It also would open an alternate route into the profession through internships for liberal arts majors.

The wage proposal, which calls for putting teachers at salaries sharply higher than others in subjects where instructors have been in short supply, runs contrary to AFT policy.

It was part of a recent Carnegie Task Force on Education and the Economy report calling for an overhaul of the teaching profession. The AFT also approved a separate plank hailing the Carnegie report.

In Louisville, Ky., meanwhile, the NEA wrapped up its four-day annual convention, turning aside several attempts to water down the stand the NEA took last year in favor of dismissal proceedings against teachers found to be incompetent.

On Friday the 7,500 NEA delegates endorsed the Carnegie call for a national standards board to certify top teachers. But it did not pass judgment on other Carnegie recommendations.

NEA President Mary Hatwood Futrell, who, like Shanker, served on the Carnegie panel, sharply criticized the AFT report, saying its call for higher salaries for teachers in shortage areas was absurd and an invitation to lower pay for elementary teachers.

High court ruling knocks down law as unconstitutional

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court Monday knocked the teeth out of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction act, broadened the disciplinary powers of school administrators and agreed to consider whether death sentences are meted out in a racially discriminatory way.

The high court, winding up its 1985-86 term, said in a 7-2 ruling that the Gramm-Rudman Act, which orders automatic federal spending cuts enroute to a balanced budget by 1991, violates the constitutionally mandated separation of powers between the executive and legislative

The decision, affirming a lower court ruling that was authored by Supreme Court nominee Antonin Scalia, had been widely expected, especially since ABC News reported 22 days ago that the justices were about to strike down the law.

The justices agreed with Scalia that the law wrongfully empowers an officer of Congress, the comptroller general, to perform executive functions as the final arbiter of budget

Gramm-Rudman contains a fallback provision that allows Congress itself to vote on a deficitreduction package if the automatic feature were invalidated. But that hardly mandates the spending discipline required by the section that was struck down. In other cases, the court:

- Ruled 7-2 that students may be suspended from school for using "vulgar and offensive" language. The decision, stemming from a 1983 case involving a Spanaway, Wash., high school senior, significantly broadens the power of school administrators to set standards for students, though the court made clear the authority must not be used to suppress "student expression of a particular political viewpoint."

Said, in a case with enormous potential impact on the future of capital punishment, that it will decide if Georgia death sentences are meted out in a racially discriminatory way. It agreed to rule on whether unconstitutional bias can be proved by statistics showing that killers of white victims draw death sentences more often than killers of

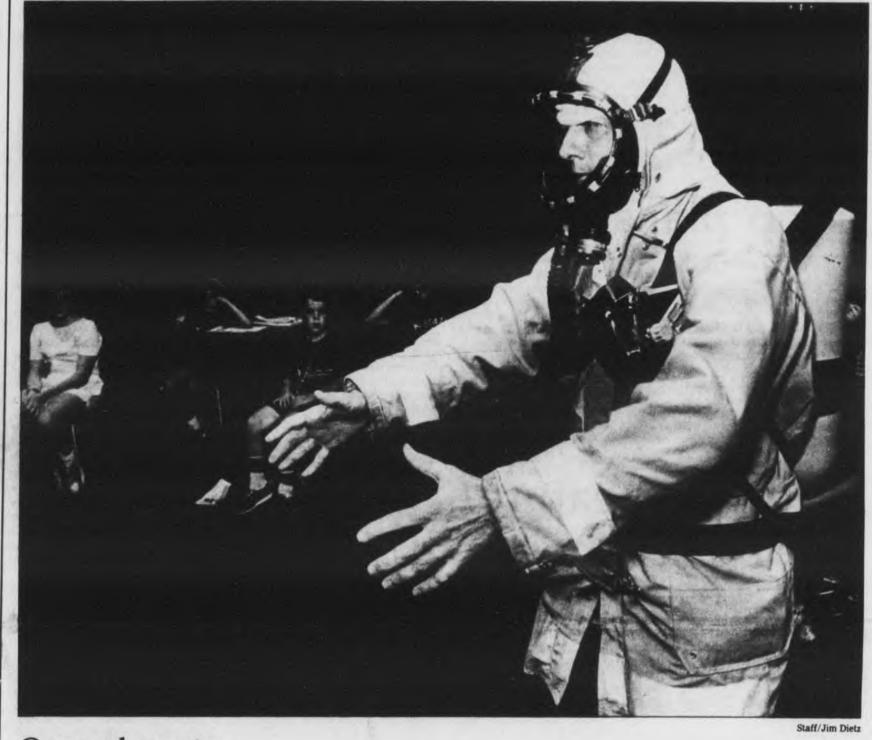

Ruled 6-3 that states are free to close down for lengthy periods of time adult bookstores found to be public nuisances because of the onpremises conduct of their patrons. The court upheld a New York law that allows closure for one year of any premise, including bookstores, found to be a public nuisance.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, who retires this week, said the law does not violate constitutionally protected freedom-of-expression rights when applied to bookstores because it does not seek to censor or control the books sold there.

- Let stand a Texas law making "deviate sexual intercourse" a crime, turning aside arguments that the law violates the privacy rights of homosexuals. The court last week upheld a Georgia law making sodomy a crime.

- Ruled 8-0 that the federal courts

Ruling elicits little reaction

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Kansas politicians were not surprised or particularly concerned Monday that the U.S. Supreme Court had found a key provision of the Gramm-Rudman budget deficit reduction law unconstitutional.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, contacted at her farm near Council Grove where she is spending part of the congressional recess, said, "I don't think the decision really affects the budget process. I never thought we'd go to automatic sequestering (budget cutting)."

She said the nearly $1 trillion federal budget approved by Congress the last week in June is "a reasonable one that meets the Gramm-Rudman guidelines on deficit reduction.'

Kassebaum said she would support an amendment proposed by the law's chief sponsors to make the comptroller general an officer of the executive branch of government rather than a congressional officer as head of the General Accounting Office.

That amendment is designed to correct the flaw - illegal usurpation of executive power - which the court saw in the provision which was struck down.

"I will support that amendment," Kassebaum said. that "That is what is necessary of we want this to work."

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery of Topeka, also interviewed by telephone, said he had figured there was a potential constitutional problem with Gramm-Rudman, but said the thrust of the law is good and he wants Congress to amend it to make it more workable.

Slattery, a member of the House Budget Committee, said he believes Congress can easily correct the constitutional problem cited by the Supreme Court, but he wants an additional change made to bring about what he said would be greater fairness in the budget

Slattery said he would like to see payment adjustments for all federal employees, the military and Social Security retirees applied uniformly. Under Gramm-Rudman, Social Security payments are exempt from any cuts, but those of federal employees and the military are included in the cuts.

"We should treat everyone the same," Slattery said. He predicted his proposal would ignite a big fight in Congress. "The point is," Slattery said, "that Gramm-Rudman worked in encouraging the prsident and Congress to practice restraint in spen-

Coliseum committee reviews plans

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

The Coliseum Program Committee met Monday to discuss a report from Tom Parkinson, the University's design consultant for the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

During the three-hour 50-minute session, the committee reviewed Parkinson's recommendations for the coliseum, which included suggestions on the site plan, concourse level, subconcourse level, curtains and rigging, sections and elevations, the south annex, the north annex, and retractable seating.

The committee also established priorities for alternative features for the coliseum if the bids for the project come in under the estimated cost of $15.6 million.

Architects for the coliseum will be meeting today in Wichita to review 60-percent completion drawings of the coliseum. This will be the first occasion for them to review detailed drawings of the building. They will also address questions raised by the committee in regard to Parkinson's report, said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

In his report, Parkinson suggested that "...a stand-alone sign serving as a marquee will be needed." This feature is not in the current coliseum budget, but the committee agreed something of this nature is needed for advertisement purposes.

Parkinson's report questioned current plans for the ticket booths in the coliseum. Plans now call for ticket booths at each entrance to the coliseum. Parkinson said this set-up would cause confusion because everyone will be going to the same place; those who want to buy tickets would face those who already have tickets and want to enter the arena. Parkinson suggested that a single ticket office, located at the south side of the coliseum, would alleviate potential problems. The committee agreed with Parkinson.

The committee discussed the doors on the concourse level of the coliseum. Miller suggested that doors with magnetic closures be used. Charles Hein, acting director of the coliseum, suggested the concourse be left open. University Architect Vince Cool said taking the doors out went against Parkinson's recommendation, but the architects would look into the matter.

Current coliseum plans call for a wall of glass at the north side of the building from which the football stadium could be viewed. Parkinson said problems could occur because of light entering the building and going into the seating area. He suggested the wall be solid, which met with committee approval.

In prioritizing alternative additions to the coliseum, the committee gave priority to a south annex with an estimated cost of $379,800. Other additions - in order of preference and estimated cost - are a north annex, $235,985; a fluted block inner concourse wall, $41,317; 48-foot stage curtains, no estimate; concrete aprons for east and west parking, $46,500; three flagpoles with lights, $8,550; and a telescoping bench

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - An emotionally disturbed man armed with a sword killed two passengers and wounded nine others on the Staten Island ferry today, police said.

The attacker, who identified himself as a Cuban "boat person," was taken into custody by a retired police officer who was riding the ferry Samuel I. Newhouse from Manhattan to Staten Island, officials

The former officer, Edward Delpino, fired one shot during the capture, but no one was hit by the bullet, said police spokesman Joseph

The attacker was identified by Deputy Police Commissioner Richard Condon as Juan Gonzalez. He said Gonzalez told police he was a 'boat person' who came to the United States from Cuba in 1977.

The dead were not immediately identified.

Three of the wounded were admitted to St. Vincent's Hospital, one was treated and released and two were being evaluated, said spokesman

There were no conditions available for those admitted - Ann-Marie Zervoulei, 16, of Staten Island, Connie Nichols, 54, of McPherson, Kan., and Rheinart Groell, 48, of Klagenfurt, Austria.

Details were not available immediately from Bayley Seton Hospital, which received three wounded and said it expected others.

Victor Ross of the Transportation Department said first word of the attack came from the boat's radio at 8:40 a.m., just after the ferry had passed the Statue of Liberty in its run across New York Harbor. "Our operator on Staten Island

State begins to distribute utility funds

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The state welfare agency is implementing the summer cooling phase of the Low Income Energy Assistance Program on today to help poor elderly and disabled Kansans pay their summer electricity bills.

The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services announced Monday applications for the socalled LIEAP funds are available and will be accepted from July 8 to cy expects to provide average grants of $121 to about 23,300 households which include elderly or disabled residents who otherwise couldn't afford to cool their homes during the hot summer months.

Valentine said the grants range from a minimum of $59 to a maximum $203 and are expected to cost a total $2.6 million in federal block grant funds provided the state.

To be eligible for a grant, a household must have elderly residents, aged 65 or older, or disabled residents. Applicants must mail income statements for the past six months and prove their utility bills have been paid in two of the past three months.

The grant criteria includes the following maximum annual household income factors: $4,301 for homes with one resident; $5,624 for homes with two residents; $6,947 for homes of three; $8,270 for homes of four; and $9,660 for homes of five.

The amount of the grant is based on each household's annual income, the type of household - either an apartment or free-standing home and the cost of electricity in a particular region of the state. Electricity prices vary dramatically across

In addition, the welfare agency is offering grants to Kansans facing medical emergencies who can't afford air conditioning and don't qualify for the LIEAP funds.

Valentine said those households need to provide a statement from a doctor explaining the medical emergency and a utility disconnection notice. Besides the grants, fans and air conditioners are available to medically needy applicants who have no appliance for cooling.

Those interested in applying for the program should contact the welfare agency by mail or call 1-800-432-0043.

Officials point out uncertified teachers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - State education officials identified 240 people who were teaching without proper certification in elementary and secondary schools across Kansas during the past school year, according to a report scheduled to be presented Tuesday to the State Board of Education.

Judy Hamilton, director of certification and accreditation for the Department of Education, said Monday that 103 of the state's 304 school districts were cited during the 1985-86 school year for at least one instance of an uncertified instructor teaching class.

Of the 103 districts that received citations, 95 did not correct their problems by the end of the school term, said Hamilton, who added that uncertified instructors continued to teach for the better part of the spring semester in "a number" of cases.

"The State Board of Education has accredition regulations and (those) regulations specify that all teachers be properly certified," Hamilton said. "It's a kind of assurance that those teachers are properly trained.

Hamilton said she does not consider the number of uncertified teachers last year alarming because similar numbers have been reported in past years. However, she said a citation for allowing an uncertified instructor to teach presents a potentially serious problem for local school districts.

If a district has not corrected the problem by the end of the school year, it receives an "accreditation citation," and will get an "accreditation warning" at the end of the second school year an uncertified instructor continues to teach, Hamilton said.

A district will lose its state accreditation if it has failed to take care of the problem by the end of the third year, she said. No public school has ever lost its accreditation because it employed uncertified teachers, Hamilton said, but some private schools have lost accreditations for that reason.

Although 240 uncertified teachers sounds like a large number, Hamilton said that is an extremely small proportion of all elementary and secondary education instructors in Kansas.

'There are 31,294 practicing teachers and administrators in Kansas," she said. "So that's less than 1

Union expands menu to include fast food

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

Pizza, chicken and Mexican food will soon be available at the Union.

After a two-year planning period, the Union is in the midst of renovation procedures in hopes of an August completion date.

"We want to upgrade the present conditions, and begin serving fast food items that are popular today," said Walter Smith, Union director.

Ted Thelander, a food service consultant from Cleveland, Ohio, designed the changes to be made.

The changes will include a larger salad bar, a more functional beverage area, and a bigger product selection, Smith said. The physical changes will be geared towards easier accessibility of items, he said.

"We are going to move things around. We've always been cramped at the north end of the cafeteria," he said.

The beverage counter is going to be moved approximately seven feet south to provide more room for lines forming at the hot food counters. Smith said all of the dispensers will be new, including an ice dispenser which will drop ice in the cups rather than using the current scoop system.

The milk will be in cardboard cartons instead of the bulk system now used. By changing the milk system, labor will be cut down because there will no longer be a need to carry five-gallon containers out to the machine, Smith

Due to the moving of the beverage counter, the cashiers will also move southward. Available seating will not be affected.

"There will be a little less seating area, but there will be no affect on the number of seats available," Smith said.

The salad bar will be moved to the southeast end of the cafeteria and expanded to include more Mexican food will be located at the outcome," Smith said.

the north end, Smith said. These changes will materialize during the three-week period between summer school and the fall semester

"We're not sure when we're going to get the pizza in, they are still experimenting with crusts, but the chicken counter is in, and the Mexican food counter should be in sometime in the next two weeks," Smith said.

The estimated $75,000 project will be the Union's first major renovation project since the size of the Union was doubled in 1970.

The new food system replaces a divided cafeteria which had hot food in one area and a snack bar in another area, Smith said. The old system forced people to stand in line instead of getting their own items, he said.

"The type of service we have now allows us to get people through a lot faster than a line would," Smith said. "We are always trying to update things to make it easier on the students."

Future plans — to be completed by spring break 1987 - include the installation of a hot dog counter, soda fountain, hard ice cream counter and a bakery showcase to display items that can be purchased. Smith said this particular section will be added to the area directly behind the entrance turnstiles.

"We will have both hard and soft ice cream with all of the toppings to make sundaes," he said. The total project, which is funded by the repair and replacement reserve, is expected to require the same number of employees due to the labor saving equipment being installed.

"We hope it doesn't take any more employees, we are going to work with what we have, maybe even less. We won't have to haul milk or ice anymore," Smith said.

The project was not designed to compete with any other university in the state, Smith said. The renovation was designed only for improvement purposes.

"It is designed to better serve items. The pizza, chicken and the student, (and) we hope that is

Farrell Library recently celebrated the acquisition of its millionth volume, but still remains far behind the other Big Eight universities.

The University of Kansas' 2.5 million volumes outnumbers K-State's holdings by more than two times. All other universities in the Big Eight have more than 1.3 million holdings.

Farrell currently has 1,015,000 holdings within its system. Farrell Library itself holds 750,000 volumes with about 50,000 of its volumes spread out amongst the various branch libraries, including the Weigel Library of Architecture and Design, chemistry library, physics library and veterinary medical library. Two hundred thousand volumes were recently moved to Nichols Hall in an effort to create more available space.

The possibility of a slowdown in cataloging by the Library of Con-gress could compound the problem of availability of holdings at Farrell, said Brice Hobrock, dean of

Jean Hatfield, coordinator of instructional services at Farrell, said she believes the fact that Farrell has the smallest number of volumes in the Big Eight is not a problem for

"This has been a historical problem," she said. "The library was neglected for so many years.'

Hatfield said it is obvious the library is working on this problem, and every year the library is improving. She said Farrell is far better than many of the universities in the Big Eight in such things as On-Line Search and number and types of periodicals.

However, some K-State students complain about the current availability of holdings at Farrell.

Jan Pope, graduate student in secondary education, said, "It's been my experience that Farrell may have a million books, but you can never find the one you want.

"I spend one-half to three-fourths of my time just looking for the materials I need," Pope said. "Sometimes I walk out of the library very frustrated."

Pope, who said she is fairly familiar with Farrell, said the library staff is very helpful, but added that they can't find the material

"All they can do is show you the process," Pope said.

Brenda Birt, junior in modern languages, said "You have to go through a lot of red tape when you are dealing with Farrell, Even when you finally know what material you need, you can't locate it, so you have to go through the red tape bureaucracy all over again."

Cathy Jones, senior in marketing. said she has not used the library very much, but has no major problems when she does.

"Overall, the library staff is very helpful," Jones said.

Hatfield said the library offers two programs to help the students familiarize themselves with Far-

Second, Hatfield teaches a class for 2-credit hours which also works to familiarize students with the library, but offers a more in-depth look at the library. The class is designed to be self-paced.

Kim George, sophomore in elementary education, said the library material covered in her Oral Communications class "really is helping me a lot for what I need."

Hatfield said the library also offers, at the request of an instructor, specialized tours for classes.

Oklahoma

"The library always works to help ease the patron's frustrations,' Hatfield said. "Usually, students have difficulty finding materials, and sometimes this is just a matter of location.

'We urge the students to ask for help," she said. "Most students hesitate to ask for help because they don't want to look stupid.'

Pope, who is also a high school teacher, tries to get her students to come to Farrell because she feels it is necessary for them to familiarize themselves with the University

"It is my belief that a large part of the K-State student population do not come in here because they are too petrified," Pope said.

"We are always changing things a lot at the library, but we try at all times to make things easier for the student," Hatfield said.

The library personnel are discussing setting up terminals for the patrons' use that will let them know the circulation status of a material they need, said Charlene Grass, acting associate dean for technical services and automation. This will enable the patrons to find this information without going through the circulation desk, Grass said.

However, because the library's computer is small, the response time for the terminals would be fairly slow. Therefore, she said, this idea has not be finalized.

Aggieville, downtown program's sites

City provides lunchtime entertainment

By CONNIE WELSH Collegian Reporter

Area residents and business people will have the opportunity over the next few weeks to relax and enjoy a musical lunch hour compliments of the Manhattan Art Council, the Aggieville Merchants Association and Mainstreet, a downtown revitalization project.

'Summer in the City," the theme for the July entertainment series, will feature a variety of entertainment from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in Aggieville on Fridays and downtown on Saturdays, said Brenda Spencer, Mainstreet project manager. The entertainment is scheduled to begin this weekend and end the last weekend in July.

The downtown entertainment, which is titled "Downtown on the Courthouse Plaza," will be located at Fifth Street and Poyntz Avenue. The Aggieville entertainment will be at Triangle Park, North Manhattan and Anderson avenues

"We're planning children's activities, a sidewalk cafe and additional activities," Spencer said of the downtown shows. "The idea is to utilize the courthouse plaza and draw people downtown.'

According to Bill Jacoby, executive director of the Aggieville Merchants Association, the purpose of the lunchtime entertainment in Aggieville is to give business people a chance to relax and listen to music while they eat lunch.

"Our plan, as far as Aggieville is concerned, is that we're gearing this to faculty, staff members, lawyers, secretaries - whoever wants to on Friday afternoons, bring or buy a lunch, sit in the shade at Triangle Park and listen to music," Jacoby

Jacoby said the entertainment will run from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. because it cuts into both the 11 a.m. lunch hour and the noon lunch hour.

"We're hoping that the different restaurants in Aggieville will run lunch specials to help promote the activities," he said.

"This is on a trial basis to see what kind of response we get. If the response is strong, we're looking at doing this starting in May next year and running it to sometime in September on a weekly basis," Jacoby said.

Jacoby said the purpose of the noon entertainment is to help imcome down during their lunch hours prove the quality of life in Manhat-

"In a sense, we're trying to improve the quality of life in town," he said. "It's not a big promotional gimmick for retailers or part of the (Quality of Life) bond issue. It's just a way for people to get out and enjoy themselves.

Scheduled to appear in Aggieville during July include Streetside Quintet (barbershop), July 11; Chris Biggs (bluegrass); and Connaitre Miller (jazz), July 25.

Appearing downtown at the courthouse plaza will be part of the Children's Theatre Production of the 'Wizard of Oz' and Woodwinds Anonymous, July 12; Puppet Theatre and Connaitre Miller, July 19; and a magician and the Wheatland Express Bluegrass Band, July 26.

Population estimates reach 5 billion mark

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Somewhere on Earth, a child born Monday became the 5 billionth person living on the planet and a "sobering symbol" of world population growth, according to estimates of the Population Institute.

"The birth of a child is usually a joyous occasion and our fondest wishes and fervent prayers are extended to this precedent-setting newcomer to the world," said institute President Werner Fornos.

"This particular baby will most probably need both and then some, for it is a sobering symbol of the shocking rapidity at which the world's population is multiplying." Fornos said in predicting the date for this milestone arrival.

Population experts have been anticipating the arrival of the world's population at the 5 billion mark - although not all agree on the exact time of that occurrence.

"Most demographers believe it will happen early next year, but we're close and given the margin of error, who knows, we might already be at 5 billion. At any rate, we're bearing down on 5 billion just a dozen years after we hit 4 billion," said Joseph Speidel, vice president of the Population Crisis Committee.

"I can't quibble with his date; it's good enough for me. Whether it's today or tomorrow or the next day, it's 5 billion about now," said

M. Rupert Cutler, executive director of Population-Environment Balance.

"He may very well be right," added Carl Haub, a demographer at the private Population Reference Bureau. Haub noted, though, that United Nations estimates indicate that the 5 billion mark won't be reached until about March.

He also pointed out that although population researchers hailed the Earth's 4 billionth person in 1976, later censuses helped determine that that event actually occurred as early as 1974.

What is known is that the Earth's population has more than tripled in the last century and continues rapid growth, putting pressure on the environment, resources, government and other services in many if not all nations.

"Five billion probably puts the world population about at its carrying capacity. It will be difficult to feed, clothe, shelter and employ many more people at more than a subsistence level of life," Cutler said.

"The child very probably will be born in the Third World, where nine of every 10 babies are born today and where poverty, disease, hunger, illiteracy and unemployment make life a daily struggle for survival," said Fornos, whose private institute advocates efforts to balance population and environment.

Students examine Third

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

Four K-State architecture students are learning how to work with people in a Third World setting and to understand the people they are designing for.

Mary Ashley, graduate in architecture; Stan Kent, fifth year senior in pre-design professions; Anne Prinz and Albert Vitale, fifth-year seniors in architecture, are at the International Intercultural Center for Built Environment in Santa Fe, N.M. They are participating in a hands-on, summer field course that began Saturday and will run through Aug. 12.

More than 15 percent of the architect design work and almost onethird of the construction work done by U.S. firms each year is for developing countries, said David fessor of architecture at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

"Much of this work is done in countries that are urbanizing quickly, or where a catastrophe, such as an earthquake, has occurred," said Eleftherios Pavlides, assistant professor in pre-design professions at K-State. "The American designers often fail because they don't understand the people they are designing for, their culture or their lifestyle. The natives will end up using the new housing projects for stables instead of a

"For instance, an English firm designed a housing unit for a town in Nigeria. The apartments were acceptable by Western standards. They had a bedroom, living room and kitchen. But the natives were used to a large, one-room home," Pavlides

"They could not understand the division of space — turning one large room into three small rooms. They ended up with three families in each apartment instead of one. And eventually the apartments stood vacant because the families made their own one-room houses," Pavlides said.

This is the second summer the course has been offered, but the first time that K-State has been involved in the project. The project was started by Stea when he received a $300,000 federal grant and established the center in Santa Fe.

Santa Fe was chosen because the area simulates culturally and environmentally a Third World situation. The area also has a large Hispanic and native American population, Pavlides said.

This year Stea asked Pavlides to coordinate admission for the course at K-State. The summer course has eight students enrolled through the University of Wisconsin and 17 students are enrolled in the course through K-State, Pavlides said.

"David Stea and I are the principal teachers of the course." Pavlides said, "but there will be 16 other instructors who are nationally recognized authorities in their respective fields."

The group includes four architects, a landscape architect, three planners, six social scientists and two

One of these instructors is Jay W. Glass, a 1970 K-State graduate whose specialty is solar architecture.

During the six-week course, students will participate in lectures, seminars, workshops and field trips. They will work on one of two projects: designing a Hispanic community center or a Pueblo Indian housing project.

Foods radiated despite questions

Irradiation of dried spices was approved by the Food and Drug Administration in 1983, as a new form of food preservation. Last month fresh pork and produce received the same approval. Fresh fish are next.

The irradiation process is simple: expose the food to electromagnetic energy produced by short-wave gamma rays. Cobalt 60 is the radiation source generally used. (Remember the mutations you induced on your seventhgrade science project?)

Although irradiation effects have been tested for more than 40 years, the FDA has admitted their test gauges are unable to monitor the radiolytic substances which form when food is being irradiated. In other words, some kind of chemical decomposition takes place and the FDA is not sure what is produced or if what is produced is safe.

Despite these unanswered questions, foods are being irradiated.

While we can handle radiation from the sun, stone buildings, radios and televisions, irradiation poses a different threat.

Larry Bogart, national coordinator of the Nuclear Hazards Information Center in Whippany, N.J., said irradiation of food could create "chemicals the body is not accustomed to handling.'

One more little dose of radiation shouldn't hurt anybody. But it is a wonder when all the low doses are going to add up to something big enough to turn us incandescent.

Proposal hurts information access

The Freedom of Information Act, originally implemented in 1966, was designed to allow public access to federal records in the executive branch of the government, with changes in 1974 and 1976 passed to ensure easier and speedier access to public documents.

But a House Government Operations Subcommittee is working toward changing the flow from past amendments. The current proposal would permit businesses to dictate what information should be classified.

With this, any individual using the act would have to wait out the following: the agency holding the requested material would have five working days to notify the business, which would then have 10 working days to explain why the material should not be releas-

Next, the agency would have another 10 days to make a decision, and if the decision is in the affirmative for release, the release would then be held up another 10 working days to give the submitter time to file a suit in federal court to prevent disclosure.

The shortcomings of the proposal include time delays, possible abuse of the "confidential" classification, increased litigation and higher administrative costs for the government.

Legislators should use caution when voting on the proposal. Recent events have disclosed far too much information is stamped "Classified," and there is no reason to believe the problem would not become worse with this

Cocaine old but unfamiliar killer

Some people, particularly certain athletes, just never seem to learn from other people's mistakes.

When former University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias died June 19 of cocaine intoxication, it showed what the drug can do to a healthy body.

But instead of Rias' death helping to prevent future disaster, tragedy struck again just eight days later. Defensive back Don Rogers of the National Football League Cleveland Browns died of cocaine poisoning on June 27, the day before he was to be married.

Cocaine is not new to society. It has been used for centuries as a narcotic and local anesthetic. The medical profession has known of the drug's killing capacity for years but this characteristic is just being noticed by the general public.

The use of cocaine has increased dramatically in recent years. Data supplied by Dr. Robert J. Murphy, head team physician at Ohio State University, shows that in the last five years, 20 percent to 25 percent of college athletes have used marijuana and/or cocaine an average of once a week.

Fortunately, some athletes were luckier than Bias and Rogers. Minnesota Vikings receiver Buster Rhymes said he started using cocaine while at the University of Oklahoma and twice has been admitted to a drug treatment center since the start of 1985. Kansas City Chiefs defensive end Mike Bell was convicted June 13 on two counts of using the telephone to facilitate the purchase of cocaine and one count of attempting to possess cocaine.

While Bell is facing a likely jail sentence, it is much better than facing a death sentence from a lethal dose of cocaine. For Rhymes, it was a case of the 24-year-old doing something about his addiction before it was too

In Bias and Rogers' case, however, it appeared that neither were heavily addicted to cocaine. These cases point out the fact that cocaine can kill anytime, anywhere and anybody.

There is no clear-cut solution to the problem. The drug-related deaths have sparked calls for stricter drug testing in college and professional sports.

Steps are being taken to look into the problem of cocaine use in hopes of making people more aware of its consequences. But will it be enough to prevent future tragedy? Based on Rogers' death, probably not.

Boeing signs contract for Air Force planes

FAIRBORN, Ohio - A month after it announced that two Boeing 747s had been selected as the next presidential airplanes, the Air Force said it signed a contract for almost $250 million to build the pair of Air Force Ones.

The price is about $30 million below a fiscal cap Congress had imposed, Helen Kavanaugh, a spokeswoman for the Aeronautical Systems Division at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, said Monday.

The actual fixed-price contract is for $249.8 million with the Boeing Military Airplane Co. in Wichita, Kan. The 747-200B aircraft will be built in Everett, Wash., then outfitted at the Wichita plant, she said. Items that have to be installed in the planes include extra power systems and thousands of pounds of electronic communcations equipment.

The four-engine Boeing planes were selected over three-engine McDonnell Douglas DC-10s. The 747s will replace a pair of aging Boeing 707s.

The new planes are to be delivered in late 1988 and early 1989. The contract includes training for crews and maintenance workers.

The Air Force and Boeing still are negotiating a price for spare parts and for a parts depot at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland, where the planes are based.

Hess fails to appear, judge issues warrant

MOUND CITY - A bench warrant was issued Monday for the arrest of Paul Hess, Linn County District Judge Leighton Fossey issued the warrant for Hess, who has been living in Saudia Arabia.

The trial was rescheduled for Monday after Hess, 37, did not appear on June 9, when it was originally set to be heard. At that time, defense attorney Harold Matney said that because of a religious holiday, Hess had been unable to obtain a visa necessary to leave Saudia Arabia.

In the Linn County case, Hess is accused of forging the signature of his former wife, Anne Oliver Hess, and her mother, Maxine Oliver, on a promissory note and mortgage used to secure a $43,000 bank loan in June of 1984.

He pleaded innocent in February and waived a preliminary hearing. Hess served three terms in the Kansas Senate from a Wichita district, rising to become one of the most powerful lawmakers in the state as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He moved to Overland Park in 1984 and was an unsuccessful candidate for the Senate from another district.

Hospital says radioactive material missing

KANSAS CITY - Radioactive material used in cancer research has been missing at the University of Kansas Medical Center for at least 10 months, hospital officials

The radioactive material - Cesium - is potentially hazardous if it has been removed from its lead container but cannot contaminate earth, water or air and cannot be used to make explosive devices, the hospital said in a fact sheet released

The material, encased in a one-inch long sealed stainless steel cylinder that is housed in a lead container shaped like a big coffee can, was brought to the hospital in 1973 for a research project and listed on the hospital's computer. The medical center said the researcher left in 1977 and the radioactive source was deleted from hospital records and placed in a basement storage room.

Ruth Schukman-Dakotas, the medical center's director of safety, said she saw the outer shipping crate of the material in 1980 and checked with the responsible department each year to determine if the material should be kept. Last September, she said, it was determined the material could be removed, but she found the storeroom empty. It was believed that the room was cleaned out between 1983 and 1984.

When we discovered it missing in September 1985, we assumed it had just been moved somewhere else in the institution," public relations director Mary Harrison said Monday when she was asked about the delay in reporting the disappearance. The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has made a preliminary report of the incident to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Damaged cable halts long-distance service

She said there are about 5,500 telephone customers in the 10 towns served by four independent telephone companies.

The Kansas towns without long-distance service were Louisburg, Pleasanton, La Cygne, Parker, Mound City, Blue Mound, Prescott.

The Missouri towns knocked out of service were Amoret, Foster and Hume.

Court appoints trial judge in water dispute

TOPEKA - The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday appointed a "special master" to hear arguments in the dispute between Kansas and Colorado over depletion of water

Attorney General Robert T. Stephan said Wade H. McCree Jr., a professor of law at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, was appointed to serve as trial judge in hearing the case and making a recommendation to the high court.

McCree, a graduate of the Harvard law school, has served before as a special master including the case to determine in which state the Howard Hughes estate would be probated.

Kansas filed a complaint against its neighboring state to the west on Dec. 16, 1985, alleging Colorado has violated the terms of the 1948 Arkansas River Compact established between the two states to ensure equitable distribution of water in the river.

In the suit, Stephan contends Colorado is illegally diverting and consuming more than its fair share of the river's water. According to the suit, Colorado's actions have reduced the flow in the river and availability of water to Kansans.

Specifically, the suit complains of unrestrained operation of 1,500 irrigation wells in the river valley and it charges Colordao has impounded too much water in reservoirs constructed on tributaries that feed the Arkansas.

Appeals court reverses publication ruling

ST. LOUIS - Suburban school officials violated the constitutional rights of student journalists by deleting articles on divorce and teen pregnancy from a high school newspaper, a divided federal appeals court ruled Monday.

In issuing its opinion, a three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a ruling last year by U.S. District Judge John F. Nangle. Nangle concluded that publication of the Spectrum newspaper at Hazelwood East High School was a classroom laboratory exercise and therefore exempt from the First Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

But the appellate panel ruled that Spectrum was a public forum for the expression of student opinion and protected by the First Amendment. The panel sent the case back to the District Court to determine whether damages should be awarded to the plaintiffs, three former students at Hazelwood East.

No improvement

Your recent article on parking spaces reemphasizes the total lack of sensitivity on the part of the administration of this University.

One of the major problems and concerns for the commuting student is the lack of parking space on campus. According to the June 25 issue of the Collegian, the number of parking spaces on campus will be decreasing over the next couple years, but the quality of parking will be "improved."

This is like telling a starving child their food supply is going to decrease but the quality will improve. The child will die sooner and the student commuter will find a more sensitive college sooner.

The University is paying $100,950 for the renovation of lot A1 and to quote Abe Fattaey, engineer in Facilities Planning, "Surprisingly, we'll only lose five spaces." Just think; for a million dollars we would lose only 50 spaces, and for 2 million we could do away with the entire lot.

If the University was really concerned about the student, it would be spending money to increasing parking not decrease it. Since the University has so much money to spend eliminating parking spaces, why don't they put some lights up at the football stadium so we could have night games? Or have they thought of that yet?

The question I have for the administration is not "who is in charge," but "is anybody in charge?"

KC falls for 10th straight

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Floyd Rayford, Cal Ripken and Fred Lynn hit home runs Monday night, boosting the Baltimore Orioles past Kansas City 8-1 and handed the staggering world champion their 10th consecutive defeat.

The Royals, who staggered back home Monday from an 0-9 road trip and a club record nine consecutive losses, dropped eight games below .500 at 37-45.

Mike Boddicker, 11-4, scattered eight hits in snapping a personal three-game losing streak. The Royals' run came on Steve Balboni's 17th homer in the fifth after the Orioles had taken a 5-0 lead over Charlie Leibrandt, 8-6.

Rayford, just recalled from the minors, hit his second home run of the season leading off the third inning and the Orioles scored three times in the fourth.

Lynn singled leading off the inning and Ripken followed with his 12th homer. The Orioles then loaded the bases on walks to Juan Beniquez and Rick Dempsey and Mike Young's bunt single. Steve Farr relieved Leibrandt and walked Tom O'Malley to force in a run.

Despite start, Jackson patient

By The Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. - Bo Jackson, the Heisman Trophy winner who passed up football's big money to play minor-league baseball, is hitting just .074, but his boss said Monday the right fielder will still make the grade.

"I think he's done quite well," said George Lapides, president of the Memphis Chicks, a Class AA affiliate of the Kansas City Royals.

Jackson signed with the Royals and joined the Chicks last month after turning down a contract worth a reported $7 million with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers of the National Football League, who chose Jackson No. 1 overall in the draft.

Jackson has played seven games for the Chicks, four as a designated hitter and three as a right fielder.

The 6-foot-1, 220-pound former running back from Auburn has struck out 11 times, has two hits and one run batted in in 27 at-bats.

Lapides said it has to be considered that Jackson joined the team without the benefit of spring training or any preseason conditioning.

"He's getting in shape and doing his fine tuning and playing games all at the same time, which baseball players aren't ever asked to do," Lapides said.

Jackson was 0-for-4 Sunday as the Chicks lost 6-2 to the Greenville Braves. He grounded out three times and struck out once.

"This is going to take some time, but I'm seeing the ball better and I'm making better contact," Jackson said Sunday. "I'm not worried," Jackson said.

"I see myself as a patient person. The coaches are patient with me, and when it comes around, it's going to come around big.'

Jackson joined the Chicks amid a media show that brought in reporters and photographers from around the country.

His first game attracted 7,026 fans, more than twice the usual attendance at Chicks games.

Ted Tornow, a Chicks spokesman who travels with the team, said Jackson expects to draw criticism because of his poor batting average, but is confident of eventual success.

"He understands that the people are going to get on him, the media are going to get on him, for the slow start," Tornow said in a telephone interview from Greenville

"When he played at Auburn he had a slow start," Tornow said. "When it breaks, it's going to break big."

Tornow said team officials are willing to give Jackson the time he needs to get his game going.

"They're real patient with him and they're giving him every opportunity to succeed," he said. "They know what he can do and they're just giving him every opportunity to do so."

Rozelle unveils strict drug-testing measures

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle said today that the NFL will require more frequent urine testing, including two unscheduled tests during the regular season, for every player in the Rozelle said drugs to be tested for will include cocaine, marijuana, opiates (such as heroin), PCP, amphetamines and alcohol.

Amphetamines will be tested for but initially handled through education and counseling, the commissioner said, adding that alcohol is not prohibitive but that high levels of it and other indications of alcohol problems would lead to treatment and possible discipline.

At a news conference, the NFL also released a letter from Rozelle to Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association in Washington.

"The issue of drug use by NFL players has arrived at a stage where everyone is being hurt players, clubs and the league in general," the letter stated. "More needs to be done and very soon." Rozelle also told Upshaw, "I do not view this as an employeremployee issue. My decision was reached without consulting the clubs. Moreover, Dr. (Forest) Tennant will coordinate the testing treatment and education elements of the program with only minimal club involvement."

The appointment of Tennant, an nationally recognized expert in the field of chemical dependency treatment, as the NFL drug advisor is one of the seven steps in the plan Rozelle is augmenting.

Other steps were: - Retaining a network of clincical laboratories to collect and analyze all specimens.

Placing all users of prohibitive substances under medical care as soon as they are identified and confirmed.

- Assigning Tennant and the clinical laboratories responsibility for administering urine testing of draft eligible college players at the annual timing and testing sessions in Feburary.

- Testing NFL players at preseason training camps and in case of reasonable cause.

- Removing the league office and NFL clubs as much as possible from the administration of drug testing and the program's treatment aspects.

- Establishing procedures that in some cases will provide for remedies while preserving confidentiality of test results. In other cases there will be immediate removal of players who test positive from their teams' active rosters, and in extreme cases, there could be a permanent ban from the league.

can review civil rights decisions by state agencies. The decision ordered further proceedings in a suit by a black faculty member at the University of Tennessee, who charged that his 1981 dismissal had been based on discrimination.

Agreed to decide whether a public employer may promote a woman over a more-qualified man to help get women into higher-ranking jobs. That case involves the appeal of a man denied promotion to a job as a dispatcher by Santa Clara County, Calif. In a related case, the court agreed to determine whether the Alabama State Police may promote one black trooper for every white promoted until blacks comprise 25 percent of the upper ranks.

Ordered a federal appeals court to consider striking down the atlarge elections for the Norfolk, Va., City Council as a violation of blacks' voting rights. In a ruling last week, the court made it easier for blacks to challenge election plans that allegedly dilute their voting strength.

Burger, announcing the court's decision concerning the Gramm-Rudman Act on his last day presiding over a court session, said, 'No one can doubt that Congress and the president are confronted with fiscal and economic problems of unprecedented magnitude."

But Burger said that "convenience and efficiency" cannot justify an unconstitutional law.

"By placing the responsibility for execution of the (act) in the hands of an officer who is subject to removal only by itself, Congress in effect has retained control over the execution of the act and has intruded into the executive function," Burger said. "The Constitution does not permit such intrusion.'

Burger is retiring this month and President Reagan has picked Justice William H. Rehnquist to succeed him as chief justice.

The court gave Congress 60 days to implement the fallback provisions of Gramm-Rudman.

Reagan said the decision should not deter Congress from following through with enactment of spending cuts that would have been mandated.

In a written statement, Reagan said. "The elimination of the comptroller general's role...should change little, except that now Congress must make the difficult choices. We were both elected by the American people to make these choices, and I call upon Congress to discharge its responsibilities and redeem its pledge."

"Those of us who have fought so hard to restore fiscal sanity will not allow Congress to get off the hook on its commitment to balance the federal budget," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, one of the prime sponsors of the measure.

Gramm said he and the other main authors of the law would introduce legislation to address the problem cited by the court.

Gramm said he would seek to make the office of comptroller general similar to other agencies, such as the Federal Reserve Board, which operate separately from Congress and the White House.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said the court decision does nothing to change Congress' obligation to deal with federal red ink.

He added, "I would think most people who supported Gramm-Rudman would sort of feel bound to support an effort to have it comply with the Supreme Court decisison.'

alcove, $119,410.

The completion date for the project drawings is Aug. 1, Miller said. Bids for construction of the coliseum will go out Aug. 14, and will be opened Sept. 19. The bids will be presented to the Kansas Board of Regents on Oct. 16 for approval. If approved, tentative completion date for the coliseum will be in October 1988.

Cool said he is confident bids will not be over the base bid of $15.6 million for the building, as was the case in August 1985 when the lowest bid was $3.4 million above the proposed budget. The architects, Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita. have designed a different building and have been significantly conservative, Cool said.

Fewer students enroll during early sessions

By The Collegian Staff

During formal enrollment for freshmen and transfer students, 138 fewer students enrolled than in the same period last year, said Richard Elkins, director of admissions.

When formal enrollment ended June 28, 2,297 freshmen and transfer students had enrolled. Last year at this time, 2435 new students had enrolled, Elkins

"We do not see this as a significant difference. Generally, we feel we've enrolled about the same amount," Elkins said.

Last year was the first year students could participate in informal enrollment.

"The slight drop in enrollment could be due to more students planning to participate in informal enrollment," Elkins said. Informal enrollment allows students to come to campus for a shorter period of time than is required for formal enrollment.

'During informal enrollment students can meet with an adviser, get their class schedule prepared, pre-enroll and then go home," Elkins said. It doesn't require the student to spend the entire day on campus.

Informal enrollment began Monday and will last until August 1. Officials are expecting a lot more students to participate in it this year.

"We're finding more and more students are working during the summer and find it hard to take a whole day off to go through for-mal enrollment," Elkins said.

Final enrollment will be August 21-22. The first day of classes is August 25. Students who wait until then to enroll will be assesed a late fee of $10. The late fee will increase to $25 on September 22.

Marcos' proponent retreats; Aquino withstands rebellion

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - An ally of Ferdinand Marcos who had declared himself president gave up his rebellion against Corazon Aquino on Monday, but hundreds of his military and civilian backers held out in a luxury hotel.

Arturo Tolentino, Marcos' running mate in February's fraud-tainted elections, abandoned the Manila Hotel with some of his civilian supporters and met for four hours with Rafael Ileto, Aquino's deputy defense minister.

Following the meeting, Tolentino said he and three other pro-Marcos politicians agreed that their civilian followers would leave the hotel by dawn Tuesday.

However, Tolentino still described himself as president and said he did not know what his military supporters planned to do. "I do not control them," he said.

"The purpose of the rally was the oath-taking, and that has been achieved," said Tolentino, who swore himself in Sunday during a rally by about 10,000 Marcos supporters outside the hotel. Tolentino, 75, had declared the hotel his "seat of government."

Senior officers of the approximately 100 soldiers in the hotel gave reporters contradicting statements after a meeting late Monday night. One said the soldiers would follow Tolentino's decision but another said they could stay holed up for "two days, four days or even one week."

Aquino had set a 24-hour deadline to vacate the building, which by Monday was littered and dirty as a result of the occupation.

Tolentino said he had been ordered to declare himself acting president by Marcos, who is in exile in Hawaii.

Aquino, who had been on a visit to the southern city of Cagayan de Oro when the rebellion broke out, said at a news conference, "Let me tell you now that the law will not be flouted

She said Tolentino would be charged with sedition, but the elderly politician was not arrested.

Asked what she would do if the rebels did not heed her, Aquino replied, "I will not tell you what our options are at this point."

Although Tolentino and his followers tried to repeat the February "people power" revolution that ended Marcos' 20-year rule and brought Aquino to power, it was clear by Monday that he had failed.

About 300 soldiers, including several generals, originally responded Tolentino's call. But 200 of them subsequently surrendered.

More than 1,000 government soldiers and riot police, backed by at least eight armored personnel carriers, ringed the 500-room hotel.

No serious violence was reported, but witnesses said they saw Marcos loyalists beat up two men they found in the hotel's generator room during a brief power interruption.

Eight offices open

Ag retraining program starts

By The Associated Press

PRATT - Lt. Gov. Tom Docking said Kansas is beginning to take the matter of dislocated farmers "into our own hands," as he and other state officials marked the opening of eight Rural Employment Assistance Program offices across the state

The $1.2 million REAP program, scheduled to continue for one year, is designed to help retrain 600 Kansas farmers who expect to lose their farms or have lost them already, officials said.

"It's hard not to have mixed feelings about an opening like this,"

Docking said during ceremonies at the Pratt REAP office. "We all wish that programs like REAP weren't necessary.

"But REAP is necessary. There are farmers being forced off the land. There are rural citizens who need assistance."

Similar farmer retraining offices opened at the same time in Chanute, Highland, El Dorado, Scott City, Hays, Lyndon and Beloit. The program is being paid for with a $1 million grant from the federal Department of Labor and $200,000 in state job training funds.

Officials with the state Department of Human Resources said the program is aimed at giving at least 360 former farmers skills necessary to obtain permanent employment.

The offices also should provide training to help farmers search for new jobs, start new businesses and relocate their homes. Farmers who would like more information about REAP should call the state Farmers Assistance, Counseling and Training Services hotline, 1-800-321-3276.

Also attending the ceremony in Pratt were Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, Lynn Cundiff, dean of continuing education at Pratt Community College and Rep. Lee Hamm, D-Pratt.

Career may depend on humorous mood

By CHANGING TIMES The Kiplinger Magazine

Having a good sense of humor could keep you moving ahead in your career.

More than 80 percent of corporate personnel directors and vice-presidents surveyed for Robert Half International, an executive recruiting firm, said people with a sense of humor do better at their jobs than those with little or no sense of humor. Most said middle to top managers in their companies had the best sense of humor.

"That's not really surprising," Robert Half told Changing Times. "People with a sense of humor tend to be more creative, less rigid and more willing to consider and embrace new ideas and methods. It's my belief that people who have a sense of humor do better because they are liked. And from the viewpoint of an employer, you hire people you like and you promote people you like. Nobody wants to hire a grouch.'

Officials lift gag on anti-apartheid activist

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa The government said Monday it lifted all restrictions against antiapartheid activist Winnie Mandela, but the press was warned to be careful about quoting her under national emergency regulations.

Police reported that a 58-year-old white man was shot to death in the Port Elizabeth black township of Zwide after dropping off black workers, the 141st person reported killed in political violence since the emergency was declared June 12.

Also Monday, about 10,000 black gold and diamond miners were on strike or staging slowdowns to protest the detention of union leaders under the emergency declaration. ### S. Africa lifts assembly ban after unions challenge order

By The Associated Press

Kansas State University

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - The government said Wednesday it had made a mistake, and lifted a two-day-old ban on union meetings a few hours after four black unions challenged it in court.

The Bureau for Information said the original ban on meetings by 33 organizations in the Johannesburg area "contained certain errors," and a revised order would be issued to-

It said the new order would cover only Soweto, the huge black township outside Johannesburg, and would exclude all trade unions

The unions filed court papers late Wednesday afternoon against the ban, issued under the nationwide state of emergency imposed June 12, saying its disruptive effects on contract negotiations could prompt national strikes. The government announced early in the evening that the ban was lifted.

Unions representing hundreds of thousands of black workers have mounted strikes, go-slows and other actions to protest the detention of scores of their leaders under the emergency.

Those actions, the only effective black protest of the emergency, have prompted appeals by white employer organizations that the union officials be freed.

As many as 18,000 members of the National Union of Mineworkers have disrupted shifts in the past few days at gold, coal and diamond mines. Thousands of workers in chain retail stores have held sitdown strikes.

Jay Naidoo, secretary-general of the Congress of South African Trade Unions, said Wednesday before the ban on meetings was lifted that plans would go ahead for a "national day of action" Monday to protest the emergency. The congress represents unions with about 500,000 members.

Naidoo, who is in hiding to avoid detention, said in a clandestine interview that the ban "confirmed to us that the government has no intention of meeting our demands or finding solutions to the country's problems.'

"There has been increasing repression. A number of our offices have been virtually closed, in Cape Town the food workers' union's executive meeting was broken up, possession of our T-shirts was made an offense," he said.

"Now the structures of industrial relations are fundamentally threatened by the attacks on our organizations.

White company executives protested both the detentions of union leaders and the ban on meetings, saying they damaged relations built up since black unions were legalized

The information bureau issued a statement by national police headquarters, which had imposed the meetings ban, noting that unions would be exempt from the revised

Louis le Grange, minister of law and order, met employers "to help with problems arising out of the present abnormal situation, and to stress the fact that no employee is or will be detained for bona fide trade union activities," the bureau said.

Le Grange has said those in custody are held for political reasons, not because they are union

Aquino offers forgiveness to rebels

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino said Wednesday she will forgive Arturo Tolentino and soldiers who backed his brief attempt to assume the presidency if they pledge loyalty, but that she will tolerate no further rebellion.

Her executive secretary, Joker Arroyo, said sedition charges might be filed if the offer is rejected. Tolentino's passport was revoked temporarily, along with those of 24 other supporters of former President Ferdinand E. Marcos, who fled the country Feb. 26.

Tolentino could not be reached for comment. He has not returned telephone calls since the rebellion ended at dawn Tuesday.

Chilean police fire on crowd

By The Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile - Riot police fired tear gas and water cannons Wednesday to disperse an estimated 2,000 mourners marching behind the casket of a teen-ager burned to death during an anti-government demonstration last week.

Witnesses said the 19-year-old victim had been set on fire by an army patrol, and Chile's Human Rights Commission reported a second torching Wednesday.

Commission spokesman Jorge del Picoin said men in civilian clothes seized Mario Antonio Araya Marchant late Tuesday in Valparaiso, drove him to suburban Renaca, soaked him with flammable liquid and set him afire. He said the victim was in serious condition at a hospital. Authorities declined comment.

In Santiago, mourners scattered by police regrouped in the General Cemetery to bury Rodrigo Rojas de Negri. They shouted slogans during the ceremony against the militay government of President Augusto

"Few times in Chile has there been crime so cruel," Maximo Pachecon, vice president of the rights commission, said in a speech.

"A culture of death is being imposed on us. If this crime is covered up or denied, it will lead to a spiral of violence and more crimes.'

Board requests new state aid

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA, Kan. - The State Board of Education approved a tentative budget request Wednesday that calls for $25 million in new state aid to local school districts during the next fiscal year, allowing districts to increase expenditures by 2 percent or 3.5 percent depending on current spending.

The school finance funding request was included in the Department of Education's proposed mid-level budget of $638.8 million for the fiscal year that begins July 1, 1987.

Board member Connie Hubbell of Topeka told a news conference after the meeting that although the Legislature narrowly approved putting $10 million in new funds into the school aid formula for the 1986-87 school year, she's optimistic that lawmakers will back an additional $25 million next year.

Under the plan, the state's 304 local school districts would be allowed to increase property taxes by a combined total of $32.5 million and provide teachers with average salary increases of 4 percent, said Dale Dennis, assistant commissioner of education for finance.

Property taxes would increase under the plan by an average of 3 mills across the state, or $3 for each $1,000 of assessed valuation, the officials said.

School districts with per-pupil expenditures below the median in their enrollment categories would be allowed to raise their budgets 3.5 percent next year, and those above the median could raise their's by 2 percent under the board's proposal.

Hubbell said there are no new programs included in any of the tentative budget plans because board members are aware of continuing shortfalls in state revenue, which may result in a battle over spending during the 1987 legislative session.

"We are not asking for any new programs to be funded knowing the fiscal restraints that we're under," Hubbell said.

The budget plan, which the board will review again next month, calls for minimum spending by the department of $636.3 million during fiscal year 1988, compared to $637.4 the Legislature approved this year.

The plan's so-called "C Level" budget, or the most optimistic level of expenditures, would total $681.5 million. Hubbell said she expects lawmakers will hold the department's spending to current levels but may add funds for some programs, bringing the total to somewhere between $638 million and $681 million.

The proposal also calls for increasing the state's per-credit hour aid to Kansas' 19 community colleges and Washburn University from the current $26.25 per hour of enrollment to $27.25 next year.

Dennis said that if the Legislature decides next year to put only $10 million in new money into the school aid formula, as it did this year, property taxes may increase by as much as $53.5 million across the state.

Increased enrollment is one factor that has put additional pressure on local school budgets, said Dennis, who added that public schools in Kansas will be forced to spend an extra $12 million to keep pace with an expected statewide enrollment increase of about 4,000 students next

Committee chooses administrative finalists

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

The names of three finalists for the position of vice president for institutional advancement were announced Wednesday by Charles Reagan, chairman of the Vice Presidential Search Committee.

Reagan, assistant to the president, said the candidates include; Koy M. Floyd, director of university relations and professor of educational administration at the University of Tulsa; Richard B. Lancaster. vice president for development and college relations at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.; and Robert S. Krause, director of student affairs for the Minnesota State University System in St. Paul.

Krause was former director of student affairs at Southwest State University, in Marshall, Minn., Reagan said. Southwest State has an enrollment of 1,922. Krause worked under the direction of President Jon Wefald, who was president of the university from 1977 to 1982. Krause is currently the director of student affairs of the Minnesota State University System. Wefald was also the chancellor of the Minnesota system before accepting the position of president at K-State on sibilities include coordinating a system-wide policy and program development with the vice presidents for student affairs and the directors of admissions and financial aid. In 1983, he served on the Minnesota governor's Commission on the Future of Postsecondary Education in Minnesota. Krause received a master's degree from Michigan State University in East Lansing Floyd has been with the University of Tulsa administration since 1983. He currently oversees a staff of up to 20 communication and publication specialists and advises the university on all institutional marketing activities. The university enrolls 3,900 students. Floyd wrote an admissions marketing plan that broke a three-year declining enrollment streak for the University of Oklahoma while he was there from 1977 to 1979, a K-State news release reported. Floyd received a Ph.D. from the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque.

Lancaster has been at Earlham College in Richmond, Ind., since 1981. Earlham posts an enrollment figure of 1,035 students. He is in charge of the development, fund raising, public relations and publications programs, alumni affairs and community relations. Previously, he served as vice president for college relations at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., and as president of Simpson College, Indianola, Iowa. Lancaster received his Ph.D.

from the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

The three candidates were chosen from approximately 30 applications submitted to the committee, Reagan said.

A 90-minute forum with each of the candidates is to be held at 10:30 a.m. July 15, 18 and 22 in Union Room 212. These forums are designed to allow the public to meet the candidates and ask questions. Along with the open forums, each candidate will undergo a series of closed interviews, Reagan said. A final decision on the position cannot be made immediately following the last interview due to the possibility of a fourth candidate being added to the list of finalists, Reagan said.

"Our goal is to have a decision by the end of July," Reagan said.

In addition to Reagan, the tenmember search committee includes; Don Hoyt, director of planning and evaluation services; Mike Johnson, assistant to the president; Steven Johnson, student body president; Mark Lapping, dean of architecture and design; Elizabeth McCullough, associate professor of textiles; David Schafer, president of the Faculty Senate and professor of animal sciences and industry; William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services; Nancy Twiss, arts and sciences academic adviser; and Larry Weigel, director of the KSU Alumni Association.

Book availability may lessen

Farrell Library may soon be affected by budget cuts at the Library of Congress, particularly those cuts involving the acquisition and cataloging of new books.

"The Library of Congress is the source of a very high percentage (of our cataloging data)...in fact, I believe we receive about 80 percent of our cataloging data directly from the Library of Congress," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

Farrell Library subscribes to the service provided by the Library of Congress for a fee to libraries and computerized library networks around the country by means of an electronic distribution service.

The Library of Congress catalogs approximately 180,000 titles anmation available to other libraries through the service.

The Library of Congress' budget was cut 8 percent below that of fiscal 1985 by a combination of automatic budget cuts required by the federal deficit-reduction law, and a reduced appropriation already in effect for fiscal 1986.

Although a reduction in hours of service at the Library of Congress has been a widely publicized costcutting measure, other areas have also been hard hit, including purchasing and cataloging of new materials.

Due to fewer staff members, the Library of Congress has reported it will have to process between 20,000 and 25,000 fewer books.

He said Farrell will probably wait until the Library of Congress has the funds to catalog the book, because the Library of Congress' system of cataloging is so well respected. During this time, he said, these books will remain unavailable to patrons. "The students and faculty will be deprived of their use while we are waiting on the Library of Congress," Hobrock said.

Librarians worry that the reduction in titles acquired by the Library of Congress will cause gaps in scholarly literature for future

Hobrock said he believes if the Library of Congress has a reduction in cataloging there will be longterm effects for all libraries. But, option to do its own cataloging.

However, the problem with Farrell doing the original cataloging of materials is, unlike the Library of Congress, Farrell's cataloging would not be nationally recognized, Hobrock said.

Major provisions affecting higher education have been included and approved by Senate in a supplemental spending measure for fiscal 1986 to offset reductions made earlier this year. But the House bill dealing with the same subject contains no extra money for the library. The Senate spending measure would add to the Library of Congress' budget $1 million which would include $500,000 for aquisition of books, periodicals and newspapers and $160,000 for

CENTRALIA - After spending nearly three hours touring miles of flood-damaged farmland, county roads and bridges, a state water official Wednesday declared a moratorium on any further channelization of the Black Vermillion

River. David Pope, chief engineer of the Board of Agriculture's division of water resources, declared the north and south forks of the river off-limits to further straightening by landowners at the request of the Marshall County Commission, which asked for the action in a letter. "Historically, there has not been a major state presence here on this issue but we can make an exception when the broad, general public interest is involved and at stake," Pope told a meeting of the Kansas-Lower Republican Basin Advisory Committee in this extreme northeast Kansas town of 490.

solution to the problem." The problem Pope was addressing centers on the Upper Black Vermillion River Watershed District which takes in parts of Marshall and Nemaha counties.

About 80 people, including legislators and state water officials, toured the Black Vermillion River and its tributaries Wednesday to view flooding and siltation problems that some say threaten Tuttle Creek.

Tuttle Creek is filling with silt and sediment from its feeder rivers much faster than experts predicted originally. And the water in the rivers is picking up more chemicals, such as pesticides, that must be removed before the water can be used for public drinking supplies.

The potential problem of contamination and filling of the lake with silt takes on added dimensions sion today presented me with a letter since Tuttle is considered a cornerstone supply of drinking water in Manhattan, Topeka, Lawrence and Kansas City in a master plan to survive a major drought in the state.

'The chemical thing worries me the most," Pope said. "It's serious. More so than the siltation problem. We need to find a way to keep water in the banks of the river and keep the chemicals on the land."

It is a complex problem with a lengthy history and it has sparked a controversy with two clear sides: those who want to complete the channels; and those who believe a combination remedy is needed which stresses more dams and less straightening of the river.

When the district was created in 1966, it developed a flood control plan which called for building about 112 smaller lakes to control run-off. A kep provision authorized channelization to straighten out the river so floodwater would flow more easily to the Big Blue River and eventually into Tuttle Creek Lake outside Manhat-

Construction of the small lakes was supposed to come first, followed by straightening of about 60 miles of the river channels.

In about 1969, the federal government abandoned funding of most channelization programs because of the cost involved in protecting the environment.

New guidelines required expensive rip-rap be installed to stabilize the straightened banks and prevent massive topsoil run-off. The guidelines also called for replacement of natural vegitation to provide cover for wildlife and a scouring of the water to remove impurities and prevent a buildup of silt in reservoirs downstream.

Those guidelines were prohibitive and the federal authorities decided it was not cost-effective to continue.

However, work had already started in the upper reaches of the Black Vermillion in straightening of the bends in the river. Meanwhile, construction of about 66 small lakes proceeded mainly in the lower half of the district.

Landowners in the upper reaches pursued the channel-straightening on their own when federal money disappeared but the construction of small flood control dams slowed considerably.

The basin advisory committee, which makes recommendations to the Kansas Water Office for development of the state water plan, took no action Wednesday.

The threat of terrorism has kept a lot of Americans from traveling to Europe, but it didn't stop a group from K-State interested in international business.

For three weeks, faculty and students, as well as other interested persons from Kansas, California and Minnesota, had an opportunity to explore overseas business operations as they participated in an international business study tour.

The trip, sponsored by the College of Business Administration and the Division of Continuing Education, was designed to expose the participants to international business practices and help them broaden their understanding of other social, political and cultural conditions. It included visits to Luxembourg, Lichtenstein, Switzerland, Austria, France and Germany, said Carol Liddell of Manhattan, one of 22 people who took the trip.

"The program could have been taken for credit, but I just went for vacation," she said. "However, it was very worthwhile.'

To earn three hours of credit the participant had to complete a book of readings, attend all scheduled sessions and turn in a final paper. The sessions included meetings with the management of various companies, tours of the firms, and visits with government representatives.

Joseph Barton-Dobenin, former professor of management, and Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration, were the directors.

"The trip was more successful than I anticipated," said BartonDobenin. "Everyone cooperative and helpful, and we had no complaints." The Europeans were, "glad to see someone from the U.S. who wasn't scared to death (of terrorists)," he said.

"I expected a lot of things to be different," said Lynn Langemeier, May graduate in management, but the people and their attitudes were similar.

"I was impressed by the businesses," Langemeier said. "We toured wine and cheese factories, bakeries, a glass company, a lot of banks and the Swiss stock exchange. However, the thing that surprised me the most was the Swiss banking system. It isn't as secret as we are led to believe, and the banks don't protect criminals.

Langemeier said he could see the potential opportunities in international relations now that he has observed the companies in action. Barton-Dobenin plans to schedule the trip annually.

"It will include many of the same countries, but I would like to include Paris, Rome or Milan. It will depend on the political situation there," he said. "Hopefully it will calm down.

"I'm thinking of having it as an intersession class so there can be more participation," he said. "It would probably begin around May 15 and go until the beginning of June.

The tour was a bargain, he said. The $1950 price covered air fare, hotel accommodations, breakfast, sightseeing trips, guides, and insurance. It was also a good experience, he said.

Repertory theatre challenges actors' abilities

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Despite rising unemployment figures, Nancy Sloan, senior in theater, got the job she wanted this

The demands are atypical and it doesn't pay much, but Sloan said she couldn't be happier - even on a

During the course of one day, she's expected to change clothes 22 times and personalities twice, all the while maintaining as much energy as she can muster.

Sloan and six other actors have spent the past four weeks rehearsing 12 hours a day in preparation for this week. Last night's performance of Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing" opened the Summer Repertory Theatre's season.

But that was just the beginning. In rotating repertory style, the group will perform the Shakespearean classic five more times throughout the next four weeks, along with five performances of two other plays. Neil Simon's "Chapter Two" debuts tonight at 8 p.m. in Nichols Theatre and Sam Shepard's "Curse of the Starving Class" opens Friday.

Since the repertory group is small, most actors have had to tackle three to five roles. But they said it's the yourself." challenge of diversity that makes repertory work enjoyable.

"Doing rotating repertory is a needed discipline," said Danny Shea, senior in journalism and mass communications. "Working three shows, developing five characters - it's frustrating.'

Timothy Smith, graduate in theater, said repertory work enables actors to taste the demands of professional theater. In addition to allday rehearsals, the actors must learn more lines in a much shorter period of time.

'It's more akin to what the real professional world is all about," Smith said. "It calls on more of

Smith said that until dress rehearsal the directors had not seen some scenes since the first week of rehearsals. Smith said he had to find time outside the 12-hour practices to work individually on those scenes.

Sloan said the demands of repertory work don't allow much flexibility or room for free time.

"The hardest part is going to rehearsal after you've been at rehearsal all day long, then trying to concentrate when you don't have time to think," Sloan said.

In the Shakespeare production, Sloan plays both a man and a woman. She said learning to walk, stand and talk like a man has been more difficult than she anticipated.

"I really have tried to be bigger," Sloan said, demonstrating how she stands in her role as a man. "I try to take up more stage space. But talking is ridiculous.

Artistic director Lewis Shelton, associate professor of theater, said he intentionally casts people in dissimilar roles. Since most in the group are new to repertory work, he said role variety offers more opportunity for personal acting develop-

"Working on two or three characters simultaneously helps people to grow - fast," Shelton said. One of the aspects of repertory theater Shelton enjoys most is seeing how actors handle different roles each night. Some of the character changes in the Shakespeare play occur within seconds - an additional challenge for actors.

Most actors in "Much Ado About Nothing" are cross-cast. They not only have to do snap character changes, they must also change costumes before coming back on

"We usually have 15 seconds to two minutes to fully change costumes,' said costume mistress Kelli Wondra, senior in theater. "That includes a tunic, cape, shoes, sometimes a beard and headpieces.'

Students and teachers enrolled in the K-State Summer Jazz Workshop this week are getting the chance to learn from one of jazz music's finest musicians.

Rich Matteson, musician and educator from North Texas State University, is featured in the workshop for the second consecutive year, said Bill Harshbarger, adjunct instructor of music and workshop coordinator. Matteson has recorded with Louis Armstrong and Bob Crosby and was voted jazz clinician of the year in 1973 by Downbeat magazine.

"He is one of the most famous jazz musicians in the country and the master of improvisation," Har-shbarger said. Students attend a morning session with Matteson to learn jazz styles and techniques using his original jazz charts. After a break for lunch, they return for an improvisation session, Harshbarger

Lauren Hause, a clarinet and tenor saxophone player and eighthgrade student from Wamego, said she enjoys learning from Matteson. "He relates (to the group) really well," Hause said. "He's pretty easy on you."

Matteson said he expects the best from his students, but he never demands more than he knows they

"You have to be firm enough to get the job done," Matteson said, 'but music exists for pleasure. You have to get students to work hard and play their best...you've got to challenge them, but it's cruel to ask them to play beyond their abilities.'

In the late afternoon and evening, Matteson works with teachers and members of the Manhattan Jazz

"The teachers are learning how to teach jazz improvisation and techniques of rehearsing and teaching jazz band," Harshbarger said. "They also learn hints for good rhythm, good sound and how to produce a good band."

When they're not rehearsing, they observe the student sessions and meet in seminars, he said. Scott Freeby, a May graduate in music education and recently hired director in the Herington school district, said he's learning valuable teaching techniques from Mat-

"I really enjoy his approach and hope to gain insight for teaching my own students," Freeby said.

Matteson has recorded 10 albums including "Louis and the Dukes of Dixieland" with Louis Armstrong and "Something's Happening on the River" with Bob Scobey. He has also recorded nearly 40 education albums with student jazz bands across the country.

Bryant said.

By The Collegian Staff

Photographers Dave Bryant and David Stickler may live more than 1.200 miles apart, but their Union Art Gallery exhibit, "Reflections Perfections," shares a common interest in photography between the two friends

"Reflections" refers to the work done by Bryant, associate professor of architecture. His color photographs depict reflections on the surface of various bodies of water.

"Perfections" refers to Stickler's work. Stickler is employed by the Avco Research Laboratory in Massachusetts

In his black and white photography, Stickler works toward a perfect print by using the "zone" system of photography. It is a way of controlling the contrast and overall brightness in the print.

Bryant first started photographing reflections in 1968. He got the idea when he was walking near a lake. "The reflections caught my eye,"

Bryant likes to photograph reflections because they are ambiguous.

'You can't always tell what you're looking at," he said. "Reflections are a distortion of the real world in an unpredictable way."

Bryant has taught photography in the College of Architecture and Design and for the University for Man. He was a three-award winner in the 1986 Union Program Council Photography Contest.

Stickler, who has exhibited his work in the Boston area since 1978, has won several awards, including third place in a national competition sponsored and published by the Christian Science Monitor.

The photographs will be on display through July 25.

Farmers needing help still waiting

On May 8, the Kansas Family Farm Rehabilitation Act went into effect but its effect has been mainly on the judicial system not on those needing help.

The act, in brief, provides for a moratorium on farm foreclosures for not more than three years, with a requirement that interest payments be made to the lender. Those payments are to be based on fair market values.

But on June 24, Washington County District Judge Richard Wahl ruled the act unconstitutional. Wahl said the law would deny creditors their rightful property without due process of law and would impair provisions of the mortgage contract between the creditor and debtor.

To make things even more confusing, Miami County District Judge Stephen Hill granted a Miami County farmer protection under the act on the same day as the Wahl decision was made public.

In the latter case, Judge Hill ordered a stay for 30 days, with provisions for a one-year stay if the farmer pays the court an amount equal to the interest for one year on the fair market value of the land.

Attorney General Robert Stephan expects the Kansas Supreme Court to make a decision in October, with district judges allowing continuances in special cases.

But while lawyers and judges are haggling out the problems, farmers are still sweating out foreclosure threats and creditors are waiting for payments sometimes necessary to extend their own existence or at least guarantee their capability of making loan funds available for solvent farmers.

Judicial officials will have to come to some agreement fairly soon if the farm act is to ever have the desired effect. That is, helping farmers retain land no one else would know what to do with.

Sodomy ruling threatens privacy

The Supreme Court's recent decision to uphold the validity of a Georgia law against sodomy seems, by all appearances, to go against the grain of Americans - even conservatives. Polls indicate that at least 50 percent of the individuals surveyed are against the ruling without stating whether they believe sodomy is wrong or whether they think the ruling invades the privacy of the bedroom.

Both issues are at stake. While the justices defend the decision as being important to health in America (studies indicate AIDS affects many more Americans than are reported treated, they accomplished an about face on historical precedent.

Although the Constitution does not specifically guarantee a right of privacy, it has been considered implicit in the Bill of Rights since 1965. Rulings for 21 years have supported this principle, and in 1973 it served as the basis for giving women the right to an abortion. But the court said the implied right of privacy does not apply to homosexual activity.

The decision not only flies in the face of more than two decades of court decisions, it also raises new and alarming questions on how far follow-up legislation allowing enforcement of the decision will

Will "suspects of sodomy" be arrested at work or on the streets and taken away? Or will enforcement agencies resort to vice squads, wire-taps and stake-outs to catch the culprits in action?

National security needs planning

Symptoms of a serious problem have been popping up all over Washington in recent weeks. President Reagan did - or maybe, didn't - signal an end to American adherence to the SALT II treaty limits on deployment of nuclear missiles. The House, by a shaky 12-vote margin, reversed its earlier refusal to provide military aid to the anti-Sandinista Contras in Nicaragua.

The State Department said the United States is ending its defense obligations to New Zealand because of New Zealand's refusal to allow Navy ships with nuclear weapons the use of its harbors.

On another front, the United States increased its contacts with forces opposing the government of South Africa, but refused again to impose economic sanctions against

More symptoms: The budget approved by Congress reduced inflation-adjusted Pentagon appropriations for the second straight year, without any easing of our defense obligations. And the Senate and Armed Services Committee, trying to stay within those limits, had a series of 10-9 votes on military projects involving several hundred million dollars each. Is this any way for a superpower to manage its national security? The answer given by several key Republican legislators is "no," and they have taken the lead in a modest-looking but potentially significant reform.

Believing that all these are symptoms of a lack of an agreed-upon overall defense and foreign policy, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and Reps. Bob McEwen, R-Ohio, and Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., have sponsored what they call "the national strategy act."

Its provisions were attached to the Department of Defense reorganizaton act recently passed by the Senate and to the companion bill being written in the House Armed Services Committee.

It would require the administration to submit, at the time of the president's annual

budget message, "a comprehensive written report on the national security strategy of the United States," including a rundown on our "vital interests, goals and objectives" and "the foreign policy, worldwide commitments and national defense capabilities...necessary to deter

At the beginning of each congressional session, the secretaries of state and defense would be invited to testify together on the report to joint meetings of the Foreign Affairs and Armed Services committees of the House and Senate.

Smart "hawks," like Rep. John McCain, R-Ariz., the much-decorated Navy veteran and Vietnam POW, have complained for more than two years that military spending has not been gauged by "the commitments the United States has in the world" and the resources available to meet them.

As Warner, McEwen and Cheney pointed out in interviews, the process mandated by their national strategy act could enforce a degree of rationality and planning into the foreign policy/defense field.

It would give Congress a basic yardstick against which to measure the myriad of individual decisions it makes on foreign aid, military assistance and defense appropriations. Although foreign-policy goals logically should determine defense strategy, the Armed Services and Foreign Affairs committees almost never meet or do business with each

"Instead of focusing on the national interest," McEwen said, "we go from crisis to crisis and parochial interest to parochial interest....We debate aid to Contras as if the issue were which agency's accounting system we trust, and we decide battleship vs. carrier, not on our obligations to protect the sea lanes, but whether Pascagoula or San Diego should have more jobs.

Equally important are the potential benefits for the administration. The secretary of state and secretary of defense traditionally avoid giving joint testimony to

By requiring them to frame a joint "national strategy" document and answer questions on it together, Cheney said, "you not only force a more coherent debate, you force the early surfacing of the differences within the administration.'

Warner, a former secretary of the Navy, agreed that one of the major effects of the new process "would be to require both the secretaries to meet beforehand and reconcile the major differences those two powerful individuals often have had."

That is supposed to be done now through the National Security Council. But the frequent disagreements between George Shultz and Caspar Weinberger on arms control, troop commitments and other basic security issues clearly indicates that the process is not working well. Nor is this the first administration to face that problem.

The sponsors tell me that Weinberger has been supportive of their effort while the State Department, perhaps jealous of its prerogatives, has been dragging its feet, giving public assent while undersecretary John Whitehead lobbied privately against it.

That does not bode well for the execution of the new procedure if, as seems likely, it becomes law this year.

The effort to involve both the administration and Congress in defining a comprehensive and reasonable national security policy deserves the best effort both branches of government can muster.

Nuclear commission to fine Wolf Creek

WICHITA - The Nuclear Regulatory Commission plans to fine the utility owners of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant $40,000 for leaving storm drain manhole covers unbolted.

Kansas Gas and Electric Co., managing partner at the plant, and an NRC spokesman announced the proposed fine Wednesday. Both said the unbolted covers could have provided unauthorized access to restricted areas. KG&E and NRC spokesmen said nobody gained access to the areas through the manhole covers, which had been unbolted since they were installed more than 18 months ago. Although federal regulations permit a fine of as much as $80,000 for security violations such as the one alleged, the NRC cut the penalty in half because of KG&E's prompt reporting of the incident, the corrective actions the utility took and its prior security record, said Ronn Smith, a KG&E spokesman.

Smith said KG&E hasn't decided yet whether to appeal. KG&E and Kansas City Power and Light Co. each own 47 percent of the nuclear plant. Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc., a company formed by electric cooperatives, owns the remaining share.

Terrorists claim responsibility for bombing

MUNICH, West Germany - A terrorist bomb planted at the base of a roadside tree demolished an industrialist's passing limousine Wednesday, killing him and his chauffeur and sending bursts of flame 65 feet into the air.

The car carrying Karl Heinz Beckurts, 56, was blown 20 feet off the road near his home, crumpled and riddled with holes. Police found a remote-control cable leading into the woods of the exclusive Strasslach suburb. A message from the leftist Red Army Faction found nearby said it killed Beckurts, a board member of the giant Siemens electronics company, because Siemens was negotiating a role in the U.S. space defense program known as Star Wars. The force of the explosion smashed the windshield of a trailing car carrying a bodyguard, who was not injured and described the flames to police. Terrorists of the Red Army Faction, and its predecessor Baader-Meinhof gang, have been attacking West German industrialists and other corporate, government and NATO targets since the 1960s.

Four-year-old dies in mother's suicide act

HARRISONVILLE, Mo. - A 4-year-old boy has died from inhaling fumes resulting from his mother's suicide, despite her apparent efforts before she died to shield him from them, officials say.

Linda Lash, 36, was found dead on the floor of her garage Monday morning, next to her car, with the motor running. Her father, J. D. Jones, found the body when he arrived to pick up his grandson, Christopher, to spend the day with him.

Jones, 63, an optometrist from Belton, drove to find his son, Thad, in downtown Harrisonville. The younger Jones ran to tell police, then went to the home and found Christopher's body on the floor of his bedroom. The door of the room had been locked from the outside.

Police said the boy died about 7 a.m. Monday, three hours before his grandfather arrived at the home.

They said Lash, who was divorced, had tried to seal off the attached garage from the rest of her house. "She used paper and rags and tape to seal off the overhead garage door and the door that led into the house," said Harrisonville Police Chief Norman Schnorf. "She locked the boy in his room, I suppose to keep him from getting into the garage.'

"I guess she just didn't realize that when the air conditioner kicked on, it would carry the fumes throughout the house," he said.

Lash also had a daughter, Renee, 15, who was visiting relatives at the time. Officials said that Lash, who worked at a factory in Grandview, did not leave a

Women outnumber men in earning Ph.Ds

New doctors of education took the longest time, 14.6 years, while physical scientists completed their studies in the least amount of time, 7.2 years.

In the fields of health sciences, psychology, languages and literature, and educa-

Research Council began tracking new Ph.D.s in 1958. The council is an arm of the National Academy of Sciences.

Aviators commence non-stop global flight

MOJAVE, Calif. - Two aviators took off from a windy high desert airfield Wednesday on a planned non-stop, 41/2-day shakedown flight to see if their experimental lightweight aircraft can fly around the world without refueling. Its long thin wings flexing in a gusty cross-wind, the experimental Voyager climbed into the desert sky, circled the airfield and headed for the Pacific Ocean. Pilot Dick Rutan, 46, and co-pilot Jeana Yeager, 32, slipped into the slim, tubular cockpit and took off on the engineering test flight at 8:10 a.m.

If all goes as planned, the Voyager will fly repeated circles between Santa Barbara and San Francisco, covering 12,532 miles with the pilots taking turns flying and resting until a landing scheduled here Sunday.

Rutan and Yeager plan to start the non-stop global journey on Sept. 14, said Peter Riva, marketing and public relations director for Voyager Aircraft Inc.

The pilots will rely on the aircraft's automatic flight systems, radar and avionics designed to prevent fatigue. A chase plane will keep tabs on Voyager and a ground crew, including a flight surgeon to keep watch on the pilots' nutrition and health, will stay in radio contact.

The plane has been put through more than 130 hours of tests on 44 previous test flights. It has cost $1 million and taken more than 22,000 hours of labor over two years to build.

Lady Cat coach fills summer working on basketball camp

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

Ask any collegiate coach what time of year they can readjust their bodily systems back to a state of normalcy and reaquaint themselves with their spouses and families and every one will instantly answer sum-

Lady Cat Head Coach Matilda Mossman is no different from any of the other coaches in that regard. She is currently filling her summer "vacation" running her annual Matilda Mossman-Lady Cat Basketball Camp at Ahearn Field House this week.

Mossman, knowing the rigorous pressures coaches and players face during the season, tries to keep the tension level low-keyed and the pressure to excel at a minimum.

"We try to have a real relaxed atmosphere," Mossman said after running the campers through a series of defensive drills. "During the season is when the pressure is on and the coaches get caught up and the players get caught up with rivalries and those kinds of things.

"Summertime is just a chance to relax and learn and have fun. That is what we are trying to promote here...Their goal is to learn as much as they can - our goal is to teach them as much as they can," she said.

Mossman is hosting 70 campers ranging in ages from seventh grade through 12th grade. As far as talent is concerned, Mossman believes at least "five or six" of the campers will wind up with scholarships to junior college and National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics

But, Mossman is quick to caution that one week does not an All-American make.

Tonya Lane, a senior-to-be from Winchester, said she is using her fourth summer basketball camp to work on her "defensive play" and gain that edge it will take to earn a college scholarship.

"I like to practice a lot over the summer, it keeps me on track," said Paula Martin, a Nortonville veteran of three summer basketball camps who is also hoping to play on the collegiate level after high school.

"Basically we just try to get the fundamentals down," Mossman said. "We try to teach them the basic things to do, then it is up to them to take it from here and go out and practice every day.'

Royals finally strike win column; defeat Orioles and 11-game skid

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The world champion Kansas City Royals snapped a club record 11-game losing streak Wednesday night, blanking the Baltimore Orioles 3-0 as Danny Jackson teamed with Bud Black on a three-hitter and Lonnie Smith scored all the runs.

It was the first victory for the Royals since June 26 when they beat Oakland 9-2.

Jackson, 5-6, whose wife gave birth to their second child Wednesday morning, gave up three hits while walking three and striking out three. Black came in with two on and none out in the seventh and got his third save.

Rich Bordi, 3-1, making his first start after 26 relief appearances, allowed all the Kansas City runs in six innings-plus.

Bordi hit Smith with a pitch in the first inning, rookie Mike Kingery moved him to second with a single and he scored on Frank White's single. Smith hit a solo home run in the third inning, his fourth of the season.

The Royals, whose losing skid has been marked by a lack of offensive punch, sent seven men to the

BALTIMORE - University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias died after apparently smoking a pure form of cocaine free-base, rather than from inhaling the drug in powder form, the assistant state

The high concentration of the drug, 6.5 milligrams per liter, in the blood also pointed toward the use of free-

A water pipe, which is commonly used to smoke free-base cocaine, was found in a dumpster behind the College Park dormitory where Bias collapsed.

Police found eight grams of powdered cocaine in Bias' leased sports car. In the garbage bin outside his dormitory, police also recovered straws containing cocaine residue that were apparently used to inhale the drug and a small glass vial containing 150 milligrams of hard cocaine chips or pellets, Caplan said.

A new networking guide for college administrators, titled "Developing Gerontological Curricula: A Process for Success," has been developed.

George Peters, director of the K-State Center for Aging, said the elderly population in rural areas is often higher than the national average of 11.3 percent. Some rural counties have 30 percent to 40 percent elderly.

However, the gerontology specialists and service providers are usually more concentrated in urban

"Typically, most of the gerontological expertise is concentrated in universities. They have more resources and the ability to build resources," Peters said. "What you have is a gap between where the resources are located and where the resources are needed.

"Professionals and paraprofessionals in rural areas must serve the needs of many. For this reason, there is a need for continuing education, recertification and keeping up on the latest research," he said.

Eliminating this gap is the premise on which the grant was created, Peters said. He said community colleges are the institutions of higher learning found in rural areas, and

"The basic principle of the grants has been to transfer gerontological expertise from the universities to the community colleges. The faculty at the community college is then able to serve the needs of the professionals, paraprofessionals, older people themselves and the traditional younger students interested in the gerontology field," Peters said.

The networking guide is based on a three-year, grant-funded project. The project allows the center and three other university gerontology centers to cooperate with seven western Kansas community colleges in order to develop gerontology cur-

The community colleges involved are Garden City Community College, Dodge City Community College, Hutchinson Community College, Cloud County Community College, Seward Community College, and Colby Community College.

Edith Stunkel, assistant director at the Center for Aging, said the manual deals with why gerontology curricula are needed and who the potential target audiences are; what comprises a gerontology curriculum; how to develop and integrate networks in the gerontology program; and suggestions for obtaining funding and resources.

Chemical cleanup continues

By The Associated Press

MIAMISBURG, Ohio - Residents of Dayton suburbs returned home Wednesday after crews controlled a poisonous chemical fire in a derailed railroad tank car that forced the evacuation of 17,500 people.

About 800 people remained at makeshift shelters in schools or with friends and relatives for a second day in the wake of Tuesday's derailment of 15 cars of a 44-car CSX Transportation Southland Flyer.

A poisonous cloud spread over parts of four communities when one of the cars ruptured and its cargo of white phosphorus caught fire south of Dayton.

Officials were not encouraging people to return home and a state of emergency remained in effect. "As far as I'm concerned, I think people should stay out of the area," said City Manager Dennis Kissinger. Hospitals said more than 250 people had been treated for nausea, burning eyes and other symptoms. No serious injuries were reported. Crews worked to drag the phosphorus tanker away from the wreckage, but found that a new white cloud began forming each time workers reduced the amount of water being poured into the tanker.

"The problem with phosporus is that every time you move the stabilizing agent, the water, it flares up," said James Finan, an investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board.

The phosphorus, used to make rat poison, detergent, food chemicals and weapons, can ignite upon contact with air warmer than 85 degrees Fahrenheit. Authorities estimated the temperature at 90 degrees at the time of the derailment.

Assistant City Manager John Weithofer said officials were concerned about possible complications because one of the derailed cars was carrying sulfur, which can form highly toxic byproducts in combination with phosphorus Weithofer said officials believe the tanker carrying white phosphorus still held about 4,000 gallons of the material. Finan said the phosphorus and sulfur cars were separated by two empty cars.

Botha issues proclamation

Schools require applications for blacks

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - President P.W. Botha said that the 1.7 million black students scheduled to resume classes today must apply to attend school, and officials can refuse them without giving reasons.

Botha's proclamation, published on Sunday in the Government Gazette, said the decisions cannot be appealed through any process, apparently including the courts.

Speculation had arisen about whether black students would show up for class today because the day was declared a national protest "Day of Action" by the 500,000-member Congress of South African Trade Unions. The type of action was left up to individual unions in each area. Union demands include that the government release union leaders detained under the state of emergency declared on June 12.

A hearing begins today in Natal Supreme Court in Durban on a union petition challenging the validity of the emergency decree. Human rights and anti-apartheid groups estimate that 3,500 people have been detained without charges under the decree, including many labor

In a separate case in Rand Supreme Court, also to be heard today, three large unions are challenging the government's right to ban meetings by trade unions. The groups are pursuing the suit even though the government has rescinded the order that prompted it.

The emergency decree also imposed tight restrictions on the news media, forbidding it to publish the names of detainees or any statements deemed subversive. Security force actions cannot be reported without permission.

The government said the president's new proclamation was issued to help the Department of Education and Training restore order at the nation's 7,000 black schools - the scene of protests, violence and boycotts in recent

The government has been accused of deliberately giving blacks an inferior education. Resumption of the black school year already was delayed two weeks to let the Department of Education enact new security measures, including issuance of controversial identification cards for all students.

The plan reportedly also calls for teachers to help make sure only approved students enter the fenced school grounds. The private National Education Crisis Committee has called the measures "a clear recipe for confrontation." The president's new orders give Department of Education officials authority to overrule school principals in assigning students to classes on the basis of their "previous proven scholastic achievement." Many students have missed months of classes in recent years because of turbulent antiapartheid protests, in which more than 2,000 people have been killed since September 1984.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A new survey of farmers suggests that the government's wheat referendum will do little to resolve the debate on Capitol Hill over Reagan administration farm policies.

In fact, the vote by wheat growers could stir more debate than it quiets. The Agriculture Department has mailed more than a million ballots to at farmers asking whether they favor a program of mandatory production controls designed to boost grain prices. The non-binding results won't be announced until next month although ballots must be returned by July 14.

But the League of Rural Voters Education Project, a Minnesotabased farm organization, posed the identical production control question to farmers in a survey last month of producers in 11 states in the Midwest and West, including Kansas.

Of 519 wheat farmers responding, 43.7 percent favored mandatory limits on wheat production, 39.1 percent opposed them and 17.1 percent were undecided.

However, the results were far different when the question was asked in a different way.

A total of 64.9 percent of the wheat farmers indicated they would rather "reduce production to balance supply with demand and receive higher prices" if they had a choice between that and operating at "full production at world market prices." Just 23.9 percent favored the full production option, which generally embodies President Reagan's farm policy. There were 11.2 percent

In all, 1,340 farmers were polled, with 519 saying wheat was their main

Responses by all producers to the reduced production-world market question mirrored that of wheat growers. A total of 64.3 percent favored cutting production while 24.1 percent favored full production, and 11.6 percent were undecided.

Mark Ritchie, chairman of the board of the Minnesota group, contends the survey will more accurately reflect the positions of the farming community on mandatory production controls than the Department Agriculture referendum. The wording of the government's question, he maintains, is biased because of the way it implies higher wheat prices. Ritchie's group is a strong proponent of a farm program featuring mandatory controls on production. Its survey, which has a margin of error of five percentage points, was conducted by Rockwood Research, a Minneapolis-based polling firm. The survey and the wheat referendum ooze with political implications.

Congressional Democrats say strong support for mandatory controls in the government's referendum would deliver an antiadministration message to the White House and the Agriculture Department.

On the other hand, resounding rejection of the question would be read in Washington as an endorsement of Reagan's agricultural policies.

Some officials, however, worry that the referendum may provide neither side with a solid victory: too few farmers may participate or the votes could be too evenly divided.

The Minnesota group's survey helps fill in the gaps. In exploring producers' views, it found:

- 54 percent of the 1,340 farmers thought the current federal farm law was "hurting rural America." Just 26.8 percent thought it was helping and 19.2 percent were uncertain.

 49.7 percent indicated they would like federal farm legislation that would "raise commodity prices to at least cost of production with mandatory production controls." A total of 23.1 percent wanted "full production at world prices," and 18.5

HAYDEN LAKE, Idaho - White supremacists lifted swords at a Sunday church service at the Aryan Nations Congress and rededicated themselves to the principles of the racist group, as an armed security force roamed the wooded compound. "You have taken a pledge to be loyal and faithful to your kindred and yourselves," the Rev. Richard Butler, leader of the Aryan Nations, told the approximately 125 people who took part in the ceremony on the last day of the Congress.

As a pianist played patriotic songs, each person was annointed as a "soldier in the name of Jesus Christ" by the Rev. Robert Miles, head of the Mountain Church in Cohoctah, Mich.

The rededication ceremony occurs at each Congress.

The two-day meeting of about 150 white supremacists was held at the 20-acre compound owned by the Church of Jesus Christ Christian-Aryan Nations. Miles led about 400 supporters in a cross-burning Satur-

Earlier Saturday, Gov. John Evans joined human rights advocates in a "Good Neighbors Day" in Coeur d'Alene, about 10 miles away, to denounce racism and prejudice. Nearly 200 communities sent supporting resolutions, and the governors of Montana, Washington and Oregon sent statements asking citizens to reject hate groups and

'We want everyone to know that the Aryan Nations and other such hate groups do not represent nor do they speak for the people of Idaho," Evans told the racially mixed crowd.

On Sunday, about six members of a small security force roamed the Aryan compound with two-way radios. They were armed either with semi-automatic Colt AR-15 rifles with 40-round clips or Ruger Mini-14s with 30-round clips of .223-caliber

Deborah Door, an assistant to the head of the Aryan Nations church, described the guards as trained officers hired "for our protection."

Among those attending the Sunday meeting was an active-duty Marine corporal from Texas who would not give his name, but said he was on leave. The Marine wore his military dress uniform, while some delegates wore the blue Aryan Nations uniform and others wore military fatigues.

A handful of Knights of the Ku Klux Klan from Chicago wore "blood-drop" patches, which feature a drop of blood and four "K's" inside

Many of those attending wore black Northwest Mountain Republic T-shirts, printed with five stars to symbolize the five Northwest states which racists would like to turn into a "whites-only" homeland.

September Landon lecture to feature cabinet member

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Another presidential cabinet member has been scheduled to deliver an Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues. William J. Bennett, secretary of education, will be the fourth member of President Reagan's cabinet to join the lecture series.

His address, the 73rd in the series, scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Sept. 9 in McCain Auditorium, will coincide with Landon's 99th birthday.

At present, Bennett's is the only lecture scheduled for next fall, said Charles Reagan, chairman of the series and assistant to University President John Wefald. Reagan said several other invitations have been issued, but no other dates have been confirmed. No further speakers will be announced until their lecture dates are confirmed.

"Sometimes these are more complicated than they seem to get a date set," Reagan said. Many times confirmation comes just a couple of weeks before the lecture

"It's a matter of timing," Reagan said. He said he relies on Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum especially for help in that area. 'She knows who's going to be in the country and when," he said.

Selecting potential Landon lecturers requires yearlong attention by Reagan, Wefald and Kassebaum, who develop a list of potential lecturers and issue invitations. Reagan said they look for people in "positions of political prominence" to invite. Several invitations went out with Bennett's in February, and others are currently being issued, he said.

"We want the people who are having the greatest influence on policy at the time," Reagan said. Bennett is a former instructor of philosophy and law at several universities, including associate professor at North Carolina State University and assistant to the president at Boston University. He received his doctoral degrees from the University of Texas and Harvard Law School. Bennett has served as secretary of education since Feb. 6, 1985.

Book relates personal stories of Eisenhower

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

A book telling the personal stories of various faculty members and their relationships with former University President Milton S. Eisenhower, who served as K-State's ninth president, will soon arrive at Farrell Library. The book, titled "The Milton S. Eisenhower Years at Kansas State University," was conceived, edited and written by various faculty members and will arrive at Farrell Library in about two weeks, said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of "The book has been printed and is now being bound," Quiring said. The book, containing 120 pages, takes a personal look at the years the late Milton Eisenhower spent as the University's president from 1943 to

"We wanted a more personal account. We thought it would be more interesting to people if it was written by people who knew him or worked with him in some way," said Quiring, who conceptualized the book.

"We wanted something to give people when they joined the Friends of the Libraries of Kansas State University. We wanted something that was substantive and related to Kansas," she said.

"I chose Milton Eisenhower because he is nationally and internationally known, and also well known in Kansas. It was also during his tenure that Kansas State changed from an agricultural college into the institution that it is today," Quiring

"I conceived the idea about a year and a half ago and wrote to Eisenhower - who was then president emeritus of Johns Hopkins University - for his approval of the publication and the contribution of a personal statement," she said.

"We were fortunate to receive his approval of the idea, but because of his ill health, he was unable to provide a written contribution. I then planned a prospectus which described the book's physical make-up and length of the proposed essays. I prepared a list of possible authors and wrote them letters. Each person responded and subsequently wrote

"Because Dr. Eisenhower's death came during this process, this small volume of essays that began with his blessing has ended up as a memorial," she said.

Eisenhower graduated from K-State with a degree in industrial journalism in 1924 and served as assistant professor of journalism for a short period after graduation.

During his seven-year tenure that began in 1943, he tried to expand the narrow, required curriculum.

Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and a contributor to the book, said he had a personal not just a professional - relationship with Eisenhower.

"He was deeply dedicated to the University," Milbourn said. "He had an idea of how he wanted to fill in spots in his administration and he wanted it to be wide open.'

Milbourn, who was brought to K-State from what is now Wichita State University in 1949, said he admired Eisenhower as a public speaker and that he had a beautiful writing ability He also planted many seeds while he was here, such as the Endowment Association which later became KSU Foundation and in the area of scholarships, Milbourn said. "I knew him as an undergraduate. was a freshman when he was a senior," said Russel Thackrey, professor and head emeritus of journalism and mass communications and also a contributor to the book. "It was under his presidency that K-State changed from a medium-size college to laying down the groundwork for it to become a university.

"Eisenhower thought education was far too specialized. He thought that even college educated people couldn't communicate unless they had a common thread of knowledge," Thackrey said.

"He also started the movement for the tenure system," Thackrey said. "He thought it was a good idea not only because it gave assurance to the teacher but because it would be good for the University."

Actors win challenge of Shakespeare

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Classic games of matchmaking and manipulating, the focus of William Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," has challenged the Summer Repertory Theatre. The cast has met that challenge with delightful confidence.

"Much Ado About Nothing" is the repertory theatre's first Shakespearean production. So some fingers were crossed with hope the cast would grasp the language and make it understan-

It didn't take long for those fears

The play begins with the courting of two young lovers, Claudio (played by Bradley Atchison, junior in pre-physical therapy) and Hero (Jennifer Dohl, a May graduate from Bethany College in Lindsborg). While the matching of Claudio and Hero seems natural, the villainous Don John (Barry Pearson, graduate in theater) and two counterparts scheme to keep the two from marriage.

Unlike many of Shakespeare's plays, "Much Ado About Nothing" emphasizes line quality and rhythm, but not hard rhyming verse. As a result, the lines sound somewhat more natural although still a challenge for ac-

Early in the first act, Nancy Sloan, senior in theater, as Beatrice, assured the audience that Shakespeare's language would be no barrier to comprehending her witty, scheming character. Sloan played heavily on tone and expression to color her attitudes.

Timothy Smith, graduate in theater, as Leonato, also mastered the timing of language in verse.

Smith uttered all the "thy's" and "thine's" without any unnatural pauses

The real action occurs between Beatrice (Sloan) and Benedick (Danny Shea, senior in journalism and mass communications), who constantly harass each other about not wanting to fall in love. The two become the focus of a set up to make each think the other is in

The foolery is played up by both Sloan and Shea, each adding flair and insight to their characters. Shea makes particular use of gestures, which in most other circumstances would appear melodramatic, to add humor to interpretation.

Vincent Cortez Bly, senior in theater, is delightful as Dogberry, a constable who prosecutes the villains. Bly breathes character into this minor role, colorfully enhansenses that in order to eliminate or diminish these evils, we must see these causes as linked, and form

Shea and Pearson attribute severely distinguishing characterizations in their dual roles. Shea adds spice to the play with his portrayal of Conrade, an effeminate follower of the villain Don John (Pearson).

Despite other minor pitfalls encountered by some actors - like wearing beards with the elastic showing and some actors sporadically attempting accents the play was enjoyable.

The cast obviously spent considerable time questioning the meaning of language and references to localized happenings. Under the direction of Lewis Shelton, associate professor of theater, the cast was able to present a meaningful presentation of a classic play.

Complaints prompt repairs; 'pizza' walk set for new base

By The Collegian Staff

The sidewalk on the north side of King Hall, sometimes known as the pizza sidewalk, is going to be reworked. It is called the pizza sidewalk because it is made of round, cement discs and reddish-brown cobblestones that resemble pizzas.

"We will go in and pour a cement base and put the round discs back on and fill the spaces with something permanent," said Joel McGill, requirements analyst for University Facilities.

Over the years there have been some complaints of people twisting their ankles on the sidewalk because of the large spaces between the circles, McGill said.

"A request came from Steve Brown, (then) student body president, to fix the sidewalk," he said. "The money just became available July 1 and will be there until June 1

The project has not been scheduled yet but it will have to be completed before June 1, McGill said. It may be in the fall before the weather gets bad or in the spring after the snow. The project's cost is approximately

The sidewalk was built about 10 years ago when a group of architecture students in Haymaker Hall noticed students did not use the sidewalks about five feet away, but instead walked up the hill, wearing a path in the grass. They then discussed the situation with one of their teachers, Alden Krider, a professor in architecture who has since

"We got permission from building and grounds to build a sidewalk there," Krider said. "The students manufactured the discs (in mosaic studio) and put them there one weekend. What we really did was clean up an eyesore.'

Madhu Kishwar, publisher and activist from India, will be discussing the historical perspective on the status of women in India at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in Union 207.

Kishwar is editor and publisher of Manushi, a Delhi-based magazine dedicated to the struggle for the rights of women. A women's group in Delhi also shares the same name as the magazine, said Anil Pawha, assistant professor of electrical and computer engineering and faculty adviser of the India Student Organization. The magazine has been published since 1979 in both Hindi — the official language of India - and English, and has become a major presence in the women's movement in India. This year, Kishwar won the Media Foundation's Chameli Devi Jain award for "editorial versatility of a highest order," Pawha said.

In addition to her work on Manushi, Kishwar is an English literature instructor at Delhi University. She holds master's degrees in literature and history, and is currently working on her doctorate in history.

Sandra Coyner, associate professor and director of Women's Studies, heard Kishwar speak in June at the Eighth Annual National Women's Studies Association conference at the University of Illinois

Open-door policy is halfway shut

Recently, the United States celebrated the anniversary of the Statue of Liberty, a symbol of the nation's acceptance of refugees from other lands. But activities that same week revealed its welcoming message is not meant

On July 1 and 2, sentences were read to eight defendants for their involvement in the Sanctuary movement. Six defendants were sentenced three to five years of probation for conspiracy to smuggle aliens and two others convicted on lesser charges.

The government urged the lesser sentence due to a fear that imprisonment of the defendants would create martyrs for the Sanctuary movement.

The judge noted their motives were "humanitarian," but added they should have worked within the world's "best and fairest" legal system.

But efforts to use the legal system failed, because Salvadoran refugees are viewed as "economic refugees" while Nicaraguans and refugees from communist lands are viewed as "political refugees" and allowed

The Statue of Liberty continues to welcome thousands to the shores of the United States, but its message must be applied to all not just those chosen for preferential status.

Economics has historically been a factor for migration, although not always in the immigrants best interest.

Blacks were brought in chains to serve earlier immigrants; the Chinese to build the nations railroads; the Japanese-Americans although being citizens, were interned during WW II - and the American Indian is still being relocated by the government.

The administration's action was based on self-righteous ideology. But the Sanctuary movement, with its actions based on firm beliefs, will prevail.

Law forces underaged into streets

The last thing we would expect the federal government would try to do is make a bad situation worse. But it appears that the U.S. government has done exactly that.

When the federal government threatened to cut back on highway funding for states that failed to raise their minimum drinking age to 21 by July 1, 1987, the feds did so to cut down on the number of fatalities accounted to drunken drivers. This was needed, they said, because of the large percentage of highway fatalities involving drunken drivers, many of which were under 21 years of age.

On the surface, it appears that raising the drinking age has had some effect. According to an article in the July 7 Collegian, Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, reports that there were 150 fewer arrests for driving under the influence in 1985 than in 1984 in Riley County.

But there also is strong evidence that raising the drinking age is creating some negatives as well.

Arck admits that individuals under 20 (the current minimum legal drinking age) may drive around and drink alcohol because they aren't old enough to go to bars. In the article, Arck said, "Many people in the alcohol and drug prevention field feel that raising the drinking age wasn't realistic."

Geoff Gobble, manager of Brother's Tavern in Aggieville, told The Manhattan Mercury in a July 6 article that the underaged

"haven't quit drinking. Now there are just more cars driving around with kids in there drinking. ... It seems like we're promoting drinking in the streets."

It's clear that underaged drinkers are still consuming alcoholic beverages, either by having older friends buy their alcohol or by obtaining a fake ID.

The bottom line is that the federal government blackmailed the states into raising the minimum drinking age by threatening to pull their federal highway funds. In reality, raising the drinking age has provided negative reinforcement for underage drinkers forcing them to take to the streets to do their drinking.

Image suffers

Editor,

A university radio station, whether AM or FM. creates an image of the university it serves. I am writing to point out what I believe to be a deficiency in our University, the FM radio station KSDB.

We have heard recently that KSDB (88.1 FM) will be expanding its broadcast power so as to reach a larger audience. At least some of that audience must be asking, "Why increase the power?" Most of the programs offered by KSDB are dreary imitations of what we hear too much of at every hour of the day and night on commercial radio.

The programs have very little of the intellectual content one would expect from a station that represents higher education. Recently, for example, KSDB has even discontinued National Public Radio News (All Things Considered). This is a daily onehour broadcast that presents world news in

For a contrast, local listeners should tune in 91.5 FM, which is the University of Kansas' station. Their FM station has programs worthy of university sponsorship. Also, Hutchinson Community College (90.1 FM) has programs of higher intellectual content.

No wonder University of Kansas' public image surpasses that of K-State's. Hutchinson Community College undoubtedly benefits from the higher level of programming it sponsors, too.

Why the low-level programming for our own FM station?

William A. Roberts, Manhattan resident

Choices eliminated

While I am a frequent listener of KSDB, I also listen to KANU (91.5 FM) Lawrence, Kan. for programs not offered on KSDB. If KSDB is granted permission to change their frequency from 88.1 MHz to 91.9 MHz while simultaneously increasing their transmitting power, Manhattan area residents will no longer receive some of the excellent programs offered by KANU.

Whether or not this is a conscious effort by KSDB to eliminate competition from KANU by simply overpowering them in the Manhattan area, I cannot say. But the end result will be a loss of program choices for Manhattan listeners. Don't let KSDB eliminate one of your music alternatives.

If you are concerned about the loss of such KANU programs as A Prairie Home Companion, Morning Edition, and The Thistle and Shamrock because of KSDB's proposed frequency change, write to: FCC, Broadcast Bureau-FM, Washington, D.C., 20554.

Scientist suggests Sakharov attend meeting

MOSCOW - Canadian scientist Eric Fawcett said Sunday that Soviet officials were cool to his suggestion that Nobel Peace laureate Andrei Sakharov be allowed to attend an international conference of scientists opposed to nuclear testing.

Fawcett, a physicist from the University of Toronto, said he made the suggestion Saturday at the conference, attended by scientists from 35 nations. He said scientists from Canada and Denmark backed his suggestion.

Sakharov, a nuclear physicist who helped develop the Soviet Union's hydrogen bomb, has been exiled without trial to the closed city of Gorky since January 1980, after he publicly opposed the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan.

Fawcett said Soviet officials were cool "but not hostile" to his proposal. He said Soviet scientist Vitaly Goldansky, who presided at the session, "replied that it would not be possible to bring him (Sakharov) here in 24 hours." The conference began Friday and ended Sunday. The Canadian said he then proposed that Sakharov be allowed to participate in a future conference on nuclear testing, apparently also planned for Moscow. Fawcett said the Soviets did not respond to that suggestion.

Alabama judge faces child assault charges

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - A judge attending a national conference of family court judges on the problems of child abuse has been accused of sexually assaulting the 13-year-old grandson of another judge, state police said Sunday.

Circuit Judge Jimmy Dean Sloan, 42, of Anniston, Ala., was arrested Saturday and arraigned on a charge of first degree child molestation. He was released on $10,000 personal recognizance bond pending an Aug. 18 court appearance, said Maj. Lionel

"The whole purpose of the conference is the issue of child victims of abuse. This certainly brings home the issue rather abruptly," said Rhode Island Family Court Judge Thomas Fay, the host of the conference.

John Sheehan, a Providence attorney representing Sloan, said the judge is innocent but declined to elaborate. He said Sloan returned to Alabama on Sunday.

Benjamin said Sloan was accused of forcing the boy to perform a sexual act late Friday, when the boy went to the judge's motel room to ask for help in operating a Police declined to give details of the arrest. The boy was treated at Rhode Island Hospital and released.

Crew to extend experimental plane's flight

MOJAVE, Calif. - The experimental airplane Voyager was still in the air Sunday, three days after takeoff, and the crew planned to keep going into Tuesday as they practice for a nonstop, non-refueled flight around the world.

Spokesman Pete Riva said Voyager, in the air since Thursday, probably will land Tuesday evening at the Mojave Airport.

The flight back and forth along the coast was planned primarily to confirm that the plane is capable of flying around the world, but the pilots would attempt to beat the current closed-course absolute distance record of 12,532 miles if all went well, operations officials said.

As of Sunday morning, they had passed 5,842 nautical miles, Riva said. The plane's longest previous test was a mere 24 hours.

Voyager was flying at about 10,000 feet, above a layer of clouds over the coast. A headwind added 10 minutes to the northward leg of their course, but the same wind helped the craft on the southbound leg, Riva said.

The spindly craft has a wingspan of 110 feet and two engines — one pulling from the front and the other pushing the rear - and will carry more than three times its own weight in fuel for the round-the-world flight.

Principals oppose drug testing for students

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A survey of 1,209 high school principals in 36 states showed that a majority oppose drug testing of students, instead favoring prevention and education programs to solve drug problems.

The survey by the National Federation of State High School Associations revealed that drug-testing programs were in effect in 15 of the high schools that responded. Seven schools planned to implement programs this fall.

The Kansas City-based federation promotes extracurricular activities, such as sports, debate and drama, among its 20,000 member schools in all 50 states and the District of Columbia

Charles Stebbins, director of the federation's Target program, which educates students about the dangers of drugs and alcohol, said Saturday that 55 percent of the principals responding to the survey opposed drug testing.

Twenty-seven percent expressed an interest but had reservations about such factors as legal ramifications and costs, and 18 percent did not respond to the question. About 25 percent of the schools indicated that they currently provide an alcohol and drug education program for their students.

'We are encouraging schools to place more emphasis on the development of alcohol-drug prevention and education programs, and it is obvious from the survey that a majority of the schools are headed in that direction," Stebbins said.

Royals fall to Detroit's power hitting display; end first half of season

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY. Mo. - Detroit's Jack Morris rang up his second consecutive shutout and struck out 12 batters Sunday in pitching a four-hit, 5-0 victory over Kansas City.

Morris raised his record to 9-6 and stretched his scoreless inning streak

"Just 33 more to catch Don Drysdale's record," quipped Morris, who got home-run support from Lou Whitaker and Kirk Gibson.

"That's about as good as you'll ever see," said Royals Manager Dick Howser. "When Morris is right, he's about as dominant as anybody in the league."

"I'm not saying you won't see as good," commented Tiger Manager Sparky Anderson. "But I will say you won't see any better."

Morris, who threw a six-hit shutout at Minnesota in his previous outing, struck out every member of the Royals' starting lineup at least once.

"That's definitely the best I've thrown on three days' rest in a couple of years," Morris said. "I felt good and relaxed, had good rhythm, and threw strikes.

Morris' control was sharp. Only two Royals drew-walks.

"I felt real strong early, even during batting practice," he said. "But a lot of times I've gone out there feeling like Superman and before I knew it I'd be out of the game because I was trying to throw the ball too hard. "I knew I'd have to control it today when I warmed up, and I did. I was just tired enough to stay within Gibson hit a three-run homer in the third for Detroit's first runs. Whitaker homered with the bases empty in the fifth. Alan Trammell doubled in a run in the ninth.

Kansas City's rookie starter, Scott Bankhead, dropped to 3-3 after winning his first three decisions. The Royals finished the first half of their defense of their World Series crown with a disappointing 40-48 mark.

The Tigers entered the All-Star break with a 43-44 mark.

The Tigers jumped on Bankhead for three runs in the third. Pat Sheridan doubled with one out, then with two out Alan Trammell drew a walk. Gibson drove a 3-2 pitch deep into the right-field bullpen for his 12th home run.

With one out in the fifth, Whitaker hit his 12th homer of the year. Trammell then doubled and Gibson walked, bringing Mark Gubicza from the bullpen. The Tiger rally died when Trammell was thrown out on a double steal attempt and Lance Parrish flied to centerfield.

Kingery makes most of Royals debut

TONY CARBAJO Recreation Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - You would expect that Mike Kingery would be talking about a permanent spot out in Royals right field after making his Major League debut last week going 11-for-23 and stocking up a .478 average.

But Kingery, the 25-year-old lefthanded hitter who the Royals called up from their AAA farm club in Omaha last Monday to replace injured Rudy Law, is cautiously accepting the rookie sensation heraldings while quickly countering that one week does not a season or permanent position on the roster

"It is going good now - next week might be different," Kingery said following a 2-for-4 outing Saturday that saw him hit two singles and score a run to extend his hitting streak to every game he has suited up in a Royals uniform, six, and steal the game heroics from other team notables.

"When I got called up I didn't know what would happen," the reticent right fielder said. "(Royals Manager Dick) Howser just told me I would probably be platooning (with Darryl Motley) in right field, to relax and play my game, and don't get nervous and in awe (of the big crowds and players).

"Things have gone very well. I feel comfortable right now," he said. "I am from a small town so this is big stuff.' Kingery, who was hitting a sweltering .322 in Omaha this season before being called up to the parent club, managed only a .255 average last year, and never blazed a trail through the Royals' minor league system with his hitting. The 61/2-year minor league understudy credited his longevity to his glove, not his bat. And, there were times the balding blondhaired rookie thought about giving it all up and returning home to Atwater, Minn., a small town of 1,000 residents.

"The difference between the minors and the majors is fifteen hundred fans compared to fifteen thousand," Kingery said. "I thought I would be real, real nervous but there is no pressure at all. I am letting God take care of the

Kingery, a proclaimed bornagain Christian, said it is his faith that keeps him attuned and calm while playing in the outfield, and especially while hitting.

It was near his home in Atwater that Royals Scouting Director Art Stewart first saw Kingery play. His high school, he said, was too small to field a baseball team so he played on a local American Legion team. Stewart noticed during an annual league tournament that Kingery displayed a lot of raw talent and possessed that uncoachable trait - speed - and signed him to a minor league con-

"My whole (time in the minor leagues) I have thought about it (playing in the majors)," Kingery said. "When you are in Class A ball you have 12 outfielders in front of you. It is a long, slow process.

"The only goal I set is to hit .300, steal, some bases and hit some homeruns," Kingery said. "I had a track coach help me with my running. As you can see, I run a little unorthodox."

Kingery said he knows baseball can be a game of streaks and he doesn't always expect the instant success he has garnered. The pride of Atwater knows that it is a case of "what have you done for me lately" in the big leagues. "I hope it continues," Kingery said. "But you don't plan nothing in this game.'

Holyfield captures crown from Qawi

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA - Evander Holyfield, the first 1984 Olympic medalist to win a world championship, was able to wrest the World Boxing Association junior heavyweight title from Dwight Muhammad Qawi by winning when he fought his fight and surviving when he fought Qawi's.

Holyfield, bronze medalist at the Los Angeles Games, fought at long range whenever possible Saturday, keeping the constantly attacking Qawi at bay with left jabs. The 6-foot-1 Holyfield used height advantage and a three-inch reach advantage against Qawi, who held and lost the World Boxing Council light heavyweight crown before becoming the WBA junior heavyweight champ. The result was a 15-round split decision as Holyfield, 12-0, went more than eight rounds for the first time in his career The 23-year-old Holyfield, fighting in his hometown, managed to weather the inside game of Qawi, who tucked his head under the new champion's jaw and pounded away at his body and head with hooks and

'He was smart enough to make me fight his fight at times," Holyfield said of the 33-year-old former champion from Camden, N.J. "When I could, I would back off and fight my fight. I felt like I had to step back and keep him at my range. I tried to stay on the outside.

"He hit me one time in the fifth or sixth round that really shook me, but my conditioning allowed me to come back," said Holyfield, who said he wants a shot at heavyweight champion Michael Spinks.

"I've been wanting Michael Spinks ever since I got out of the Olympics," said Holyfield, who weighed in at 186 pounds.

"We think a fight between the two Olympians would be a great fight," said Lou Duva, Holyfield's manager.

Holyfield settled for the bronze medal in 1984 following his disqualification by a Yugoslavian official who ruled that he knocked down Kevin Berry of New Zealand with a punch after a command to stop boxing had been given.

Holyfield became known in some circles as the 1984 Olympics' "uncrowned champion."

Pitchers confuse picks

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - While the spotlight falls on a pitching matchup between two rising stars, four pitchers who already have had Hall of Fame-type careers will be among the illustrious absent at baseball's 57th All-Star

Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets and Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox were expected to face each other as the starting pitchers in Tuesday night's game. But four of the most prolific winners of the era went unchosen: Tom Seaver, Steve Carlton, Phil Niekro and Don Sutton - all 300-game winners but all over 40.

Also missing when the American and National leagues face each other at the Astrodome will be the likes of perennial All-Stars Reggie Jackson, Steve Garvey and Pete Rose.

"Nothing guarantees you an All-Star Game," Niekro says. Not fame, not past achievement, not even 300 victories.

A late scratch from the game was George Brett of the Kansas City Royals, who was elected to start at third base for the American League. Brett has suffered from strained shoulder ligaments.

All-Americans' ignoring past role perception

It's time to wake up, America.

What does it take - the death of healthy individuals - to make America realize that drug use, particularly cocaine, is not just a problem, it's a plague?

Everyone hears about the Michael Ray Richardsons who are banned from their sports because of persistent drug problems. But it takes the death of both Len Bias and Don Rogers to make people realize that they too had the same affliction.

Friends screamed, "No, not Len (or Don). He wasn't that way. He was a model for kids.

He worshipped his body.' Youthful adventurism plus hundreds of thousands of dollars equals trouble for many

I ask how many professional athletes really worship their bodies and do not fill it with even the poisons of alcohol? How many of our American heros really are the all-American boys we imagine them to be?

Maybe the image of the all-American boy is due for a little updating. Golden muscles shining with sweat, the perfect pearly white teeth, the wind-blown blonde hair, and the nose which has been broken a couple of times from athletic encounters accomanied with the rolled one hundred dollar bill protruding from a nostril and a line of white powder at the end.

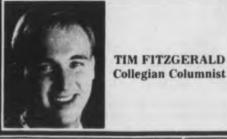

There that's better. An all-American boy fit for the late '80s. That's what American sports are coming to represent - the shameless waste of unique physical specimens for the quick thrill of a snort, a shot, or a smoke of that white magic.

Cocaine is like a vacation at home - a way to escape the pressure of being 21 and responsible for the heart and pride of a city

Athletes use cocaine to party, to relax and to get up for the game their bodies were trained to handle. It rules them with blinding wisdom and leads them down the road of premature destruction whispering in their ears that the pressure of such responsibility will go away if they befriend the all-knowing powder which lies before them.

Soon the mighty grip of terror grabs them when they realize that to give it up is to give up a personal friend. No, that voice keeps whispering that deadly wisdom to the

But for those who think this is a problem that these great athletes are inflicting upon society, think again.

Society engulfed these athletes. For those who sit at home and watch "Miami Vice," who pick up a paper nightly and occasionally read of a drug bust in Los Angeles, who see the stories of the perfect gentleman athlete who has died from a cocaine overdose in the nation's capital and think what horrors the big cities are filled with, why don't you try snorting this.

Little Johnny sitting in his room might just be on his way to being the modern all-American boy. The junk he puts up his nose isn't because his favorite basketball player does it, but because the kid he admires at school hooked him on it.

Soon your little Johnny is finding ways of raising money so he can keep his own supply of poison in his bedroom.

Every town, no matter how small, has a dealer. There is a lot more money in selling drugs than there is in se'ling cars, or owning the corner market. Isn't that what America is all about? You want drugs in little old Manhattan.

There are ways, probably more than many towns of this size because there are so many college students searching for a way to escape the weight of studying and working.

The police are now searching for the man who sold Len Bias the coacaine which killed him and no doubt when they find him they will charge him with murder.

Good luck finding him. During their search they will encounter thousands of pushers and peddlers who are out to make a quick buck.

Most people begin selling the stuff just so they can generate enough revenue to feed their own addictions.

To charge this man with murder is like charging the president of Smith and Wesson with murder when someone blows the top of his skull off with a pistol. Hey, being a capitalist isn't murder and people commit suicide everyday in this land of the free.

This isn't a problem which affects a few. It affects everyone.

Wake up, America, it's time to face the problem not with an upturned nose, but with an iron fist.

Let us not discover someday that the cocaine plague has not gobbled up America like cancer can rot a healthy body.

All the rehabilitation programs and testing methods one can dream up won't stop the problem until you cut the drugs off at the Leadership training, pushups, (meal-ready-to-eat), rappelling, green clothes and black boots. That's the Army, and 25 K-State students have been living, eating and breathing it for six weeks at Fort Riley's "Camp Warrior."

"I never thought I'd miss homework or food at the Union, but I can't wait to get back to them," said Eileen Meyer, junior in journalism and mass communications and a member of Army ROTC.

"I'm reading to start 'living' in Nichols Hall again," said Jimmy Jones, junior in computer science. The Department of Computer Science is located in Nichols.

The six-week summer camp is required for advanced ROTC students, with most students attending the camp between their junior and senior years, said Capt. Robert Cole, specialist in military Meyer and Jones had just finished rappelling from a 50-foot tower. They were relaxed and smiling. Jones, a four-year member of the Kansas National Guard, is attending K-State on a National Guard scholarship. Meyer is an Army veteran.

Down the hill from the 50-foot tower, two platoons of cadets sat on bleachers under green camouflage nets.

These cadets were learning how to hook up their gear and control the ropes during rappelling. Their instructors wore black T-shirts with their fatigue pants and boots. They wore berets instead of the traditional

"They are Green Berets, members of an elite, special-forces unit," said Capt. Joshuah Barber, chief of public affairs for the Third ROTC Region.

Marie Moise, junior in sociology and correctional administration, was in the group of cadets under the net. The cadets practiced rappelling techniques on a small hill before going to the tower.

Moise was apprehensive about going off the tower, not at all relaxed like veteran rappellers Jones and Meyer. She made it down the tower with just a rope burn on one arm. Crawling out on a rope and dropping 40 feet into the water was one of the water training exercises that Meyer and Jones would do later that day. The trick would be to drop straight into the water and not land on your back or stomach, they said.

Lt. Col. John Evans, head of military science, said K-State has the largest group at summer camp from any single school in Kansas.

The camp has two cycles of cadets. The first cycle graduated on July 7. The second cycle, which started June 4, graduates today, and will get to leave Fort Riley on Tuesday.

Much of the cadets' time, Jones said, is spent practicing land navigation techniques. communications and tactics. Leadership development also was emphasized.

"This is an evaluation exercise," Meyer said. "You're supposed to demonstrate what you've learned back at school. Some schools were better prepared than others.

"We (from K-State) were very well prepared," she said. Learning to get along with all the different people from all over the country was a challenge, said Meyer, adding that being the only female in a platoon also was challenging.

Moise and Meyer both plan to work in the Army Reserves when they graduate from K-State. Jones plans to stay with the National Guard.

Jones, who works with tanks in his National Guard unit, said he was impressed by the Black Hawk helicopter demonstrations and would like to go into aviation.

Purple Masque plays to continue

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

The Purple Masque Theatre hasn't been abandoned. It's just gained a "big sister."

Although the speech department moved last fall to Nichols Hall, giving the department a new and larger theater facility, performances will continue at the Purple Masque in East Stadium, said Rhonda Miracle, promotion and box office director for the K-State Players and instructor of speech.

"The Purple Masque has always been used as a supplemental theater," Miracle said. "Because it's small, we can produce relatively cheaply there. It's a wonderful experimental stage.

Miracle said the Purple Masque seats about 100 people, compared to 236 seats in Nichols Theatre. There were three shows in the Masque last year, and four shows will be scheduled for this year, she said.

There are four K-State Players productions scheduled in Nichols Theatre for the 1986-87 season, and two more are scheduled in McCain Auditorium, Miracle said.

"In the past, the Purple Masque was primarily used for speech and theater production and for classes," said Harold Nichols, head of the speech department. "It was very overscheduled. The theater at Nichols took some of the pressure off the Purple Masque.

"Most of the performances on our regular schedule will be at Nichols. The Purple Masque will still be used for graduate thesis productions, Ebony Theatre, Lunchbag Theatre and some K-State Players productions.

There are two main differences between the Purple Masque and Nichols Theatre, Miracle said. The cost of production at the Purple Masque is lower, she said. Also, productions at the Masque run for three days while productions at Nichols run for seven days, she

"The Purple Masque budget is usually $100 per show," Miracle said. "That's nothing.

Although not a lot of money is put into productions there, lots of effort and love are put in, she said. "We still aim for the same high standard of production (as for the other facilities)," she said.

Miracle said that the Purple Masque has become recognized as a place where new actors, directors and playwrights get the chance to be seen.

"Compared to McCain Auditorium, the Masque is like being off-Broadway," she said.

Since last fall, the Masque has been jointly used by the speech department and the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies, Nichols said. Scheduling of the facility is now done by the dance section of PEDLS, he said.

"The dance department has no performance hall like the speech department has at Nichols, so they will use the Purple Masque for dance choreography," said William Carpenter, associate dean in the College of Arts and Sciences. "It will be a performance space for dance and theater."

This fall, a student dance concert will be held in the Masque, said Roxanne Bartush, artist-inresidence for the dance section of

KSDB extends deadline for 'best' band search

'We're looking for the best band in Manhattan," said Jeff Dunst, music director of KSDB.

Bands may enter by sending a tape of their music to KSDB, Dunst said. When all tapes are received, they will be played on the air.

OCEANSIDE, Calif. - The second moderate earthquake in six days shook Southern California from the Pacific Ocean to the Arizona border early Sunday, breaking windows and throwing groceries off store shelves. One person died of a heart attack during the quake. "I was really scared. Our bed started shaking violently, drawers started swinging open," said Miriam Shuster, one of the guests who ran out of the Hotel Laguna as the temblor and aftershocks shook Laguna Beach.

"I heard this big boom, like a sonic boom," said Gloria Butler, who was getting ready for work at a Point Loma grocery store. "This was a definite rolling. When I lived inland, we would feel a shake, but this was a definite rolling."

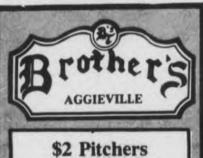

The temblor struck at 6:46 a.m., shaking people awake along a 150-mile stretch of coastline from San Diego to Oxnard, northwest of Los Angeles

It measured 5.3 on the Richter scale at the California Institute of Technology and was centered offshore 28 miles southwest of Oceanside, a northern San Diego County community 75 miles southeast of Los Angeles, said Caltech spokesman Dennis Meredith.

Six large aftershocks were recorded within two hours, Meredith said, the highest registering 4.5 on the Richter scale preceded by one at 4.0 on the scale. The others ranged from 3.4 to 3.8, Meredith said.

At least one power line fell in Oceanside, caused a small outage, said police Sgt. Dave Jones. "We've had a lot of phone calls from around the city. A lot of burglar alarms going off.

In Laguna Beach, 45 miles southeast of Los Angeles, there were reports of broken windows, broken walls and rocks that tumbled on to Laguna Canyon Road, said Police Department clerk Anita Fisher.

Interviews to begin

Committee narrows search

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

Nine new positions created for admission counselors at K-State will probably be filled by the end of this week, said Jerome Frieman, member of the search committee to fill the positions.

The positions were created at the advice of President Jon Wefald. Wefald believed K-State did not have enough people in the field working on admissions, Frieman

Over 120 people originally applied for the positions, Frieman said. The committee has since screened the applications and will be interviewing 19 applicants Wednesday and Thursday of this

Frieman, professor of psychology, said he was, "excited by the interest provoked, which can be seen by the number of applications received.'

K-State has enough vacant positions that there was no problem creating the nine positions, he said. One of the positions was held over from a temporary position of last percent wanted a "two-tiered price support program." Of the 100 Kansas producers surveyed, 37 percent favored production controls, 15 percent full production, 38 percent two-tiered supports and 10 percent undecided.

45.7 percent of all farmers favored boosting farm income by raising crop loan rates to the cost of production while 30.4 percent wanted higher deficiency payment subsidies.

91.5 percent thought policymakers should allow farmers to vote on a farm program.

The current farm program calls for lower price supports in an effort to increase export sales by making U.S. farm products more competitive in world markets. At the same time, it protects farmers' income with direct government subsidies.

In theory, a mandatory production control program would help balance domestic commodity supplies and demand, driving up prices for producers, lessening the need for government subsidies and therefore lowering federal farm program

"The purpose of the survey was to find out what farmers and ranchers were thinking," Ritchie said. "What you've got are people who overwhelmingly feel they are being hurt by current farm policies."

Democrats hope such feelings in the Farm Belt will sink not only Reagan farm policies but Republican candidates in the fall elections.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said the government wheat referendum is a chance for "farmers to tell Congress, the president and the world whether they find the current farm scenario acceptable."

The survey by Ritchie's group suggests otherwise.

When asked which political party was doing a "better job of handling the farm crisis," 59.9 percent of the farmers said neither, 18.7 percent gave Democrats higher marks and 15.4 percent picked Republicans.

"It should be a helluva message to both parties," Ritchie said.

Firefighter Steve Jankord douses a smoldering mattress with water, while EMTs attend Darlene Miller during a fire call Monday to 931 Ratone St. Miller was hospitalized after being overcome by smoke when the mattress in her apartment caught fire.

Fire causes damage to apartment

By The Collegian Staff

A Manhattan woman was treated at a local hospital for treatment of smoke inhalation following a fire at her apartment Monday morning.

Darlene Miller was treated and released from The Saint Mary Hospital following a mattress fire in her apartment at 931 Ratone St.

The fire, contained to the first floor of a building housing five apartments, resulted in the destruction of a mattress and smoke and water damage to the contents of the apartment, according to Jack Roets, Manhattan Fire Department battalion

Also in the apartment was Patricia Glenn, Miller's mother, and three children. All left the building safely. Firemen evacuated other occupants of the first floor.

Ronald Miller, Darlene's brother, said he thought the fire might have started from a cigarette lighter a child had been playing with. Authorities, however, said the cause of the fire is undetermined pending further investigation.

Miller said he was relieved the fire was not more serious. His apartment was adjacent to the damaged apartment.

After checking that his sister was all right, Miller said his thoughts were of his new concert grand piano, adding that he does not yet have insurance - but since the fire, plans to remedy that immediately.

Congressmen see easy race to re-election

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Results in the Topeka Capital-Journal's Kansas Poll made public Monday showed U.S. Sen. Bob Dole and the state's five congressmen would be shoo-ins to win re-election if voters went to the polls now.

In a second installment of the poll, the first results of which were published Sunday, a majority of those surveyed said all six members of the state's congressional delegation who are up for re-election this year should be returned to office.

Dole was rated as having done a good or excellent job by 61 percent of those responding to the poll, and 63 percent said he should be re-elected. The poll did not compare Dole with his Republican challenger in the Aug. 5

Among the five members of the U.S. House, the poll showed:

- Pat Roberts, R-Dodge City, 1st District: 67 percent favorable rating; 68 percent say he should be re-elected.

Jim Slattery, D-Topeka, 2nd District: 62 percent favorable; 60 percent for re-election. Jan Meyers, R-Overland Park, 3rd District: 50 percent favorable; 60 percent for re-election.

- Dan Glickman, D-Wichita, 4th District: 68 percent favorable; 61 percent for reelection. Bob Whittaker, R-Augusta, 5th District:

53 percent favorable; 57 percent for reelection.

The poll, conducted for the Topeka newspaper by Central Research Corp. o Topeka, involved telephone interviews with 500 people on July 5-9, the Capital-Journal said. The survey involved approximately 100 people in each of the state's five congressional districts and has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.4 percent.

Raid targets Syrian terrorists

Israeli planes bomb Lebanon

By The Associated Press

AINAB, Lebanon - Twelve Israeli iets rocketed and bombed Palestinian guerrilla targets in hills southeast of Beirut on Monday in apparent retaliation for rocket attacks on northern Israel. The raid killed four people and wounded 12, officials said.

Police and the International Red Cross reported in separate communiques that two Palestinian fighters died and 12 people were wounded during the 30-minute, latemorning raid on the hill towns of Aitat, Bayssour, Shimlan and Ainab. Druse spokesmen said later that two Druse militiamen also were killed. The Druse, who dominate the Ainab region, are a secretive offshoot of Islam. Prime Minister Rashid Karami claimed the attack was aimed at sabotaging a Beirut security plan launched under Syrian auspices two weeks ago to reinstate government authority in the capital.

Syria has sent about 500 troops to west Beirut to help enforce the plan, intended to end a 27-month reign of Moslem militias characterized by assassinations, kidnappings, aircraft hijackings and bank robberies.

A squadron of 10 F-15 and two Phantom F-4 fighter-bombers delivered their payloads in five passes over targets in the mountains about 12 miles southeast of Beirut. police said.

The Israeli command in Tel Aviv said its pilots reported "accurate hits ... (on an) area of terrorist concentrations." It said all planes returned safely.

The raid appeared to be aimed at Syrian-backed Palestinian factions active in the region.

It followed overnight rocket attacks on Israel's northern Galilee region. Israeli military sources confirmed an Israel Radio report of the attacks but said no injuries or damage resulted.

The sources demanded anonymity. Palestinian guerrillas periodically fire Soviet-made Katyusha rockets into Galilee from bases in Lebanon.

One building destroyed in Ainab was an office of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine headed by Marxist physician George Habash. The three-story stone house was left flattened and smoldering. About 80 yards away, a four-story structure used by the Moscoworiented Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine was now a heap of rubble. In a communique, the Popular Front reported one fighter - Ahmed Moghrabi, 26 - was killed and two were wounded

Moghrabi's brother, who uses the pseudonym Abu Akram. was distraught as he watched rescuers digging through the rubble. When Moghrabi's body was recovered four hours after the raid, the brother wailed and cocked his machine gun, threatening to kill photographers covering the scene.

"By God, I will shoot you all if you film me or him (the brother)!" Abu Akram shouted. "My brother is still a bridegroom! He got married just 15

Other guerrillas calmed him down and no pictures were taken of Akram or his dead brother.

The Democratic Front said one of its guerrillas was killed and four were wounded

Agent receives life sentence

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Richard W. Miller, the only FBI agent ever accused of espionage, was sentenced Monday to two life terms plus 50 years in prison for spying for the Soviet Union.

The judge who passed sentence said he hoped Miller would "not walk again in this country as a free man.'

Miller, who had not spoken during his trial, broke his silence to tell the judge he is innocent and will continue to fight for his vindication.

"I never intended to injure this country or benefit the Soviet Union," Miller told the packed, hushed courtroom. "My conduct was of no damage to this country."

The portly defendant told the judge, "I believe you are going to sentence me as if I committed these crimes. But I did not commit them...I shall continue to assert my innocence with an appeal that I hope will result in a new and fair trial."

U.S. District Judge David Kenyon, who also fined Miller

$60,000 — the maximum — replied with an emotional statement in which he defended his rulings during the long trial, and he denounced Miller as a man who had everything and threw it away because he was ungrateful.

Kenyon said Miller had failed to learn the lesson that the judge said his mother taught him as a child -"you must be grateful for what you have."

"We're all here to learn a lesson," Kenyon said. "We're not here to hate or despise Mr. Miller. My heart goes out to Mr. Miller. My personal impression is he is a tormented man.

Kenyon said he planned to sentence Miller severely as an example to the nation.

"It seems to me there should be a recognition on the part of all citizens of the United States," he said, explaining he felt that with the increasing incidents of espionage in the United States,

"we begin to take it more lightly." "It seems to me a person who deliberately, for their own personal gain, betrays their country, should not walk again in this country as a free man," he said. "It is this court's intention to sentence the guilty with that in mind."

The case rocked the FBI when it broke nearly two years ago.

Miller, 49, was found guilty June 19 of espionage and bribery by a jury that rejected his claim he was trying to infiltrate the Soviet KGB as a double agent to save his flagging career.

Miller was arrested and charged with spying in October 1984 with Svetlana Ogorodnikov and her husband, Nikolay. The Ogorodnikovs, both Soviet emigres, pleaded guilty to spying charges in June 1985 and are serving prison sentences.

Miller was found guilty of conspiring to pass classified documents to the Soviet Union, of copying classified documents and of delivering them to a foreign government with knowledge they would be used to the advantage of a foreign power, the Soviet Union, and to the disadvantage of the United States.

S. African blacks enact job, school boycott

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Tens of thousands of black workers shunned jobs and schools Monday to protest South Africa's state of emergency, but the main effect appeared to be in areas noted for anti-apartheid activism. The government said at least 80 percent of the nation's 1.7 million black students returned to school for resumption of classes after a sixweek vacation. That would mean up to 340,000 stayed away in response to a call from militant youth leaders. Black trade unions proclaimed a national "day of action" against the detention of more than 200 labor leaders, who are among an estimated 3,500 people held without charge.

Participation appeared spotty in the first concerted mass protest since the nationwide state of emergency was imposed June 12, according to employers and academic monitoring groups.

Up to 70 percent of workers stayed off the job at Port Elizabeth, or reported briefly and left. The industrial city on the Indian Ocean has been a center of protest during nearly two years of racial unrest in which more than 2,000 people have been

Only scattered strikes occurred in most parts of the country, however, and the vital mining industry reported few problems. Elijah Baraji, president of the Congress of South African Trade Unions and vice president of the National Union of Mineworkers, was released Friday after two weeks in detention, said Marcel Golding, spokesman for the mine workers.

"That's probably one reason why there hasn't been widespread action today in the mines," he said, adding that Baraji was granted freedom on conditions that bar him from leaving his house or being quoted.

Restrictions under the emergency include rules that prohibit journalists from reporting actions of security forces without official permission, publishing the names of detained people and quoting "subversive statements," which are vaguely

In calling for the day of action, including sit-down strikes and other on-the-job protests, the 500,000-member union Congress said detentions of labor leaders were causing havoc in industrial relations. Employer groups have made the same complaint to President P.W. Botha's government, but also appealed to the unions to stop job actions that have plagued several industries since the emergency took ef-

The outlawed African National Congress, the main guerrilla movement fighting white rule, endorsed the day of protest.

A statement issued at its headquarters in Lusaka, Zambia, said: 'Let us make July 14 a day on which we bring our might to bear on the Botha regime....Let us act in unity, intensify the mass and armed actions, spread ungovernability to all corners of the land and move to people's power."

A provincial supreme court hearing began Monday in Durban on a challenge of the emergency's legality by the Metal and Allied Workers Union. The union argued that Botha did not inform Parliament of the emergency decree, as required, and that the ban on "subversive statements" was too vague.

Militant youths called the school boycott to protest emergency detentions and new security measures at black schools that allow authorities to turn away suspected troublemakers, with no right of appeal, and require students to produce new identity cards on demand.

Many high schools appeared nearly deserted in Soweto, Alexandra, Tembisa and Vaal area black townships - all around Johannesburg - but reporters on the scene said attendance was near normal at primary schools.

Attendance was high in other areas and the government Bureau for Information issued a statement saying: "With the exception of a small number of schools, pupils reregistered en masse across the coun-

Black schools have been a focus of protest since violence began in September 1984 against apartheid, the official policy that preserves privilege for South Africa's 5 million whites and denies rights to the 24 million blacks.

Many of those killed were blacks killed by other blacks in differences over apartheid.

Boycotts involved as many as 300,000 students before a partial state of emergency, later lifted, was declared last July.

Burgers sizzle near Cardwell

By The Collegian Staff

If persons on campus have noticed the smell of barbecued hamburger when walking by Cardwell Hall during the lunch hour, it's not a figment of the imagination. The summertime aroma is coming from a hamburger stand operated by the Union Food Service.

This is the first time a hamburger stand has operated on campus, according to Malley Sisson, director of food service.

"I recently visited the University of California at Berkeley, and they had a hamburger stand," Sisson said. "I thought the kids in Kansas would really like something like

Business has been good so far, said Kaye Fosse, sophomore in restaraunt management.

"All of the comments we've had have been positive," she said. "We get a lot of professors and people from the north side of campus who feel they don't have the time to go clear to the Union. The guys who are working on the roof of Cardwell Hall have been eating here lately.'

Fosse and Cesar Nolla, junior in engineering technology, run the

The menu includes quarter-pound hamburgers and cheeseburgers, hot ogs, cookies, iced tea, potato chips and fruit.

Sisson has many different ideas on how to improve the stand. "We're thinking of getting T-shirts with some of the things on the menu printed up on them," she said. "The paper signs we have will get ratty and dirty after a while, so I hope this will work well.'

The stand is open from about 11:15 a.m. until 1:30 p.m., weather permit-

"We will most likely be open (only) during summer school," Fosse said. "I'm afraid that if we had it in the fall, we would be swamped.'

Local movies offer change of pace

By JEAN TELLER Managing Editor

A friend recently remarked about the movies released during the winter and fall as opposed to the number of good movies released during the summer months. It's surprising how many entertaining movies are released during the summer but then again it's prime time for movie theatres

And in Manhattan we are fortunate enough to have 14 theatres to choose from and quite a few first-run films. So go to the movies for a change of pace and for some excitement in your hot summer.

"ABOUT LAST NIGHT..."

"About last night..." is about the singles scene, casual sex, love at first sight and about commitment between two people.

The movie is a yearlong look at the growth of a relationship between Dan (Rob Lowe) and Debbie (Demi Moore). It's a funny and touching glimpse into the world of relationships, between men and women and between friends of both sexes.

The friends of the two are Bernie (Jim Belushi), the jerk with a heart of gold, and Joan (Elizabeth Perkins), the caustic grade school teacher with bad judgment where men are concerned. All four actors make you believe in, identify with and empathize with the characters.

"About last night..." helps eradicate the myth of singles bars as the place to meet the man or woman of your dreams. It also gives us hope that the right one might come along in spite of the singles scene.

"AMERICAN ANTHEM"

If you like gymnastic action, music and very little dialogue, then

"American Anthem" is for you. Mitch Gaylord and Janet Jones seem to portray themselves as gymnasts fighting for a spot on the team and a spotlight at the top. It's an interesting glance at the dedication of an athlete wanting to reach the pinnacle of success.

It is also a strange way of letting the audience in on the storyline. From the very first frame, the audience has to figure out what's going on. No easy means of determining who is who or what is happening in the story. You have to figure it out from the quickly moving scenes.

Film Review

Although the method of moving the story along is different, it is fun and it really doesn't take very long to get the hang of it. Just be aware that you can't put your mind on hold during this movie.

"TOP GUN"

I don't really know what can be said about "Top Gun" that hasn't already been said.

If you haven't seen this movie, go. If you have seen it, it's almost as good the second time around. Tom Cruise and Kelly McGillis turn in excellent performances as a maverick pilot and a brillant, beautiful civilian engineer. The supporting cast is brillant as well. Val Kilmer, Anthony Edwards and Tom Skerrit make us believe in the flying skills and tenacity of the student pilots and the instructors of

'Top Gun." If you need a reason to go to a wellwritten, well-acted, well-produced action movie, go for the photography. The dog fight scenes will have you hanging on to the edge of your seat. The cinematography staff has to be the true star of the

"THE KARATE KID, PART II"

Very rarely does a sequel equal the excellence of an orginal. "The Karate Kid" was an excellent portrayal of martial arts and of the relationship between a boy and his Part II is more of the same, only more so. The relationship between Ralph Macchio and Pat Morita continues to grow and solidify. It is a rare look at the respect, friendship and love between two generations and between two cultures.

And both men are seen as humans with foibles and strengths. They both fall in love, they both fight enemies they would rather not, and they both become men who can accomplish anything.

"The Karate Kid, Part II" is one of the summer's movies you have to see. Even if you missed Part I, go to Part II. You won't regret it because you'll have seen at least one real-life hero and maybe two.

Patient health focus of care

Therapy utilizes gardening

By PAT REDMAN Collegian Reporter

Gardening is an age-old pastime for some. For others, it's a means of survival. In recent years, however, it's become more of a therapeutic tool known as horicultural therapy

"Horticultural therapy utilizes improve horticulture to psychological, social, educational or physical improvement in people through plants," said Richard H. Mattson, professor of horticulture.

Laura Baker, director of horticultural therapy for Big Lakes Development Center Inc., not only sees horticultural therapy as a media for people with specific problems to work through but also as "a media for people to have a vocation."

In the late 1940s, Karl Menninger, former president of Menniger Foundation, instituted horticulture therapy as part of the rehabilitation program at the veteran's administration hospital in Topeka, Mattson said.

"Rhea McCandliss, the first horticultural therapist, under the direction of Menninger, prescribed growing plants as therapy for the mentally ill," Mattson said.

Since the '40s, programs have expanded to include vocational rehabilitation, such as producing plants for resale.

"Each program takes on a different focus," Baker said. "Some are therapeutic programs and some are production oriented."

Most programs, like the Big Lakes horticulture therapy program, utilize both therapy and production.

"I take several different crews to the greenhouse and the emphasis varies with the crew," Baker said. "If the crew is a lower functioning group of clients, it's more of a therapeutic activity. If it's a higher functioning group, it's more production oriented."

Baker said that in the spring, which is a busy time, production is emphasized with higher and lower functioning clients.

When Baker takes her clients to the greenhouse, the first thing they learn are basic greenhouse skills,

"They learn different parts of the soil - how to mix soil, how to re-pot a plant, how to start seedlings, how to transplant seedlings the basic generic greenhouse skills," she said. "We try to break each step down into several steps so the clients can understand."

After learning the basic skills, clients then learn how a greenhouse functions. This includes what plants grow best in a particular environment and how to grow and care for plants, Baker

"My feeling about the therapeutic end of it," she said, "is that if the clients have the vocational skills and the task down, then they can get involved in the therapeutic end of it. They have to know what they're doing.

Although some clients may never be able to leave the confines of the institution in which they live, many are able to return to the community and lead a normal life.

"The ultimate goal is to try and place people in the community in jobs," Baker said. "When clients go through all the greenhouse training, they should be pretty well prepared for a job in the horticulture field."

At an institution like Big Lakes, the focus is on giving the clients valuable work experience and giving them a place to do the work,

Companies fight absenteeism

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

Excessive absenteeism not only costs a company by disrupting work flow, it also costs millions of dollars in fringe benefits, said Stan Elsea, assistant professor of management.

The primary topic Elsea studied in his dissertation was how to stop casual absenteeism. Specifically, he wanted to find what control device would make it most beneficial for the employee to come to work.

Casual absenteeism is any absence not provided for in the contract, he said.

Elsea conducted a study of three automobile manufacturing corporations while working on his dissertation. He idea for the study came from an article written by David Dilts, associate professor of management and nationally recognized labor relations expert.

The casual absenteeism problem at General Motors Corp., one of the corporations studied, began with a lack of discipline in GM's early stages, Dilts said. By not following the contract to the letter in the first place, the corporation forfeited the right to discipline the employees in the manner specified in the contract.

The effect was to amend the contract, he said.

Before GM could begin to discipline absent employees, it had to notify the United Auto Workers union that it was going to start following its contract, Dilts said.

One of the three groups Elsea studied used the traditional method of progressive discipline to stop casual absences, he said. In this approach, the employee is first given a verbal warning stating that if the employee's absences do not cease, he will be laid off. If the absences do not stop, the employee is issued a written warning, followed by disciplinary

The first layoff is usually shortterm, Elsea said. When the employee reports to work he is informed of his suspension. Short-term layoffs can last anywhere from the balance of the day the employee is informed to two or three days afterward, he said.

If short-term suspension has no effect on the employee's absenteeism, he is then given a long-term layoff. Long-term suspensions usually last 30 days, Dilts said.

When none of the above actions stop an employee's casual absences, the employee is dismissed, Elsea

Most employees respond to this method of discipline, he said. When the progressive discipline method is used, the contract between employer and employee must be followed exactly. If the corporation follows through and dismisses those chronically absent employees, they will eventually be weeded out.

"Those who don't (respond), didn't want to work anyway. This gives them the perfect excuse not to," Elsea said.

When using the progressive discipline method, one must be careful to treat the cause and not just the symptoms of absenteeism, Dilts said. GM was actually rewarding some employees who were chronically absent, he said.

If a family's primary wage earner receives little or no fringe benefits from his employer, often the spouse will enter the labor force as a secondary wage earner, taking a job for the sole purpose of its fringe benefits, not to come to work, Dilts said.

GM was laying off these employees but still giving them full benefits, which is basically all they wanted anyway, he said. These benefits are originally negotiated from the worker's wage, Elsea said. Corporations were hurting themselves by paying these "wages" in the form of benefits and receiving no work from the employee in return, he added.

By reducing benefits to those employees absent 20 percent of their scheduled work days, GM saved $100 million per year, Elsea said. Jobs in the service sector generally offer very low fringe benefits, Dilts said. A rise in the number of those employed in the service sector inevitably leads to a rise in casual absenteeism in the production sector, he said.

Which method works best really depends upon the situation, Elsea said. Reducing benefits works faster, but both methods show results, he

Education also factors into the probability that an employee will be chronically absent, Dilts said. Studies have shown that the more highly educated one is, the more likely one will be to take casual absences. Elsea attributes this to the habit of cutting classes formed while in college. These findings prompted one division of GM to cease hiring college graduates. In 1978, casual absenteeism cost U.S. industries as much as $26 billion dollars. This figure has probably risen since that time, Elsea said.

'Chimp Watch' safeguards pregnant primate

Ann Pyle, a Sunset Zoo 'Chimp Watch' volunteer, peers in at the chimp, Rachel, to check her well-being Monday at the zoo. Rachel, a pregnant chimpanzee, is being kept under close watch to ensure a safe delivery for the infant.

By KRISTY EAKIN Collegian Reporter

A female chimpanzee paces about in her cage at Sunset Zoo as two zoo volunteers watch her every move.

Every night for the past several weeks, volunteers have kept an eye on the chimp, named Rachel. While Rachel may appear to be an ordinary chimpanzee, she isn't. Rachel is

For the past 90 days, Caroline Meek, head zoo keeper, and Don Wixom, zoo education coordinator, have been busy organizing "Chimp Watch" that centers around the pregnant chimpanzee.

"Chimp Watch" is a program in which trained volunteers watch Rachel and record any behavioral changes that could be signs of labor, Meek said.

Volunteers are usually zoo docents who are familiar with the zoo and conduct tours and animal demonstrations. Many of the docents are K-State students. The zoo has had about 70 people participating in the watch, Wixom said.

The watch is being conducted because Meek and Wixom are unsure about how Rachel is going to react to her baby. This is Rachel's first baby and it is possible she will not instinctively be a good mother, Meek Wixom explained that in the wild, animal mothers are often not good mothers to their first offspring. They can be frightened of the baby because it is new to them. It is also possible that animal mothers can be abusive and neglectful.

The first offspring of a wild animal most likely would not survive, but in the zoo these animals can be saved, Wixom said.

Rachel is a questionable mother because of what the zoo staff knows about her past, Meek said. Rachel was the youngest in her troop, so she never saw a mother chimp raise a

Earlier this year, there was a monkey born in the cage across from Rachel's. If Rachel watched the mother, she may have learned how to be good with her offspring. However, zoo officials are unsure if she paid any attention at all to the monkey and her baby.

Another reason Rachel is being watched so closely is because there is a 25 percent to 50 percent mortality rate in infant chimps, Meek said.

Rachel, who came to Manhattan from the Washington Park Zoo in Portland, Ore., is at the Sunset Zoo on a breeding loan, Wixom said. The zoo does not own her but will own the baby.

When it was suspected that Rachel was pregnant, Dr. Ron Marshall, a Manhattan obstetrician/gynecologist, did four pregnancy tests on Rachel

'You could see a little head and then a little arm. It was quite emotional," Meek said. Chimps are usually pregnant anywhere from 209 to 269 days, but the average is seven months. This is why Meek, Wixom and other experts haven't been able to set an exact due date for Rachel. The zoo staff has set up a video camera to record the

Because chimps are very difficult to breed, Meek said it is important for a small zoo to be able to contribute to the chimp population.

Wixom said that of the 1,200 chimps in the United States, 300 are in zoos. The remaining 900 are used for medical purposes ranging from breeding to AIDS research, he said.

"These animals are models for human disease," Wixom said. "In medical research, they ultimately Wixom and Meek said they would only sell Sunset Zoo animals to other zoos and never for research.

For now, "Chimp Watch" volunteers watch Rachel in two shifts throughout the night.

"We really couldn't be as prepared for the birth without the volunteers,' Wixom said.

Scrambling upsets satellite dish owners

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

In 1984, President Reagan enacted a law which made it legal to own and operate satellite television antennas.

This law paved the way for Americans to have legal access to more television stations then ever before. Many rural Kansans, or those not served by cable systems. took advantage of the opportunity and purchased a satellite earth

The cost of an average satellite system is about $1,000, said Warren Ghere, a Manhattan satellite antenna dealer. But the antenna purchase turned into a short-term investment for some when broadcasters started scrambling their signals earlier this year.

According to Satellite Orbit, a satellite television magazine, channels which currently use the scrambling process, called encrypting, include Showtime, The Movie Channel, Home Box Office, Cinemax and Cable News Network. As many as 20 other stations have plans to scramble their signals before 1987.

If satellite owners wish to have unscrambled reception of these signals, they must subscribe to them through the local cable companies, direct from the programmers, and purchase a descrambling device, Ghere said.

These descramblers are available from most satellite antenna dealers. A descrambling device costs $395, Ghere said. But this is the price for a single descrambler - and, according to Satellite Orbit, one descrambler is not capable of encrypted all decoding

HBO, Cinemax, Showtime and The Movie Channel are encrypted using a system called the M/A-Com VideoCipher System. Although the publication reported this system appears to be used by most broadcasters, satellite owners who want access to all encrypted channels will either have to subscribe to them or purchase more than one decoder.

Satellite antenna owners are not pleased with the scrambling of

The development of the scrambling system was funded by HBO, which was concerned people were using their cable service without paying for it, said Donald Hummels, head of the Department of Computer and Electrical Engineering.

Previous scrambling systems were easy to defeat, current methods are not. Even if a person could build a descrambler, he would still need to subscribe to the programmers encrypted signal in order to receive the unscrambled picture, Hummels

"If I'd known more about this scrambling, I'd have thought twice before buying my system," said Gene Christensen, satellite antenna owner from Glasco.

"In this size town, the only way to get access to HBO and Showtime is with a (satellite) dish - our cable company doesn't offer it," he said. "Now they're scrambled, so I'm right back where I started from."

Even with signal encrypting, satellite antennas still offer the largest selection of channels, according to Satellite Orbit. Scrambled stations excluded, satellite owners will still be able to receive more than 100 channels.

Voter registration to close for state primary elections

By The Collegian Staff

For those students and faculty members who have not yet registered to vote in the Aug. 5 primary election, there is still a chance to do so.

Voter registration closes 20 days prior to any election, and reopens the day after the election. The deadline this year is today. Residents of Riley County needing to register can do so by contacting the county election office.

Students who are not residents of Riley County, must obtain an application for an absentee ballot which must be sent to the designated county election

Applications are available to students and faculty members in Student Governing Association office or by contacting their county election office, said Patty Hipsher, senior in political science and campus director for the Associated Students of Kansas. Hipsher said these applications must also reach the county election office by

ASK is a student lobbying organization in Kansas that provides information to students and encourages them to use their right to vote.

There will not be a voting booth available on campus for the primary election this year, Hipsher said, but students can find out what precinct they are in and where the voting booths will be by contacting either the county commissioners' office or the SGA

Selections from a musical that made Kansas notorious and songs recorded by Frank Sinatra highlight tonight's Manhattan

Municipal Band concert. Selections from the "Wizard of Oz," arranged by Harold Arlen, and the medley "Recorded by Sinatra" will be two of the numbers featured in the concert, which begins at 8 p.m. on the Arts in the Park stage in City Park. Larry Norvell is the director.

The Sinatra medley, arranged by Warren Barker, will include "High Hopes," "Young at Heart," "Love is the Tender Trap," "Love and Marriage" and "My Kind of Town." Rod Manges, assistant director of the municipal band, will conduct the number. Also on the program will be a trumpet duet, "Vivaldi Concerto in B-flat for Two Trumpets." The Antonio Vivaldi selection will be performed by Paul Shull, professor of music, and Scott Freeby, a 1986 K-State graduate. Freeby is the band director in the Herington school district.

Another highlight will be a vocal solo by Jerry Langenkamp, professor of music. He will perform the "Flower Song" from the opera "Carmen" by George Bizet. Langenkamp is chairman of the K-State voice department and director of the opera workshop. He is also a member of the Konza

Other selections will include "The Bells of St. Mary's," arranged by Paul Yoder; "King Cotton March" by John Philip Sousa; and "The Trombone Rag" by John Higgens.

Ambulance service due for change

If the Manhattan medical community and the Riley County commissioners have ever heard of the saying "there's no time like the present," one would think they could put two and two together and make the changes needed to enable the Riley County Ambulance Service to provide the best emergency medical care to the residents of Riley county.

With the recent resignation of Richard Kinsman, director of the service, combined with a report by Emergency Medical Design, which was somewhat critical of the ambulance service, it appears that changes are going to be in store for the emergency medical service in Riley County.

Riley County residents are entitled to the best emergency medical care possible. That means providing the necessary updated emergency medical technology to this county. At this point it appears the Riley County Ambulance Service has not kept up with the advancements of emergency medical technology.

To provide necessarily sophisticated health care equipment, three things must occur.

First, the medical community must favor a change. Doctors, nurses, technicians, radiologists and the like, must be in favor of having advanced emergency medical care in Riley county.

Second, the Riley County Commission must decide if the current policy should be updated. This ruling body is able to realize any proposed changes.

The final aspect, directly related to the other two, is the most crucial. It is support of change by the residents of Riley

The residents of this county should make themselves aware of the type of emergency medical service availabe to them. If the present care suits the people, let it be. If not, changes should be made, and the medical community and the Riley County Commission should take notice that the people of this county want the best care available.

Tax reform bill eliminates revenue

City governments may need to make drastic changes in funding of improvement projects if U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Topeka, is correct in predicting the loss of revenue sharing funds.

In a recent meeting with the Greater Topeka Chamber of Commerce and Topeka officials, Slattery said the end of revenue sharing could be a result of work done on the current tax reform

Slattery was quoted in the Topeka Capital-Journal as saying

"The cut will mean that local governments will have to raise local taxes as much as 2 mills if they want to keep those programs."

This could affect communities in several ways.

The act is a sign that federal deficit reducing efforts are being taken seriously. Also, it places more responsibility on the local government, reducing potential manipulation from Washington.

Threats concerning the end of revenue sharing have been voiced for years, but the threat may actually have some substance this

Local governments will find it necessary to examine funding requests with extreme caution, perhaps requiring refusal of projects of marginal value to the community as a whole. The loss of revenue sharing may prove to be a shocking, yet valuable experience.

Glow not a risk

Editor.

Part of Angela O'Hara's editorial on "Foods radiated despite questions" is alarmist and part needs correction. Both represent irresponsible editorializing.

If her definition of radiolytic is "causing the exposed food to be radioactive," this does not happen with irradiation and use of irradiated spices is not a risk.

Perhaps she would prefer the high contamination of spices with yeasts, molds, and bacteria, which result from the primitive harvesting and handling these undergo in many countries that produce them.

Yes, irradiated foods undergo chemical changes because the energy that kills microorganisms can affect food molecules. Mankind began using food cookery, drying, and canning before all the changes were understood. I suspect Angela woul opposed those innovative practices if she had lived when they were initiated.

Even radiation from the sun can be overdone (sunburn). The benefits of irradiation in producing trichina-free pork and in reducing food waste are potentially enormous. Her final suggestion that its use will turn us incandescent is totally irresponsible. I have served on many sensory panels that have evaluated irradiated food.

KSDB making beneficial changes

KSDB is going through a period of change. To keep our listeners informed, I would like to elaborate on some of the reasons for these changes

KSDB is moving from 88.1 MHz to 91.9 MHz. We are not making the move to eliminate competition with KANU, but rather to avoid possible interference between TV channel 6 and stations at 88.1 MHz, caused by a flaw in the FCC rules. Although a TV-6 station does not currently exist, one is slated for Junction City, Kan. When it does sign on, there is a good chance KSDB could be forced off the air.

Therefore, KSDB opted to move the frequency now to ensure the future of the second oldest educational FM station in the country. A professional broadcast consultant studied the frequency problem and recommended 91.9 MHz. Depending on the quality of radio receivers, some people may not be able to receive KANU over the air (as they do now) when KSDB sgns on at 91.9 MHz, but that is not the end of the story.

KSDB has been working with KANU for nearly a year to replace a translator station in Manhattan at 90.5 MHz, allowing KSDB and KANU to coexist without interference.

LEE BULLER Guest Columnist

KANU listeners will hopefully get an even better signal than is currently available. KANU, and other classical stations, are also available on Manhattan Cable TV.

The decision to drop National Public Radio programming was necessitated by NPR policies, not by KSDB. National Public Radio and American Public Radio will be available from KANU at 90.5, KKSU at 580 KHz and KHCC at 89.5 MHz. To help replace the loss of NPR, beginning this fall KSDB will carry CNN Radio news daily (not currently available in Manhattan) and the Metropolitan Opera in stereo on Saturdays.

The station is staffed by K-State students and volunteers from the community, with faculty advising. The faculty contribute enormous amounts of time for organization and instruction at the station - an ongoing task due to continual student turnover.

KSDB's programming differs from other area stations by providing the only jazz programs in Manhattan, a classical program on Sunday mornings, ethnic music for Blacks and Hispanics, and contemporary music which doesn't see the light of day on Top-40 stations. KSDB broadcasts local sports, which commercial stations don't find profitable, and non-commercial events which are not usually found on other stations in the area.

KSDB is striving to better serve its diverse audience. Realistically, it will take both time and community support to develop the funding resources necessary to provide the quality programming our community deserves, and the alternative programming our listeners desire. We welcome comments, questions and suggestions from our audience. Please feel free to call or write the station.

NASA delivers shuttle report to president

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has received a report from NASA Director James C. Fletcher on meeting the recommendations of the presidential commission that probed the space program after the shuttle Challenger disaster, the White House announced Monday.

The director of the space agency was given 30 days to report to the president on how he intends to revamp the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in light of the Rogers Commission report that found organizational problems and design flaws in the space shuttle.

Reagan considers nominees for ambassador

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration is considering a black businessman from North Carolina for nomination as the U.S. ambassador to South Africa, an administration source said Monday.

Robert Brown, 51, a public relations and management consultant from High Point, N.C., would succeed Herman Nickel, who is now on home leave.

Earlier this year, Brown led a group of black educators to South Africa to help develop a U.S. program for training teachers and otherwise improving education opportunities for blacks in the country.

The source, who demanded anonymity, said there were other candidates under consideration as well. These were understood to include Richard Viets, 55, a career foreign service officer who was the U.S. ambassador to Jordan.

Brown would be the first black envoy to the white-ruled country. A black, John Burroughs, is the consul general in Capetown.

Nickel left South Africa last week for a month-long vacation in Europe and the United States. He has served four years in a difficult post, a year longer than usual in the Pretoria assignment.

Report shows increase in fall corn acreage

TOPEKA - Kansas farmers planted more corn and soybeans this year but less sorghum than in 1985, the state Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said. Corn acreage planted for fall harvest totaled 1.5 million acres, up 21 percent from last year. Acreage for harvest as grain was placed at 1.3 million acres, up 16 percent from a year ago.

Farmers also planted 1.9 million acres of soybeans this year, an increase of 23 per-Sorghum plantings, at 4.5 million acres, were down 6 percent from 1985, with the acreage expected to be harvested was placed at 4.0 million acres, off 5 percent. The service will make its first estimates of this year's corn, soybean and sorghum production on Aug. 11. Among the smaller spring-planted crops, state farmers planted 390,000 acres of barley, double last year's acreage; 310,000 acres of oats, up 24 percent; 64,000 acres of rye, up 7 percent, and 21,000 acres of dry beans, up 24 percent.

Guardian Angels establish Atlanta chapter

ATLANTA - The Guardian Angels announced Monday they are starting a local chapter and will begin patrolling the city transit system today

Curtis Silwa, founder of the New York-based crime-fighting group, said he had received more than 50 calls and letters about "the apparent deterioration of the quality of life in downtown Atlanta."

There have been some highly publicized robberies and a knife attack in the last year in Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority rail stations. MARTA officials, however, say stations are adequately patrolled and that crime has decreased in the last six months.

Sliwa said the Atlanta chapter would be started with eight Guardian Angels from Jacksonville, Fla. The group has chapters in 63 cities, he said.

Atlanta leaders have discouraged the Guardian Angels, characterizing them as vigilantes who would hinder police. Sliwa said the Guardian Angels, who are unarmed, want to work with authorities.

Marketing surveys found that 10 percent of the company's customers would pay a $10 charge and a monthly fee of $3.50 for a vanity number. A listing in the telephone directory would cost more, Smith said.

If the California Public Utilities Commission approves the plan, those who are MUCH FUN or know WHATS UP could get their special numbers by September. #### Winner finishes third in champagne race

DENVER - The champagne at the Great Waiters Race flowed freely - splashing from bottles, tumbling from trays and dousing competitors - and it took three finishers before officials could find a winner.

The object of Sunday's contest was simple: Be the first to run or roller skate across the finish line while balancing two full glasses and a bottle of bubbly on a tray. No fair touching. Most of the glasses were lost at the starting gate. Michelle Dodane, 22, the first to cross the finish line, was disqualified for propping the tray against her body. Tony Schalberg, a 28-year-old telephone man not far behind her, asked, "Was I supposed to be a waiter to be in this?"

Mike Culpepper, 26, a waiter at Racine's Restaurant, eventually was declared the roller race winner. His secret: towels stuffed with his size 8 feet in borrowed size 10 skates gave him more balance.

The contest was part of celebrations commemorating Bastille Day, the French national holiday that celebrates the 1789 capture of the Bastille during the French Revolution.

All-Star Game pitchers set for league bragging rights

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — The two managers made it official: Roger Clemens vs. Dwight Gooden in baseball's 57th All-Star Game Tuesday night at the Astrodome.

That left American League Manager Dick Howser with just one pitching question left to answer. Where was Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd?

"That's a tough one to field right off the bat," Howser said at a Monday morning news conference at which he and his National League counterpart, Whitey Herzog, announced their starting lineups

"We only selected eight pitchers. I want to be very careful about this. There is a guy in Boston who got left out. He's an outstanding pitcher. But we couldn't take everybody," Howser said.

The volatile Boyd returned to the Boston Red Sox's clubhouse Sunday to apologize for leaving the team last Thursday in a huff over not being selected for the team. At 11-6, Boyd was second only to teammate Clemens, 15-2, in victories for the Red Sox.

"My teammates have accepted me back, and I'll be back out there pitching my heart out for them again," said Boyd, who was suspended for three days and missed a pitching turn Sunday because of his walkout.

Howser, ever the diplomat, said he was sorry "to see how dismayed he was, and I think that's enough said. I feel sorry about Oil Can. We picked some extra people because we thought we needed the bats ... but I do feel sorry for Boyd. I don't envy his situation at all.'

Howser said he would start Clemens despite the fact that Clemens pitched nine innings on Saturday, snapping a two-game losing streak. Gooden, 10-4, has won two of his last three and has not pitched since last Wednesday.

"I saw Dwight throw against us in spring. He's in a class of his own out there," said Clemens, who will be appearing in his first All-Star Game in a town near where he grew up. "I think I have the advantage being at home."

Howser said he would use Ted Higuera of Milwaukee and Charlie Hough of Texas after Clemens. "It might just be those three." Howser said. Hough will be appearing in his first All-Star Game at age 38.

Howser also announced a batting order of center fielder Kirby Puckett, Minnesota; left fielder Rickey Henderson, New York; third baseman Wade Boggs, Boston; catcher Lance Parrish Detroit; first baseman Wally Joyner, California; shortstop Cal Ripken, Baltimore; right fielder Dave Winfield, New York; second baseman Lou Whitaker, Detroit. and Clemens. Herzog said he might follow Gooden with either Fernando Valenzuela of Los Angeles or Mike Scott of Houston, but he had not decided for sure yet. He also thanked the National League for allowing him to take 10 pitchers.

"It wasn't because I'd use 10 pitchers," Herzog said. "But there are so many who deserved to go. I really feel bad for guys like Bob Ojeda, Jesse Orosco and Roger McDowell (all from the Mets), and my own guy, Todd Worrell. In the near future, I would like to see the roster expanded to 30 (from 28) and make it mandatory to take 12

Redshirt quarterback set to transfer

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

Steve Mallory, a redshirt freshman quarterback last season, has decided to transfer to Coffeyville Junior College next year instead of remaining at K-State where he would face a bevy of quarterback hopefuls next season.

Mallory, the top-rated thrower in Topeka city history, said he came to K-State because members of the former Jim Dickey coaching staff said he would be able to continue running the option and throwing out of the option, like he did at Topeka West High School, earning All-State honors in 1985.

Stan Parrish, the Wildcats new football mentor, recruited four quarterback potentials during the last recruiting coup and has two holders from last season's 1-10 team, Randy Williams and John Welch.

"I know what type of position Coach Parrish is in," Mallory said. "...It has happened at other schools before too...He just wanted his players in there. He is a dropback (throwing quarterback) coach.

"I was recruited to run the option and throw out of the option. He talked about changing positions, but it was not for me. I just decided to go to Coffeyville and make my way back to another Division I program."

Candidate says diversification needed

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

In order to escape the plaguing farm crisis, farmers in Kansas need to diversify and produce products that are in demand, said Larry Jones, candidate for the Republican nomination for governor, in a press conference Monday in the Union director's office.

The 54-year-old business executive from Wichita, stopped at K-State to present the agriculture policy for Kansas he would implement should he win the race for the state's highest office. His appearance in Manhattan with his running-mate, Senate Majority Leader Paul "Bud" Burke, was to present the second part of his state policy proposal.

Jones' marketing plan would focus less on crop production and more on marketing and exporting what is produced. Quality production would help bring about higher prices and greater consumer loyalty to Kansas farm products.

The plan would focus on developing new specialty markets agricultural producers could enter. In short, the marketing plan would guide the state's agriculture production, Jones said.

"Too often we forget how much of our state is farmed and how many urban industries are linked to rural Kansas. Many city paychecks are grown on the farm," Jones said. "We (Jones and Burke) don't want to just cope with the farm crisis." Instead, Jones said he would work to use Kansas agriculture to its greatest advantage.

The policy presented by Jones also included plans for a feasibility study for a World Trade Center for Agriculture to be located in Kansas. The center would focus on international trade, finance and services of agriculture, Jones said. When asked how a trade center would be financed with the state still suffering the blows of a financial crunch, he said the feasibility of the center had yet to be studied. Conceivably, the center would be a jointly funded project among state and local governments and the state's corporate community.

"I don't think it's out of the realm of financial feasibility," he said of the trade center. He added he hoped to change the slumping economy of the state enough so the financing of the center would not become a concern.

K-State would also play a key role in Jones' plan by developing an education program that would bring together courses in agriculture, business and engineering. The proposed Educational Communications Center, which has yet to be

In an effort to increase exports, the agriculture marketing plan calls for a network of sales representatives to canvass the world filling vacant markets with Kansas farm products. The lowoverhead network would service specialty markets as well as already established markets, he

The plan also proposed the creation of a permanent agriculture advisory committee which would serve to help guide Jones on agricultural policy. The formation of the committee would be an attempt to bring together a constant group to discuss the problems facing agriculture, he said. The committee would not replace current agriculture advisory groups, but would delve further into Jones' agricultural concerns.

WICHITA - A poet-playwright who has been dead for 150 years has been asked by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole to contribute to the Republican Party.

"Dear Goethe," the letter from Dole begins. That's Goethe as in Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, the German poet-playwright who died in Goethe, according to the letter from the Republican senator from Kansas, was a likely recruit for the Republican Inner Circle, a select group of party loyalists who contribute large sums of money. The letter assured Goethe that Dole "personally" placed his name in nomination.

Dole's letter arrived last August at Boston's Goethe Institute, a German culture center, where it fell into the hands of Hans Winterberg, the center's director.

"I found it funny," Winterberg

He couldn't resist responding. So Dole received a letter from the author of "Faust" saying he was

Three-step process key to ridding pets of fleas

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

Although the problem is nothing new, fleas become a hot topic every summer for pet owners. In the warm months, the flea population explodes causing trouble for both pets and Summer is the peak season for fleas and this year is no exception.

"The humidity provides a favorable environment for the emergence of forms from the pupa stage," said Marvin Samuelson, associate professor of dermatology at K-State Veterinary Medical

At the veterinary hospital, doctors treat "about 150 flea problems a month," Samuelson said.

Pet owners may never realize they have a problem with fleas because they may never actually see fleas on their pet. They should look for "flea dirt" - tiny black specks of flea excrement - on the animal's skin.

The solution to the flea problem is to simply get rid of them. Although that may be easier said than done, Samuelson advises a three-part attack against fleas: outside, in the home, and on the pet.

Samuelson has made a free information sheet about flea control available from the veterinary center. "You must treat both environment and house to be totally effective," Samuelson said.

Control of fleas has a "two-fold use effect," Samuelson said. A veterinarian can prescribe proper products to use and the pet owner must apply them in a safe manner. "A veterinarian can prescribe appropriate products to carry out a successful program," Samuelson said. Pet owners should start yard sprays early in the season, he said. "March is the best time. If you wait until July, it's almost too late," Samuelson said. By starting control in March, the flea population has not yet exploded and can be controlled if spraying is continued on a monthly basis. Aerosol foggers and household insecticide sprays can effectively be used in the house by spraying along baseboards and corners once a week.

"If possible, people should consult exterminators. They will do work specifically for fleas," Samuelson said. These sprayings includes insect growth regulators or IGR.

Home Cooking

"Insect growth regulators are popular because they break the cycle of flea development and are not toxic to pets," Samuelson said.

"An average household could be treated for $100 a year if they chose their products wisely," Samuelson said.

Treatment of the pet for fleas is the third part of the whole process, but can only be completely successful if both the environment and house are

"During warm summer months, fleas spend an average of 15 minutes day on the host animals," Samuelson said in pointing out the importance of a three-part attack against fleas. "The remainder of the time they are resting in the environment and digesting their blood

In the house, vacuum thoroughly before each spraying and vacuum up a small amount of the insecticide so it is inside the bag while vacuuming

Bizarre confrontation leads to 3 deaths By The Associated Press WILTON, Calif. - A teen-age boy gunned down a nighttime intruder after the assailant shot to death the boy's brother and their father's The shootings occurred shortly after 1 a.m. Flea baths kill only the fleas on the The dead were identified as Vikki Hahne, 26; Scott Sterger, 19; and Solida. Jeremy Sterger, 14, the brother of Scott, shot the intruder, authorities said. Ray Sterger, 44, the father of the two boys, was in fair condition at University Medical Center. Sterger also fired at the intruder, Hoganson said. Hoganson gave this account of the shootings:

Sterger, his two sons and Hahne lived in the residence on Walmort Road in Wilton, a tiny farming community about 20 miles southeast of Sacramento. Jeremy Sterger was wakened shortly after 1 a.m. by screams from his father and ran to his father's room, where he saw his father struggling with an armed assailant. The boy saw his father shot in the face. and saw Hahne lying across a bed, shot in the back.

The youth grabbed a .22-caliber pistol from a drawer in his father's room, ran back to his bedroom, loaded the weapon, turned out the lights of his room, and waited for the ssaliant to enter.

The assailant came into the room, and Jeremy Sterger fired twice at the intruder. Jeremy then ran to the family room, where he found his brother, Scott, shot to death.

Jeremy returned to his father's room and found his father getting to his feet. The two heard the intruder moaning. The father grabbed a 22-caliber rifle and fired, hitting the intruder in the head.

Hoganson said he doubted there would be any charges filed ag either Ray Sterger or his son. "We don't expect at this point to determine anything but a selfdefense shooting," he said.

A deafening roar fills the air as huge waves pound the concrete and a 20-foot spray of water douses bystanders. The Florida Keys? No, actually it's the tubes at Tuttle Creek Lake.

"I have seen it gushing out before, but never like this. It is a fast way to get a shower," said Glynda Byarlay of Olsburg while watching the water flow through the tubes.

Karen Williams, a prospective freshman next fall at K-State, said,

"The water's a lot dirtier than usual.'

Williams said in the past she had observed only one side of the tubes is usually open, compared to both sides currently open.

Due to the high amount of rainfall in the area, about 20,000 cubic feet of water per second (cfs) or 150,000 gallons of water is being released through the tubes at the present time, said Harry Diesel, park manager. He added the normal amount is about 6,000 to 10,000 cfs. "If it rains, we let out a higher amount than usual," Diesel said.

Pressure from the amount of water passing through the tubes causes the spray to be much higher than normal, Diesel said. However, he added weather conditions such as wind also increase the amount of "The energy has to have some place to go," Diesel said in explaining the cause of the spray. Diesel said an amount as high as 30,000 to 32,000 cfs is occasionally reached for a short time period when they check equipment. The highest sustained rate was 25,000 cfs, which was reached in October of 1973, during flood conditions, he said. Diesel said the greatest danger at this time is the swift currents at the river caused by high water. He said there is not much danger at Tuttle Lake except for the area around the control tower, which has strong

"If someone got in this area, it could be very dangerous," Diesel said. However, he explained this area is marked by buoys and is closely watched.

Although there are several state park campgrounds that have been, or are still flooded due to high water, Diesel said most of the flooded areas in the park are grassy lawns and not part of actual campgrounds.

Experimental airplane sets unofficial records of distance, endurance

By The Associated Press

MOJAVE, Calif. - The spindly, fuel-stingy airplane Voyager and its two weary pilots landed on a desert airfield at dawn Tuesday after 111 hours of flight without stopping or refueling, unofficially shattering aviation records for distance and endurance.

The 11,857-mile flight by the experimental craft - virtually a flying fuel tank with two engines and a small space for the pilots - was a prelude to an attempt in September to take it on a nonstop flight around

Pilot Dick Rutan, 46, skimmed most of the runway before the lightweight, long-winged craft finally settled onto the ground, ending a flight that began Thursday at Vandenberg Air Force Base.

Several hundred relatives, friends and fans cheered the landing at Mojave Airport, 75 miles northeast of downtown Los Angeles, and later doused Rutan and co-pilot Jeana Yeager, 32, with champagne.

Organizers of the flight reported an 11,600.9-mile closed-loop flight, over the Pacific between San Luis Obispo and San Francisco, to the National Aeronautic Association, which is responsible for certifying records. That did not include 257 miles flown outside the loop when they were flying to and from the two airfields.

If certified, the little propellerdriven plane's endurance run will break the previous record of 11,337 miles, set in 1962 by Air Force Capt. Bill Stevenson flying an Air Force B-52H bomber, powered by eight jet engines, in one loop around North

The long hours in cramped quarters consisting of a one-person cockpit and a tiny sleeping area obviously took their toll on Rutan and

At a news conference, Yeager fainted into the arms of their flight surgeon moments after commenting about Voyager's constant engine

"We were having trouble with the noise...the fatiguing level of the noise, the vibrations - our heads (are) still kind of a roar right now,"

Dr. George Jutila, the flight surgeon, said Yeager suffered from simple fatigue and was revived

Asked if she were ready for the 'round-the-world flight, Yeager replied, "Can we wait 'til Rutan said that despite the length of the flight, there was always something to do and little idle time.

"There really isn't time to sit back and have a casual conversation," he Rutan said he planned to have better sleeping pads and sound insulation installed in the rear of the plane, where the pilot who isn't at the controls spends off-hours. Voyager's only seat is in the cockpit.

The Voyager crew also is claiming two other world records.

On Monday, after 95 hours aloft, the plane set a world record for nonstop mileage flown by a pistonengine aircraft, said Lee Herron, a project spokesman. The old record of 10,007 miles was set in 1981 by Jerry between Oklahoma City and Jacksonville, Fla., he said.

The plane also broke the most recent record for unrefueled endurance, set in May 1981 by Walter Lees and Fred Brossy, who stayed aloft for 84 hours and 32 minutes, he Voyager averaged 103.5 mph and got 29 miles per gallon of fuel, said its designer. Rutan's brother Burt. He said it had enough fuel left over for a flight from New York to Paris.

The plane is made from lightweight material, has a 110-foot wingspan and carries 17 fuel tanks. It has two engines, one pushing and one pulling, only one of which is used at a time while cruising.

New position finalist speaks at Union forum

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

Koy M. Floyd, one of three finalists for the position of vice president for institutional advancement, was the featured speaker at a forum held Tuesday morning in Union 212.

Floyd, director of university relations and professor of educational administration at the University of Tulsa, spoke to approximately 50 people for about one hour and 15 minutes, said Cy Wainscott, news editor in the Office of University Relations. During the forum, Floyd made remarks about K-State, and answered questions on various issues.

In his opening remarks, Floyd said he was impressed with the quality of life projected by both the Manhattan and K-State communities. According to Wainscott, Floyd said K-State has "...a really beautiful campus..." and that the University is at an exciting point in its history.

Looking at K-State's future, Floyd said the University could not hope to be all things to all people. According to Wainscott, Floyd said it would not be practical to try to expand K-State as a completely comprehensive university. He said K-State should try to develop its reputation nationally and internationally, and emphasize those areas which it already excels in.

"K-State is a national school." Floyd said. "It's paid for by the taxpayers of Kansas, but it is a national school."

Carol Oukrop, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said Floyd emphasized the need for K-State to develop a marketing plan. Floyd also said K-State needs to work on student retention. According to Oukrop. Floyd said some students come here and probably find they feel like they don't fit in.

Floyd expressed his feelings on what the role of the Collegian should be, Oukrop said. Floyd said although he had never actually seen the Collegian, it was his experience that a campus newspaper is a very important element in campus life. Floyd said the administration of the paper should be left to the students and the paper should be an independent voice.

According to Wainscott, Floyd also said K-State should make an effort to enroll students who have good academic records and who score in the 16 to 24 range on ACT tests.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for minority affairs and special programs, pointed out that minorities traditionally score lower than the majority on nationally administered standardized tests. According to Switzer, Floyd said despite this, every person who would fit in at K-State should have the opportunity to come here.

Richard Lancaster, vice president for development and college relations at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., will be the next candidate for the position of vice president for institutional advancement to speak at K-State. He is to speak at a forum at 10:30 a.m. Friday in Union 212.

Agency ends investigation

Crew's decision causes fatal air crash

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A flight crew's decision to land during a thunderstorm despite little information about ominous wind shears caused a Delta Airlines jet to crash near Dallas last August, a federal agency concluded Tuesday.

The National Transportation Safety Board said the Lockheed L-1011 jumbo jet had flown into a multiple microburst - a violent downdraft in a thunderstorm - and was unable to recover enough altitude to avoid falling into the ground 6,000 feet short of the

The accident killed 137 people, including a motorist traveling along a road near the Dallas-Fort Worth airport. There were 27 survivors.

The board rejected proposed findings by its staff - and one of its own members - which would have placed primary responsibility for the crash on Capt. Edward N. Connors, who had 29,300 hours of flight experience, 3,000 of them in the plane he piloted on that fateful day last August.

Instead, the board said, "the probable causes of this accident were the flight's crew decision to initiate and continue the approach into a cumulonimbus cloud which they observed to contain visible lightning, the lack of specific guidelines, procedures and training for avoiding and escape from low altitude wind shear, and the lack of definitive wind shear hazard information.'

The board's compromise language was fashioned by acting chairman Patricia A. Goldman.

Earlier, the independent safety agency heard testimony from staff investigators that the crew had received virtually no advance warning of the violent storm over the south edge of the Dallas-Fort Worth airport, except for the copilot's own observation - a single bolt of lightning as the jumbo jet was on final approach.

Investigators faulted several weather centers for failing to detect the storm cell more quickly, but said Delta's own training manual bars pilots from flying beneath thunderstorms at altitudes below 20,000 feet.

The board effectively held that Connors, who had a reputation for being especially cautious about severe weather, should not have continued his descent when his copilot spotted the lightning ahead of the plane.

Staff investigators also noted that pilots of other aircraft had witnessed severe weather in the area, but failed to report the conditions to the airport control

The staff and one board member argued that that should be held as a contributing factor to the accident, but the recommendation was

Loans increase banks' losses

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - Serious deterioration in some of the Wichita Farm Credit Banks' more than 67,000 loans probably will cause its secondguarter losses to increase nearly tenfold over first-quarter losses, according to a bank official. Many of the bank's real estate loans are in trouble because of slumping farmland values in Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Colorado, the four states the Wichita district serves.

The Farm Credit System is a nationwide system of borrowerowned financial institutions organized as cooperatives.

The potential losses are so large because many loans held by the Federal Land Bank, the district's long-term real estate lender, aren't now backed with enough property to secure them. Monte Reese, vice president for public affairs for the Wichita banks, said falling land values often mean lenders can't recover the amount of their loans even through foreclosure because the property is worth so much less than it was when the loan was made.

About 3 percent, or 2,105, of the district's 67,127 loans, 58,395 from land banks and 8,732 from Production Credit Associations, are in foreclosure, he said,

To cover the potential losses, the Wichita banks have been forced to place $190-$200 million in a special loss provision account.

Preliminary figures show the Wichita Farm Credit Banks will lose between $190 and $200 million for the first half of 1986. First quarter losses of $18.7 million are included in that figure. The banks lost $471 million in

The continued losses will again force the Wichita district to trigger a loss sharing agreement with other Farm Credit Banks districts, Reese said. The agreement was first used by the Wichita banks to offset their first-quarter loss. It requires the stronger FCS districts to provide financial aid to struggling districts.

Society celebrates centennial

By AMY TAYLOR Collegian Reporter

The Geological Society of America has been celebrating its 100th anniversary with a decade of activities devoted to the promotion and advancement of geology, said Ronald West, professor of geology.

"The Geological Society decided the best way to honor their centennial would be to have the decade of the 1980s devoted to activities involving research and development of geology," West said.

This decade of research is referred to as the "Decade of North American Geology," and culminates with the publication of a series of state-of-theart geology texts, describing the geology of specific locations in the United States, Canada and Mexico, and a series of field guides about geologically important sites in the United States, he said.

'The role K-State is playing in this DNAG, is the collection of information about various geological sites in the state for one of the field guides which will be part of the publication honoring the Geological Society's centennial," West said. "These field guides will aid professionals, tourists and amateur geologists in their study and observation of rock formations.

The United States is divided into six sections by the society. Of these sections, Kansas is located in the south central area, with the states of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas, West said.

"The six field guides contain descriptions of geologically important sites in each of the six sections of the United States," he said.

In the south central field guide,

Kansas will have approximately 20 to 25 locations included. About five or six of those sites are located in the Manhattan area. The sites were chosen along highly accessible roads for ease of location, he said.

"The field guides contain a detailed description of the land and rock formations in a specific area, and will be useful to the tourist and the professional both," West said. "They will allow organizations like 4-H groups, Boy and Girl Scouts, and schools, to utilize a descriptive tool for field trips and the study of Kansas rock formations," West said.

The DNAG will also be publishing maps of North America, and transects, which are a cross section of an area along a specific route,

"The transcripts will show an area's geological formation above and at what levels the rock formations change their composition," West said. "This will be of great help to the professional field geologists." The field guides and the geological texts will be published in the next year, West said.

"There is no special date for the actual completion of the series, but there probably will be a segment devoted to it in the Geological Society of America's annual meeting in the fall of 1988," West said.

"Through DNAG, the Geological Society hopes to create more interest and promote research in the geological area of science, to allow people interested in geology, the opportunity to have something to refer to, and to have an up-to-date field guide for use in applications," West

Officers in India lawless, activist says

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

The phenomena of dowry murders in India is shocking, but no longer surprising, activist Manhu Kishwar said at a presentation at the Union

With about 40 people in attendance, Kishwar said wife-murders are not uncommon anywhere in the world; only the forms vary. In India, however, women receive no protection from the police.

The police force is the most lawless force in India, Kishwar said. Consistently, the police pass off wifemurders as suicides or accidents, she said. People have been pressing for change, but nothing has changed

"Case after case, once police have destroyed preliminary evidence and passed the murder off as a suicide or an accident, little can be done to see justice done," Kishwar said.

The state pretends to be a neutral arbitrator, she said. In hundreds of cases of dowry murders, the conviction rate is extremely low.

"The judiciary often acts a defense for the murderers. Victims often leave dying declarations with police, doctors, magistrates or whomever. As you know, these declarations are usually seen as good evidence. However, a judge is likely to pass this off by saying, 'Well, the woman was so badly burned that she couldn't have known what she was saying," Kishwar said.

"If a state provides protection for a murderer, we're in trouble. I'm not saying that beatings, hangings or even disorder is the solution. All I know is that if the state machinery left us alone, we could solve our problems much sooner," Kishwar

She said disadvantaged groups demanding their rights or demanding implementation of existing policy receive no protection or aid from the state. The groups are often demanding no more than enforcement of the minimum wage law or protection from sexual violations, she said.

"India is not as resistant to changes in policy as the United States is. Much effort goes into changing U.S. policy, but here, implementation is what matters. I can't imagine spending decades trying to pass the Equal Rights Amendment in India; it would pass with no trouble," Kishwar said.

Kishwar said she tries to stay far away from consciousness raising and focuses instead on creating viable options for victims. If a woman has been beaten by her husband, Kishwar said the victim doesn't need to hear how horrible wife-beating is; she needs to know that she has options available to her.

"The 20th century is the most brutal and uncivilized period in history. People are no longer interested in solving problems like world hunger. In the 19th century, hunger affected everyone. Now, not everyone is affected, so the problem is allowed to continue. People feel they need to buy guns and weapons first. Food can come later," Kishwar Kishwar, instructor of English literature at Delhi University, is publisher of Manushi, a magazine dedicated to the struggle of women.

The presentation was sponsored by the International Coordinating Council, India Students Organization, South Asia Center. Women's Studies, the Department of Political Science, and the Graduate

Former professor sets up loan fund

By JANET TEETER Collegian Reporter

Retired K-State marketing professor, Alvin Mulanax, has set up a scholarship loan fund to provide financial assistance to students majoring in marketing.

"The Alvin E. and Katherine Mulanax Scholarship Loan Fund will be awarded to students who are Kansas residents and will be based on financial need and/or scholastic outstanding performance," said Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Students can apply for the scholarship loan through the college or Student Financial Aid. Tenured faculty in the Department of Marketing must recommend any student wishing to receive the loan to the KSU General Scholarship Committee.

"I consider it the marketing department's money," Pohlman said. "If the tenured faculty feel a student should receive the loan, then I don't feel it is up to us (the scholarship committee) to deny Mulanax donated bonds totaling $10,000 to the marketing department to set up the scholarship loan fund. Once the loan is received, the student can keep receiving the loan as long as satisfactory progress is being made toward graduation and the recipient remains in good moral character, Pohlman said. The student doesn't have to begin repaying the 3 percent loan until after graduation.

"I set up the fund because I wanted to do something for the marketing department. I think it's important for students to get used to repaying money because when they get out no one will give them anything outright," Mulanax said "I don't think students learn to accept responsibility when they receive grants and scholarships. The loan will teach them to be responsible for themselves."

Mulanax taught economics, business, marketing and sales courses at K-State for 30 years. He received his bachelor's degree from K-State in 1946 and his master's degree in 1951.

"I began teaching at K-State in 1947. I initially taught several subjects, but marketing was my first love," Mulanax said.

"The bonds are under the control of the KSU Foundation, which will invest them at a later time," Pohlman said. "The amount of the loans and the number of loans available will depend upon the amount of money the bonds earn in the form of interest each year.

"We are pleased to receive this gift from one of our own," Pohlman said.

"Professor Mulanax had a long and dedicated career in the Business of Administration at K-State," he said. "This gift is particularly meaningful to me because Professor Mulanax was one of my instructors when I was an undergraduate and graduate student. The College of Business Administration faculty, staff and students are most grateful for Professor and Mrs. Mulanax's contribution."

Fun, not competition characterizes 'Ambush'

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Ambush - a game where the best are left alive. It sounds grim, but actually it's just an adult version of Capture the Flag, a game many children play, said Royal Dowdy, co-owner of The Master Gamer, 1125 Laramie St

This version, played with airpowered pistols that shoot paint pellets, is open to anyone aged 15 or above, Dowdy said.

"Ambush is a game of stealth, strategy, speed, stamina and cunning," he said. "It's a survivalist game. (But) we play for fun, without the sort of competition usually associated with survival games."

Dowdy said Ambush is a modified game of tag. Each game has one to 12 rounds and once a player is hit, he or she is out of the game for that round.

Players use .62-caliber, airpowered pistols to "tag" other players with paint pellets. The pellets will leave a small mark on uncovered skin and probably no mark on skin covered with clothing, Dowdy said. The paint is water soluble and poses no ecological problems, he

Only shots that hit the player below the neck and above the waist count.

Dowdy said there is no reason for players to aim anywhere else, but accidents are unavoidable. Therefore, players are required to wear safety goggles as a precautionary measure.

For $10, each player receives a gun and holster, three speed-loaders, safety goggles and 18 paint pellets. Extra paint pellets are 20 cents each.

Several hours are set aside for people wanting to play Ambush each day except Wednesday

Ambush is played in the country about 14 miles east of Manhattan. Maps are available at The Master Gamer, Dowdy said.

The game officially began on July 4, but most of the scheduled sessions have been cancelled because of rain. Dowdy said most of the people playing now are military personnel who are used to working in high temperatures.

Dowdy said he expects more people to be interested this fall, when the weather becomes more favorable and students return to school. Similar survivalist games have caught on in Kansas City and Topeka, he said.

"I'd like to see some competition between fraternities and other living groups get started," Dowdy said. "It's a game, and it's a lot of fun for those who are interested."

Jennifer Dohl, graduate, portraying Jennie Malone, converses with George Schneider, played by Timothy Smith, graduate in theater, in the play "Chapter Two." "Chapter Two" will be presented at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday in Nichols

Play, actors improve as drama progresses

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

"Chapter Two" in the life of George Schneider is a sensitive, yet realistic, attempt at starting over.

If you didn't catch Neil Simon's "Chapter Two" on television Sunday night, you shouldn't miss the Summer Repertory Theatre's performance of the play in Nichols Theatre.

Play Review

Unlike most of Simon's plays, "Chapter Two" is more than a series of witty retorts. The play includes tender moments - free of satire - and stimulates sincere introspection.

The play takes place in two New York City apartments. One belongs to writer George Schneider, who has just returned from a trip abroad following the unexpected death of his wife, Barbara.

His brother, Leo, has been matchmaking in attempt to raise George's spirits. Leo has not yet met success as Cupid, and won't quit trying.

Jennie Malone, who recently divorced a football player, lives in the other apartment. Her friend, Faye Medwick, wants to be Malone's social coordinator.

And as you'd expect from Simon, the four eventually become two pairs. But as you might not expect, their encounters aren't always lusty, and they are never crude.

Timothy Smith, graduate in theater, plays the reclusive, conservative George. After the first scene, one knows not only George is still very in love with his former wife, but that being married to him must have been close to heaven for her.

Jennifer Dohl, May graduate from Bethany College in Lindsborg, plays an insecure, unsure Malone. Early in the performance, those characteristics seemed to be more a reflection of Dohl's nerves than Malone's character, but something clicked during an intense confrontation scene with George in the second half of the

At that point, the missing oomph was picked up and the mood of the play intensified. The strained feeling, which had been sporadically invading the theater, became relaxed.

The finish was stronger than the start. With a few more runs and continued work by director Barry Pearson, graduate in theater, the whole show should improve.

Danny Shea, senior in journalism and mass communications, plays Leo. Shea's energy complements Smith's generally somber mood in the first few scenes of the play. Sometimes Shea gets so excited the words come out faster than can be interpreted by human ears. However, it's not so annoying to overshadow other qualities of Shea's performance.

Nancy Sloan, senior in theater, adds her special spark to make Medwick a little like someone most people know. Sloan softens the wit and roughens the edges while fully immersing herself in the character.

The repertory group encountered several difficulties with this play. The opening and closing of make-believe doors and the timing of phones and doorbells sometimes got the best of the cast and crew.

Because a few intimate scenes occur on extreme corners of the thrust stage, the audience not only experiences difficulty hearing some dialogue, but gets a view of a back blocking a face on occasion. A thrust stage is surrounded by an audience on three sides, which can make staging difficult.

Those problems are of minor import in comparison to the obvious work of many involved in this repertory production.

The actors handle the light-hearted humor, the sarcastic verbal blows and the moments of reflection with understanding. While "Chapter Two" is neither painfully funny or pointedly dramatic, it is a slice-oflife play that is tasteful and touching.

The next performance of "Chapter Two" by the Summer Repertory Theatre is at 8 p.m. tonight in Nichols Theatre.

Local banks help soldiers with deposit

By The Collegian Staff

Family life is being made a little easier to afford for arriving soldiers at Fort Riley. According to First National Bank of Manhattan Vice President Jim Smallwood, the initial security deposits of up to $250 for KPL Gas Service Co. utility services may now be waived under a new program available to soldiers establishing off-post residences in the area. For a $20 to $25 non-refundable fee, soldiers who are authorized to live off-post can contract to have their security deposit guaranteed up to the $250 limit by First National Bank of Manhattan and Fort Riley National Bank, rather than pay the deposit

According to the utility company, the $250 limit will normally be sufficient to cover the required deposit.

themselves, Smallwood said.

Smallwood said the company uses a formula of two times the monthly average to determine the amount required for the security deposit.

The program provides some short-term relief from costly security deposits that face soldiers moving to a new post, Smallwood

"For a young, married private bringing his wife into Manhattan or Junction City for the first time, you're looking at somewhere in the vicinity of $600-$1,200," Smallwood

According to Judith Mosely, Army Emergency Relief officer, about $13,000 was loaned last year to soldiers requiring assistance with initial rents and deposits.

"The program will eliminate losses KP&L may experience through unrecoverable utility bills, and will ease the burden on soldiers because they don't have those initial expenses," said Dennis Bruzina, Fort Riley National Bank vice president.

"Our ultimate goal would be to increase the numbers or types of participating elements...telephone and water, for instance," said Lt. Col. Stephen C. Engelking, directorate of personnel and community services.

"This is a major step forward in our efforts to make family life a little bit easier to afford for our arriving soldiers," he said.

Task force studies possibility of athletic fee

By SANDY WINTER Collegian Reporter

K-State is the only school in the Big Eight Conference that does not have a student athletic fee, said Larry Travis, director of Intercollegiate Travis has been working to establish a student athletic fee to subsidize K-State's non-revenue producing sports since early in his University career.

A task force established to study the issue, the Athletic Fee Task Force, held only one meeting during the spring semester in April, said Kirk Caraway, a member of the task force. The issue is currently dormant, but the task force will resume meeting as soon as the fall semester begins, he said.

The athletic fee is to provide a budgetary figure to plan on so the athletic department can manage its money better, said Mike Jones, a non-voting member representing the athletic department on the task

"It would mean a more economical access to guarantee support for nonrevenue sports. From a strictly business point of view, we don't want to cut any (money) from the basketball or football budget," Jones said.

Officials in the athletic department hope a $10 or $20 fee per semester will generate approximately $300,000 to $600,000 for non-revenue producing sports. Currently, budgets for those sports receive the overflow revenue produced from the football and basketball budgets.

Jones said he can foresee the fee alleviating scholarship ailments. Last year the athletic department had track scholarships it didn't give out because it couldn't afford to offer full-ride scholarships, he said.

"You can't offer a track scholarship without knowing if it's going to be there to get the athlete through four years," he said. Currently, K-State's track team is ranked 14th in the nation, yet Washburn University in Topeka has more scholarships to offer incoming freshmen, Jones said.

Several options are currently on the table regarding the athletic fee, said Caraway, senior in political science. The task force must decide how much of a fee students should pay, and whether the fee should replace or accompany ticket sales. Jones said he would like to see the task force push for a small athletic fee accompanied by a small ticket

"I feel a small fee of $16 or $20 plus a small ticket price would be the best option," Jones said. "That way students could still get reserved seats and there wouldn't be any crowd control problem."

Jones said he believes the majority of students support an athletic fee, and it is now up to the task force to decide what "package" the fee should come in.

"No matter what the task force decides the fee should be, by far, K-State will still be below the national average of university athletic fees, especially in eastern or southern schools where the athletic fees are very high," Jones said.

To point out K-State's non-revenue budget problem, Jones compared the University to other schools. "The golf coach's salary at the University of Oklahoma is more than the budget for our entire golf team,"

"Our cheerleaders receive a budget of only $4200 a year, compared to KU's cheerleaders who get $67,000 - but ours are the ones who are nationally ranked. Some of our budgets are only half of those of Oklahoma or Nebraska, yet we still manage to compete very well with those schools," Jones said.

Jones referred to the difference in university athletic budgets as a "downward spiral." The fact that K-State has less to work with, but is

The task force also has four atlarge students. They are: Roger Haymaker, junior in business administration pre-professional: Kelly Lamborn, senior in journalism and mass communications; Bill Majerus, graduate in agronomy; and Sandy Marihugh, sophomore in prephysical therapy. ### Lecture series attracts recognition

The announcement came Monday that another "top-gun" government official has been scheduled to deliver a Landon lecture this fall.

Secretary of Education, William J. Bennett, who will be the fourth Reagan cabinet member to take part in the Landon lectures, will deliver the 73rd address of the series.

To some, this quasi-annual announcement is nothing to get excited about, but it should be of interest to all.

Because of the prominence of the speakers and the nature of their topics, the lecture series has attracted national attention, and will continue to do this fall.

The series brings to the University some of the nation's leaders in public affairs to discuss issues which are vital to the welfare of the country.

Alfred Landon got the ball rolling in December, 1966, with his address, "New Challenges in Internal Relations," and set the tone for this now-prominent lecture series.

The list of those who have spoken include politicians, journalists, activists, and military dignitaries. Even some international individuals like President Jose Napoleon Duarte and Ahmed Zaki Yamini have spoken from the Landon lecture podium.

Some of the household names who have graced the Landon lecture series posters across campus include: General W.C. Westmoreland, William F. Buckley, Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller, the Rev. Billy Graham, George Gallup, Jr., Dan Rather, presidents Nixon and Reagan, and former President Gerald R. Ford, to name just a

The most important thing the Landon lectures do for K-State is bring national recognition to the state of Kansas and particularly Kansas State University.

Communist threat

I am writing in response to a couple of guest columns that appeared in the Collegian on July 2 and 3. These columns, by Dan Walter and Rod Saunders, were written to express opposing views concerning the situation in Nicaragua.

Mr. Saunders and his friends speak in glowing terms of the improvements for the people gained by the Sandinistans. Surely some has been gained for the people from the redistribution of wealth that was unjustly concentrated in the Somoza regime.

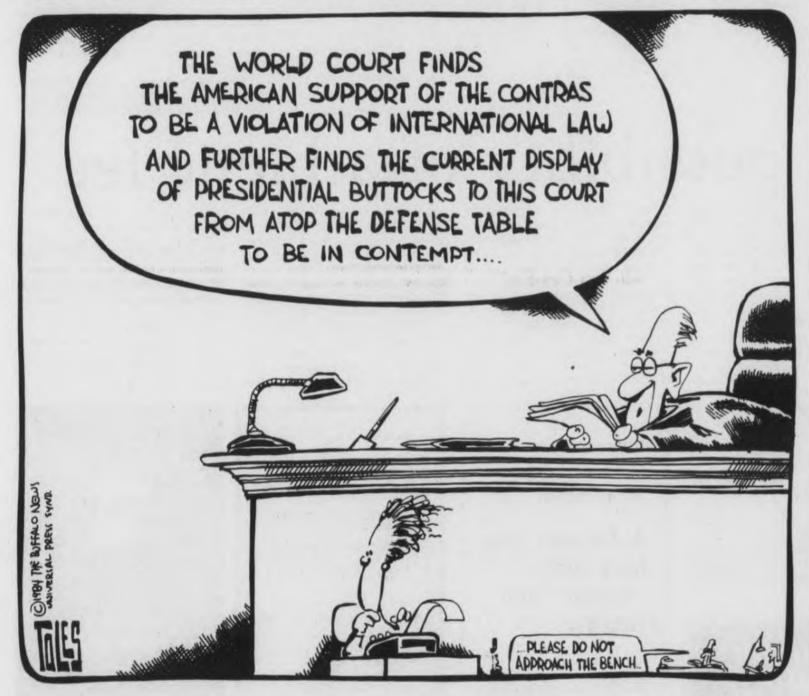

Nevertheless, at least these days, the Sandinista government has clear ties to the Soviets and Cubans. I've heard reports from native Hondurans that the threat of invasion from the communist stronghold in Nicaragua is frighteningly obvious.

It is clear that as the communist government in Nicaragua stabilizes, all of the relatively unstable governments in Central America will become targets for communist expansion.

Mr. Saunders cited lots of statistics of improvements brought about by the Sandinistas. These improvements may be real, I can't currently prove him wrong. Nevertheless, it's not beyond the Soviets, or their puppets, to show only their better side to visitors. Either way, our support for the Contras at the present time appears to be our best chance to stem the tide of communist expansion in Central America.

Sense of fairness depends on ethics

In two or three weeks University President Jon Wefald will move into his new home, the President's House. Crews have been hard at work for several weeks to get the house prepared, making it a place where Wefald, his wife and two children can live comfortably and entertain guests of the One recreational item which may be moved into the house is a snooker table from the K-State Union. This has raised the eyebrows of a few people because the table was paid for with student funds. Once it is placed in the President's House it will no longer be available for student use.

In order to clarify how the idea of moving the table to the house came about, and the ethical questions which it raises, we should take a look at the order of events which led to the idea. The following is based on conversations with Union Director Walt Smith and stories in the Collegian.

Last winter Smith decided to put two snooker tables up for auction to raise a little money for the Union. The tables had been under-utilized because snooker is not as popular as pool. Advertisements were run in the classified sections of the Collegian and the Manhattan Mercury and some mail-in bids were received.

The highest bid on one of the tables was $600, but that bid was later withdrawn. The rest of the bids did not exceed $200 for both tables. Smith turned down the bids, one of which came from Vice-President for Administration and Finance George Miller. The tables remained in infrequent use in the Union.

This past spring when Wefald, a billiards enthusiast, was touring the President's House, he commented to Miller that one of the rooms would be nice for a billiards table. Shortly thereafter Miller asked Smith if it would be possible to move one of the snooker tables from the Union to the President's House. Smith saw no problem with that. He figured the table would receive more use from Wefald.

This summer when Wefald was contacted by the Collegian he said he had no knowledge of the snooker table subject. He speculated that it may have arisen from an offhand comment. Wefald explained that if it is decided that the table should remain in the Union, then it will. He appears to have overlooked that the decision is his to make.

A couple of weeks later he spoke to Smith and asked if Smith felt any controversy would develop over the snooker table move. Smith was unsure.

I can understand Wefald's desire to avoid controversy. It is only natural. But, the important questions he should be asking are, "Is it fair?" and "Is it proper?"

Assessing the fairness of actions affecting the student body is sometimes a difficult task. Some ethical questions which arise in this case are:

1. Is it proper to remove student property from student access for the private use of an administrator and his family?

2. If an administrator does the above, should he compensate the student body for use of the property?

3. Is it proper for one administrator to accept what may appear to be a favor from subordinate administrators?

It is up to Wefald to decide the answers to these questions. Certainly, his bosses, the Board of Regents, are not going to care about such a small issue.

I believe the answers to the above questions are clear. There are two simple solutions to this: Wefald should either buy the table or rent it. Certainly he can afford it on his $92,000 salary. Perhaps a good way to assess the value of the snooker table is to consider that one was auctioned for $375 when the poolhall in downtown Manhattan closed earlier this year.

It may do Wefald well to always look at the ethical questions of fairness before making decisions about student funds and property. Most of the decisions will be of much greater importance than this snooker table, but this would be a nice place to start. Someone who may be able to help on ethical questions is his new administrative assistant, Charles Reagan, who used to head the Philosphy Department.

If the students feel they have been treated fairly they will have a much higher opinion of K-State than if they feel they have been treated unfairly - in large and small issues.

Nearly everyone familiar with the problem of recruitment says that nothing counts more than what a University student tells the prospective student. Treating the students fairly is for the good of the University.

U.S. passport holders encounter problems

TEL AVIV, Israel — The U.S. Embassy has complained to Israeli authorities of discrimination against U.S. citizens of Palestinian origin, an embassy official said Tuesday.

The official said Americans of Palestinian origin have to wait hours for processing upon arrival at the airport and are sometimes refused entry or find their passports confiscated until departure.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman denied in a telephone interview that the Palestinians were singled out for special treatment at the airport.

He noted that U.S. passport holders do not have to apply for visas before visiting

Man faces assault charge after dog's attack

BATTLE CREEK, Mich. - An 18-year-old man was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon Tuesday for allegedly ordering his pit bull dog to kill a woman,

"He just said that one word; he told the dog to kill," said Helen Simmons, 33, of Battle Creek. She said the attack lasted about three minutes.

Simmons was bitten on her leg in the early morning attack and was treated for puncture wounds at Battle Creek Community Hospital.

Todd A. Reichert faces a July 23 preliminary examination on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon. He was freed on a $2,000 personal recognizance bond after his arraignment. The charge carries a maximum penalty of four years in prison and a $2,000 fine.

Reichert is accused of stopping his car on a bridge, letting his pit bull dog out of the car and ordering it to kill Simmons, who was fishing from the bridge, said Police

Half-price sale on former De Lorean estate

SAN DIEGO - The 48.5-acre former estate of carmaker John De Lorean has been marked down half price - to $2.7 million.

The Pauma Valley home has been offered for sale at various times in the last four years, said real estate agent Athan Vlahos of Vlahos Properties in Escondido.

The original asking price was $4 million, Vlahos said. "Then it went to $5.2 million so De Lorean could levy that against his bail. Then it went to $3.7 million and now it's at $2.7 million."

It's not as if no one is interested, he said. "We 'sold' it three times, but we couldn't deliver clear title, so the buyers backed out."

The estate passed into the hands of De Lorean's attorney, Howard Weitzman, in lieu of payment for defending him on cocaine-trafficking charges. De Lorean was acquitted in August 1984 by a federal jury in Los Angeles on charges he was involved in trafficking $24 million worth of cocaine.

Known as La Cuesta de Camellia, the estate includes a 5,720-square-foot adobe main house, two guest homes and a five-room house for the ranch manager who oversees 17 acres of citrus groves on the grounds.

Suspect faces charge in 11-year-old murder

WICHITA - An Oklahoma man was being held in lieu of $250,000 bail Tuesday after making an initial appearance in Sedgwick County District Court on a firstdegree murder charge in an 11-year-old case.

David Packard, 35, of Tulsa, Okla., was charged in May and initially fought extradition from Oklahoma, but later dropped his resistance and was brought to Wichita, according to Assistant District Attorney Ann Swegle. Packard appeared Monday before Associate District Judge Paul Buchanan.

Another former Wichitan, Edgar Leon Hayes, 29, of Denver, also is charged with first-degree murder in the case. He has been bound over for trial on that count and one count of aggravated kidnapping.

The men are charged in the June 4, 1975 stabbing death of Carol Marstellar, 32, who was abducted from the parking lot of a club in south Wichita, driven into the country and killed. Her body was found four days later in a ditch

Sheriff Mike Hill said the arrests followed a tip that came by telephone from an Oklahoma woman, whom he would not identify. Hill also said detectives had recovered a car and a knife they think were used in the killing.

Service reports wheat harvest completion

TOPEKA - The state Crop and Livestock Reporting Service has declared the 1986 Kansas wheat harvest finished, calling it the earliest completion in 12 years. With only a few fields in extreme north-central and northeast Kansas remaining to be cut this week, the service proclaimed the harvest 100 percent finished.

Usually by mid-July the crop is 85 percent harvested. This is the earliest comple-The crop is estimated at 326.4 million bushels, with the final official production figure due out Aug. 11. With both the acreage and the per-acre yield down, this year's crop is about one-fourth smaller than in 1985.

Meanwhile, growth of the state's corn, sorghum and soybean crops was reported to be well ahead of schedule, just as development of this year's wheat crop was last Forty-five percent of the corn crop was reported to be in the silk stage, compared with 15 percent by this time in an average year. The corn was rated 83 percent excellent, 10 percent good and 7 percent fair.

All the sorghum was reported to be planted with good stands emerging and 5 percent of the crop already headed. Usually only 1 percent has headed by this time. Fifty-nine percent of the sorghum was rated excellent, 28 percent good and 13 percent fair.

Soybean planting also is finished with 30 percent of the acreage blooming, compared with 10 percent in an average year. Condition of the soybean crop was 78 percent excellent, 17 percent good and 5 per cent fair.

American League holds off NL rally for All-Star victory

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - Roger Clemens won his vaunted duel with Dwight Gooden as the American League paired precision pitching and the power of Lou Whitaker and pinchhitter Frank White to beat the National League 3-2 Tuesday night in baseball's 57th All-Star Game.

Clemens, 15-2 for the Boston Red Sox after a 14-0 start, opened with three perfect innings, while Whitaker and White hit homers for the Americans. Whitaker's was a two-run shot in the second inning off Gooden, the New York Mets' 1985 Cy Young winner.

Clemens, Ted Higuera of Milwaukee, Charlie Hough of Texas, Dave Righetti of the New York Yankees and Don Aase of Baltimore, the major-league save leader with 23, held the NL to five hits, only one through the first seven innings.

The victory was only the second in the last 15 All-Star Games for the Americans, the last one in 1983. St. Louis' Whitey Herzog was the losing manager both times. It was also the first time the AL had won in a National League park since 1962 at Chicago's Wrigley Field. The Nationals still lead the series 36-20-1.

Gooden, 10-4 but only 5-4 in his last nine decisions, worked the first three innings, giving up the out just two in his third All-Star Game. His relief, Fernando Valenzuela of Los Angeles, tied an All-Star record set by Carl Hubbell in 1934 by striking out five in a row and pitched three scoreless innings for the Nationals.

But the spotlight was on the American League pitching, which gave up only one earned run. Noted for their longball prowess, the AL did come up with the homers by Whitaker and White in the vast Astrodome, site of the 1968 All-Star Game.

That was enough, though the AL survived a shaky eighth by Hough and a two-on, one-out jam in the ninth. San Francisco's Chris Brown put the NL on the board, doubling, going to third on a wild pitch and scoring from third when Boston's Rich Gedman let a Hough knuckleball get by on a third strike to Montreal's Hubie Brooks. Brooks went to second on a Hough balk and scored on a single to left Gooden gave up a hit to the first batter he faced, Kirby Puckett of Minnesota, but got out of that inning. Then, with two out in the second inning, Dave Winfield of New York doubled and Whitaker followed with the towering home run to right field.

"That's been the problem all year," Gooden said. "One mistake pitch and I get hurt. I hope I can work on eliminating that in the second half of the season."

White, pinch-hitting for Whitaker with two out in the seventh, hit the first pitch from the Astros' Mike Scott for his home run. The ball just barely cleared the wall in left-center.

Gooden had two strikes on Whitaker, who had 12 homers at the break, three in the last four games. Catcher Gary Carter of the Mets called for a curve, but Gooden got the breaking ball up in the strike zone and Whitaker hit it up in the stands.

SAN JOSE, Calif. - Pitcher Steve Howe expressed shock Tuesday at his positive cocaine test that resulted in his imminent suspension from the California League.

"I'm pondering retirement right now," Howe, who was pitching for the San Jose Bees of the California League and was reportedly close to signing with the Toronto Blue Jays, said. "I really don't know what's going on."

Howe, reached at his Montana

Howe said he could not comment further until he spoke with his attorneys. "I don't know any more than you know," he said. John Lence, Howe's principal attorney, would not comment until he could talk to Howe.

The Bees announced the positive results Tuesday and said the lefthanded pitcher would be asked to leave the team and seek medical

Museum celebrates Kansas' birthday

By TRACY MAYHEW Collegian Reporter

Imagine what it was like to live in Manhattan more than 100 years ago. If the picture is not quite clear, the Riley County Historical Museum may be able to help one stroll down memory lane.

The museum, 2309 Claflin Road, is a popular attraction for people of all ages. Its most frequent guests include women's clubs, scout troups, school groups, tourists and visitors from other countries, said Jean Dallas, director of the museum.

Dallas, who has been the director for 15 years, seemed to show pride and enthusiasm while describing exhibits in the museum.

"I am really proud of the museum, especially since Riley was one of the first counties in Kansas to start one," Dallas said.

Currently the museum has an exhibit in conjunction with the celebration of Kansas' 125th birthday: "Memories - The Best of the Past." Dallas said it is one of the museum's most popular exhibits.

"This exhibit is very interesting and a favorite of many people," she said. "It shows loose artifacts from the past 125 years.

In part of the exhibit sits a glass case containing a silver basket made by Paul Revere. The basket is believed to have sat on the table used during the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It was donated by Lucile Rust, who received it from an aunt who obtained the basket in 1876 at the Philadelphia Centennial.

Other articles in the exhibit include artifacts from the old churches in Riley County and a handcarved clock made of black walnut. The clock represented Kansas in the Chicago Exposition in 1893. The exhibit also has the original music of K-State's alma mater, written by H.W. Jones.

One of the main attractions of the museum is "The Land of the People" exhibit, which gives a view of what Kansas residents were like when Manhattan was settled in the mid-1850s.

There is no charge for admission, but donations are accepted at the door, Dallas said.

The museum was founded in 1914 when Riley County first began a historical society, with its main goal to build a museum.

The goal was achieved when the first museum was built in October of 1916. The original museum, the Pioneer Log Cabin still standing in City Park, began with only a few artifacts and was located next to what use to be a race track for horses, Dallas said.

"Lack of room and an increase in donations brought about the new museum in October 1977," she said.

Area theaters offer variety of movies

By JEAN TELLER Managing Editor

Movies are a major source of entertainment anytime of the year. Two fantasies, one mystery and a comedy add to the entertaining films currently showing in Manhattan.

Robert Redford, David Bowie, Rodney Dangerfield and Kurt Russell are a few of the stars gracing the big screen this summer. The movies these four star in are among the entertaining flicks released so

All in all, it's a great summer for those of us considered fanatical moviegoers. But the movies are also a great means of escape and entertainment for people who only see one show a year.

"BIG TROUBLE IN LITTLE CHINA"

John Carpenter's "Big Trouble in Little China" is a myriad of fastpaced action. From the beginning Chinese martial arts rumble to the special effects of Chinese black magic, the movie is visually overstated and overwhelming.

It's too bad the story doesn't go along with the visualization. The actors seem to be stretching for the laugh. It is definitely a tongue-incheck look at black magic but it loses the punch line somewhere along the Kurt Russell is still Kurt Russell but he is definitely not comfortable with the role of anti-hero Jack Burton. He really isn't the hero of the movie.

That role has to go to Wang Chi, admirably portrayed by Dennis Dun. Wang is the most unlikely of the cast to become the hero but when the martial arts fighting begins, Wang is the one to watch.

Kate Cattrall is fairly good as the wide-eyed lawyer, Gracie Law. One is never really able to figure out who or what Gracie is, which is another inconsistency in this fantasy.

"Big Trouble in Little China" is fascinating visually but leaves something to be desired in the story department.

"LEGAL EAGLES" Fantastic.

What else can you say about a delightful mystery starring Robert Redford and Debra Winger as lawyer partners and Darryl Hannah as the misunderstood, misfit client?

Redford turns in a totally different performance as Tom Logan. He is actually human and funny, definitely not his usual role.

Winger is a solid performer. She makes you believe in Laura Kelly and that Kelly actually does care for her various clients.

Hannah is stunning as Chelsea Deardon, a misfit artist with an emotionally disturbing past.

Between those three and Brian Dennehey, as the mystery man, this movie is one of the best of the year.

"LABYRINTH"

A combined effort of George Lucas, Jim Henson and David Bowie, you would think "Labyrinth" would be another great movie.

It lives up to the possibility of great effects, but the plot is so simplified that it loses in characterization and story.

Bowie is superb as the goblin king but his songs are interspersed in the film as if they couldn't quite decide what to do with the score. The songs are excellent but are disconcerting when just thrown in for lack of something else to do. Henson's creatures are, as usual, fantastic. And of course, Lucas lives up to the reputation for great special effects. But that's where it ends - in the middle of the maze.

"BACK TO SCHOOL"

This isn't the vehicle most would consider for the talents of Rodney Dangerfield, but "Back To School" is a funny movie.

Not only does Dangerfield star in this one, but he also co-wrote it. It's a look at a father's love for his son and the ways that love can suffocate and yet support an insecure college student. It's also a look at a man's dream of higher education, for his son and himself.

Don't go to "Back to School" expecting a laugh a second. It won't happen. But do expect to see strong performances by Dangerfield, Sally Kellerman, et al, and a funny look at a millionaire's idea of college.

Southeast heat causes deaths

By The Associated Press

Clouds brought slightly cooler weather Tuesday to the Southeast, relief was temporary, and scattered rain did little to ease the region's drought.

The high temperatures and the months-long drought have killed thousands of chickens, withered crops and forced water-use restrictions in some communities.

Temperatures at 1 p.m. Tuesday were mostly in the 90s and high 80s in Georgia, southeastern Tennessee and the Carolinas, where Monday's high of 101 at Columbia, S.C., marked a record eighth consecutive day of triple-digit temperatures. The

South Africa Supreme Court upholds state of emergency

By The Associated Press

DURBAN, South Africa — A threejudge panel today declared void all or parts of five of the six definitions of "subversive statements" banned under the national emergency decree on grounds of vagueness.

However, the Natal province Supreme Court rejected a black union's argument that the entire state of emergency was illegal.

Justice John Didcott told a crowded courtroom that several aspects of the definitions under the law were "hopelessly uncertain."

In his two-hour-long opinion on the case brought by the mainly-black Metal and Allied Workers Union, Didcott said just one of the six clauses defining a subversive statement was precise enough to be considered lawful.

That clause forbids incitement of people to participate in unlawful strikes, boycotts, processions, civil disobedience or to oppose compulsory military service.

He said two of the clauses were far too broad to be understandable.

One bars any statement that advances the object of any unlawful organization.

"I consider that paragraph (a) is hopelessly uncertain, and that no ascertainable meaning can be derived from it," Didcott said.

The other provision considered too broad prohibited any statement that engenders hostility between one person or group and another.

"It is unintelligible," Didcott said. Didcott's ruling means most aspects of the nationwide state of emergency decree remain in force. The union had contended the regulations were void because President P.W. Botha announced them simultaneously with the emergency decree, rather than proclaiming the emergency decree first.

Emergency powers still in force are detention without charge, curfews, sealing off areas and the power to shut down publications.

The ruling came a day after the three-member high court in this Indian Ocean port heard final arguments in the case.

Policy could affect employees

Hayden supports drug testing

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House Speaker Mike Hayden on Wednesday called on the Kansas Board of Regents to develop a policy for mandatory drug testing of all athletes at state universities and suggested a similar program might be appropriate for the state's 37,500-member workforce.

However, a survey of the six statefund universities showed that four already conduct urinalyses of their student-athletes and the other two are taking steps to educate their athletes of the dangers of drug use.

"I think that people are so concerned about it that we may have to have the Board of Regents, hopefully voluntarily, participating with the universities to initiate mandatory drug testing among university athletes," Hayden said in an interview.

"There is one way to find out if drugs are a problem in Kansas, and that's with drug testing. The military now has an extensive testing program and they have really made a dent in getting rid of drugs. The tests are so sophisticated nowadays that you can make a dent.

"If we find problems, through programs of rehabilitation we can move to solve those problems."

Hayden, who is competing for the Republican nomination for governor in the Aug. 4 primary, said he's mulling over a similar proposal for all state employees, including the approximate 10,000 university faculty and 27,500 classified workers.

"I would be open-minded to it, I really would," Hayden said. "I think it's premature at this time to say exactly what that policy ought to be...but I'll tell you what — there's a real concern about drug abuse in our society and I think we better deal with it.

"I'm very supportive of finding out if we have a problem and, if we have it, then dealing with it."

Charles Dodson, executive director of the Kansas Association of Public Employees, disagrees vehemently that drug testing of state employees is the way to determine whether a problem exists. Dodson said a voluntary program wouldn't work because those on drugs would not agree to be tested.

"We're adamantly opposed to lining everybody up and having them go for it," Dodson said. "That would really upset me. You do not test to determine if there's a problem. As long as a person's work isn't being affected I see no reason to test for drugs. If they're not doing the job, then maybe you consider it but otherwise its simply an invasion of privacy."

Stanley Z. Koplik, executive director of the Regents, said he "can't imagine" a drug testing program of employees and faculty at state universities would be well received and he would "not be too excited about administering such a program."

Koplik said the universities already are tackling the issue of drug use on campus — whether by athletes or other students — and no other immediate action is contemplated by the board.

"The Regents have a great deal of faith in the administrations at the Regents universities and are alert to the drug problem," Koplik said. "Nobody condones the use of drugs...and the Regents are concerned about every student.

"We'd like to believe that strong educational programs about the dangers of drugs would be enough to turn everybody off. Maybe that's too idealistic. Maybe we need to do more of that.

"We do have programs in place at our universities and the problem is not being ignored and I believe the Regents are satisfied with the current campus efforts," Koplick said.

Hayden said he has not developed any specific proposal for randomly checking workers for evidence of drug use and pledged to work with the employees' union to come up with an acceptible plan.

"As I have traveled around the state, I find that peoples' awareness has been raised because of recent cases around the country," Hayden said. "They say, 'If we're going to continue to support our universities and their programs, we want to be sure their athletic programs are drug free."

"They say the state ought to have a role in it. I've heard it from a lot of people. The public is making an issue of it. But I'm bringing it up because I believe in it. It's easy for me to get out front on this issue because it fits right in with what I believe in," Hayden said.

A survey of the six state-funded universities showed that all three of the major colleges — the University of Kansas, Kansas State University and Wichita State University — have

Rebel leaders gather to hear U.S. support

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rebel leaders fighting communism in some of the world's hot spots gathered Wednesday at a "Contra Summit" and were told by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that the United States will not abandon them.

Guerrillas representing the well-publicized insurgencies in Nicaragua, Afhanistan and Angola joined rebels from Ethiopia, Laos and Cambodia at a conference sponsored by the American Security Council, a conservative organization dedicated to a strong defense.

Weinberger, along with Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., attended events at which the rebels, called freedom fighters by President Reagan, wore suits, ties and buttons stating: "I'm a Contra, too."

The word Contra is used to describe the U.S.-backed Nicaraguans battling Managua's Sandinista government, but anticommunist rebels from Africa and Asia said they share goals and aspirations.

"Contras are now all of us...dedicated to fighting Soviet expansion," said Jeremias Chitunda, an associate of Jonas Savimbi, the head of troops fighting Angola's government, which is propped up by Cuban troops and Soviet aid. "It is now perceived that Washington cares about freedom fighters."

Describing the resistance groups, Weinberger said, "They have, as so many have in the past, come to America for aid and encouragement. Our message must remain what it has always been: We shall not abandon you."

But Weinberger focused most of his remarks on criticism of the House Armed Services Committee for budget cuts he said reflect a "strategy of weakness."

Regents may end anthropology degree

By KAREN SCHULER Collegian Reporter

By 1988 K-State may no longer have an anthropology degree.

Last year, the Kansas Board of Regents reviewed all of the anthropology departments in Kansas, said Patricia J. O'Brien, professor in anthropology.

"We wrote a review of what we had been doing the past five to 10 years. That was about what the students and faculty had accomplished," she said.

At the personal review in Topeka, the Regents said they thought the program at K-State was very strong, O'Brien said.

"Then, out of the blue we got a review letter (in September 1985) saying that unless we had more majors they would drop the degree program, but keep the service component (introductory classes)," O'Brien said.

"We had 29 students at the time of the review and by May 1986 we had 33. We have more majors than chemistry or physics and it seemed odd to be told we were doing a very good job but did not have enough majors. If there is a minimum number of majors needed for a baccalaureate degree it should be the same for every discipline," she said.

O'Brien said she and her colleagues do not know the reason the Regents want to drop the program. "Maybe they think they are going to save money," she said.

If the program is cut to only the service component, the Regents will not save much money because 96.7 percent of the anthropology program's budget is service component, O'Brien said.

The Regents apparently want to cut back because there are fewer students but they are overlooking the quality of education, O'Brien said.

"The Regents are concerned that there was such limited enrollment. It is their opinion that it affects the quality of education the students are receiving," said Martine Hammond, director of academic affairs for the Regents. "Last year the anthropology department was the only one at K-State but there were some other (departments) on other campuses."

"We are giving students at K-State the same quality as some of the prestigious private schools but there is no concern about maintaining that. Our undergraduate students are better supervised than those at KU and WSU because they have graduate programs," O'Brien said. Because those universities have graduate programs, the faculty need to spend more time with the graduate students than the undergraduates.

"We feel that (a graduate program) will weaken the whole system, not just for anthropology majors but for all students who take the service courses. It will weaken faculty morale," she said.

K-State was not the only school to be threatened with losing part of its program. At the University of Kansas, the Regents took away the bachelor of social science in anthropology degree and the master's degree of philosophy, O'Brien said.

Wichita State University was threatened with having its master's program in anthropology taken away.

"But they were so vigorously defended by their administration that all criticism was removed," she said.

Another reason O'Brien could not understand the Regents taking away the program was because the business world is calling for people with a broad liberal arts background. The Regents have even backed this idea, she said.

"Anthropology contributes to broadly educating people. Maybe to the public's mind anthropology deals with bones and dead stuff but it doesn't. It deals with real live people," she said.

O'Brien said the department has faculty members with specialties relevant to student's needs, citing current issues throughout the world.

Right now there are problems in Africa. Two of the faculty in the anthropology department are specialists on Africa, O'Brien said. One faculty member is a specialist in India and is concerned with agriculture and the impact of modernization on women. Another faculty member specializes in Mexico and studies village and rural life.

The United States is spending a lot of money to help some of these countries. Because of that students need to know more about the countries in order to more effectively help them, O'Brien said.

They're here to raise spirits

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

Approximately 380 high school cheerleaders from throughout Kansas are being put through their paces on campus this week.

The cheerleaders are participating in a four-day camp sponsored by the National Cheerleaders Association.

Through the course of the camp which ends today - the cheerleaders are offered instruction on cheers, chants, partner stunts, pyramids and pom pons. In addition, the cheerleaders attend lectures on crowd control and are informed on the topics of squad responsibility and cheerleading techniques.

"Safety is most important," said James Speed, NCA staff member and cheerleading coach for the Kansas City Chiefs' and the University of Kansas' cheerleading squads.

The NCA has a strict pyramid policy and teaches only the pyramids that meet its standards.

Each evening, the cheerleaders have their performances evaluated by the staff, but intersquad competition is not stressed until the last day, when the campers take part in an Award of Excellence competition, said Dave Hunt, NCA staff member.

Aside from all of the rooting going on at the camp there is some work in-

"We have to learn 13 new cheers by (today)," said Nikki Hirsch, cheerleader from Glasco.

The cheerleading squads' sponsors also have a complete program from which they can earn college credit.

Their program includes instruction on how to set up cheerleading tryouts, run effective pep rallies, fund-raising ideas for the squads and conditioning programs for the cheerleaders. The sponsors are also shown demonstrations of everything the cheerleaders do, which the sponsors can participate in if they wish, Hunt said.

All materials taught at the camp are developed at NCA headquarters in Dallas, so each camp teaches basically the same material. There is some variation depending on the region in which the camp is held,

The instruction is also geared to the abilities of the individual squads. The NCA teaches beginning, intermediate, intermediate/advanced, and advanced levels.

The NCA began in 1948 and is the largest cheerleading organization in the world, said Hunt, who has been with the NCA for eight years.

NCA is staffed by 350 college cheerleaders and offers camps in every U.S. state, as well as Australia, Japan, Puerto Rico, and Europe, he said.

Stadium houses electronic service

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

The move by Telecommunications Services to East Stadium last spring resulted in several improvements to that building, said Tom Gallagher, director of University Computing and Telecommunications Activities.

An exit door was installed on the west side of the telecommunications offices, which were vacated last fall when the Department of Speech moved to Nichols Hall. An access drive west of the office was cleaned out, and minor painting and repair work was also done, he

"It's a University rule that when a space is modified, it must be brought up to (meet current state building) code," Gallagher said. The exit door was installed to meet code requirements, he said. Because East Stadium has recurring problems with flood water during heavy rains, Gallagher said precautions had been taken in the area.

'We have anticipated being able to handle a foot of water without seriously damaging the equipment. Anything permanent in there is one foot above the floor," he said.

"We have all of the space (formerly allocated to the speech department) except for the three classrooms," said Gallagher. One large room has been assigned for the use of Southwestern Bell Telephone employees, who are currently installing the principal communication lines on the campus, he said.

Computing Activities took over Telecommunications from University Facilities in October 1985, he

"There was a realization that telephone service was very much computer-driven, so it made sense to have the technical installation and supervision directly associated with computing. It's quite similar to computing systems," Gallagher said. The location of Telecommunications Services at East Stadium isn't planned to be long term, although they may be there for three years, said Helen Cooper, space analyst in Facilities Plann-

"Long-term plans are being developed which may consolidate all computing and telecommunications activities into one location," Cooper said.

Presently, sections of Computing Activities are located in Cardwell Hall, Anderson Hall and Farrell Library.

"It's generally recognized that a dispersed operation has a lack of economy," said Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning.

Van Zile Hall is one location being considered for the computer consolidation, Garvin said.

National, local dealers report lower gas prices

From staff and wire reports

LOS ANGELES - Self-service gasoline prices fell an average 4.2 cents over the past two weeks, and the decline will continue thanks to confusion in OPEC and large supplies of crude oil, an industry expert

The average price for all grades of self-service gasoline went from 89.75 cents a gallon two weeks ago to 84.49 cents a gallon, said Dan Lundberg, publisher of a survey of gasoline prices.

The decline in prices is also apparent in Manhattan. A clerk at the Mini-Mart Convenience Store, 2706 Anderson Ave., said the average price for gas has dropped nearly a penny a day in the last few days. The price for regular leaded gasoline at the store is now 68.9 cents a gallon.

Gas prices at Frank's 66, 1629 Poyntz Ave., have dropped 5 cents in the last week, said a clerk at the station. Unleaded is 75 cents a gallon and regular is 74 cents a gallon.

Professor to become top official

By The Collegian Staff

Associate Professor of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science, James Goddard, has been elected vice president and president-elect of the Associated Schools of Construction.

ASC is a national organization of construction management programs that works closely with other professional and trade organizations. After being founded 21 years ago, the organization primarily works with the American Institute of Constructors.

"It's the primary sponsor of accreditation for college and university construction programs nationwide," Goddard said.

At the organization's annual meeting last spring, Goddard was elected to the two-year

"On July 1, I will take over the office of vice president. My term as president will begin July 1, 1987," Goddard said. "Being elected to two-year terms simply makes the transition smoother."

As head of the organization, Goddard will attend meetings of other professional organizations as an official ASC representative.

"I will automatically gain a position on the Board of Directors of the American Council for Construction Education, the accrediting organization for construction programs,"

Southwestern Bell customers to receive $32 million refund

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Kansas Corporation Commission approved a $32.3 million refund Wednesday for customers of Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. as a result of a U.S. Supreme Court ruling on rates telephone companies may charge for depreciation.

Steve Menaugh, a spokesman for the KCC, said the refund would affect 800,000 of Southwestern Bell's residential and business customers in Kansas. Customers should receive credits on their phone bills starting in September but Menaugh said it was not immediately known how much the average refund might be.

The refund stems from a Supreme Court ruling May 27 which held that the Federal Communications Commission may not force states to use depreciation formulas the FCC had prescribed for telephone equipment and facilities used for service inside each state.

As a result of the FCC depreciation formula, Southwestern Bell has overcharged Kansas customers about $27.8 million since April 18, 1983, Menaugh said. Under the refund the KCC approved Wednesday, the company also will be required to pay its customers about $4.5 million in in-

The KCC, which regulates utilities one companies in the and telep state, joined several other state utility regulatory commissions in challenging the FCC depreciation formulas.

The FCC formulas are designed to promote modernization by allowing phone companies to more rapidly recover the cost of new plants and equipment, Menaugh said.

The refund plan calls for spreading credits to customers over three areas - basic telephone service, long distance access charges and intrastate long distance service although Menaugh said the amounts have yet to be assigned to each category.

Menaugh said the $32.3 million refund will cover the period from April 1983 to June 30, 1986. Because the higher depreciation rates still are in effect, the KCC plans to conduct hearings to determine what to do about overcharges that accrue until Southwestern Bell's new depreciation rates are implemented, he said. Under the plan, customers will receive a one-time credit against their basic monthly telephone service charge on bills they receive in September, Menaugh said.

Because different basic rates apply to customers in different parts of the state, the amount of the refund on basic service will vary although the same percentage will uniformly applied, he said.

Long distance companies that pay for access to Bell's local networks also will receive a one-time refund on

Oct. 1, according to the plan. Menaugh said he believes the long distance companies will be under no obligation to pass the refund along to their customers.

Southwestern Bell customers also will receive a percentage refund for intrastate long distance calls between the three Local Access and Transport Areas, which generally follow the boundaries of the two area codes except for the third LATA in the Kansas City metropolitan area.

The intrastate long distance refunds will not be based on calls made from 1983 to 1986, Menaugh said. Instead, the refunds will be computed from calls made during September, October, November and December, he said.

The KCC has been fighting the FCC's depreciation schedules since a ruling in January 1983 said state regulatory commissions could not use accounting and depreciation procedures other than those established at the federal level.

A reward is being offered for the return of the dog.

Youth theatre presents 'Oz'

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Arts and Entertainment Editor

More than 100 Manhattan area children and young adults will fill the stage in City Park this weekend with singing and dancing as Arts in the Park presents the Children's Theatre Production of "The Wizard of Oz."

The youth were selected from 250 who tried out, said Mary Nichols, head of the play's parent coordinating committee and instructor of speech. While the main characters are filled by high school students or 1986 high school graduates, many of the cast members are much younger, including a 3-year-old.

The production will be presented at 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Pat Foltz of Wamego is the stage director and Connaitre Miller, graduate in music, is the vocal director. Don Cukjati, coordinator of Arts in the Park, is the producer.

The character of Dorothy will be played by two people. Carrie Palmer, a 1986 graduate of Manhattan High School, will play Dorothy two nights with Rachel Wallace, a Manhattan High freshman, filling the role for one performance.

The Tinman will be played by Tom Hanson, a 1986 MHS graduate. Rod Hoover, a student at St. George High School, will be the Scarecrow and Valerie Bracken, also a 1986 MHS grad, will play the Cowardly Lion. Jon Hacker, MHS '86 grad, will be the Wizard of Oz.

Nichols said the paid stage crew includes K-State students, many of whom are members of the K-State Players. The crew has designed an intricate stage and lighting system compared to most Arts in the Park performances, she said.

"It's really a neat set," Nichols said. "They have a revolving bridge on stage....For Arts in the Park, it's really a complex set."

Many of the older members of the cast have spent this week sleeping overnight in the park to protect the set from vandalism, Nichols said.

The play, a classic by L. Frank Baum, is a part of Kansas' 125th birthday celebration. Baum's "Wizard of Oz" was adapted by Frank Gabrielson with music and lyrics of the screen version written by Harold Arlen and E.Y. Har-

Funding for the summer production was provided by the Kansas Arts Commission, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Manhattan Arts Council, Nichols said. Additional contributions were provided by the Little Apple Pilot Club, McCall's Pattern Co., and the Manhattan Optimist Club.

Tickets for the performances are $2 for adults and $1 for children. Senior citizens and handicapped individuals may attend tonight's dress rehearsal free of charge, Nichols said.

Official to assess repair costs

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

In order to assess repairs needed on campus, Board of Regents Architect Warren Corman will visit K-State Monday.

'This is the first time we've done a study of streets and grounds on campus. Basically, I'll be looking at everything that isn't part of an academic building to see what repairs are needed," Corman said. This includes all building systems, grounds, utility lines, retaining walls, steps and sidewalks, he said.

Also, all gas, water, sewer and steam tunnels will be studied. This is part of a systemwide study he is conducting on the seven Regents institutions and the University of Kansas Medical Center.

In preparation for Corman's visit, University Facilities staff completed a total evaluation of all building systems, said director Fred Ferguson.

"We used our findings in estimating the maintenance cost to update the facilities to optimum condition," Ferguson said. Corman will judge these cost estimates in relation to the other Regents schools for a coordinated review to be presented to the Regents.

"After visiting all eight schools, I will have the figures ready by August or early September to make a report to the board," Corman said.

Corman has already visited the campuses of Fort Hays State University and Pittsburg State University and estimated their repair needs in "millions of dollars."

"From seeing these two schools, I predict the total repair costs of all eight universities to be around $100 million," Corman said.

Corman will draft a composite report of his findings in August to be distributed to each of the schools in the Regents system. The report will be presented to the Regents for their approval at their next meeting in September, he said.

Following approval by the Regents, the report will be presented to the Legislature's Committee for Building Construction at its October meeting. This six-member joint committee consists of three senators and three representatives. After reviewing the report, the committee will make recommendations to the Ways and Means Committees of both the House and Senate for appropriate

A related study conducted in November 1984 found $143 million would be needed to restore the academic buildings of Regents schools to "satisfactory condition," Corman said. This systemwide study found that two-thirds of the academic buildings were 15 years old or older, Corman said.

"Buildings this old need more maintenance now than the new ones," Corman said. "This study did not include residence halls and student unions because these buildings are basically self-sustaining." An additional $66 million would be required to make repairs on these buildings if they had been included in the study, Corman said.

Civic theatre searches for facility

By STACEY DARRELL Collegian Reporter

For the Manhattan Civic Theatre, there's no place like home. Where home is, though, is still a mystery.

A temporary home for the last six years has been the basement of City Auditorium, 12th Street and Poyntz Avenue, said Stephe Riggs, president of the Manhattan Civic Theatre board.

"The (auditorium) basement holds an audience of 100 and is somewhat limiting," Riggs said. "I think it would be best if we could get out fairly soon. We have renewed our lease for the basement for one year because there is no place to go."

The civic theater has been looking for a larger, permanent facility for 21 years and is still looking. The group is trying to become a more active and progressive theater, but it is difficult with the available facilities, Riggs said.

When MCC began in 1965, the organization was located in the Community House, Fourth and Humboldt streets, said Margo Fick, a past board member.

"We have moved five times since," Fick said.

Fick said MCT left the Community House when the organization got the chance to move into the Elk's Club, 423 Houston St. The new location offered more privacy, convenience and space, she said.

"Our best location was the Elk's Club," Fick said. "Every show was a sellout. But we signed a three-year lease, and when it was up we had to

Tampering threatens investments

The recent threatened tampering of Jell-O dry-mix dessert, lemon-lime Slice soft drink and Aquafresh toothpaste gives Americans ample evidence to question the sanity of a few individuals.

Of course, poisoning of products is not new. Two major incidents involving cyanide-laced Tylenol products and another with Excedrin have occurred within the last two years. While the deaths related to these incidents are tragic, there are long-term consequences for the rest of America as well.

Companies that have to pull products from shelves stand to lose much income from lost sales. Often these companies, like Johnson & Johnson and Bristol Meyers, spend millions of dollars changing the product and its package to be less susceptible to tampering.

This leads to almost certain losses for people who invest in these companies' stocks. The losses involve more people than is immediately apparent. Many funds, especially pension funds, are heavily invested in the stocks of drug and other consumer item companies. When these companies lose money the dependability of pension funds is threatened.

Americans should consider all of the factors when looking for a dependable pension fund. One sick apple could spoil the golden years of many individuals if a solution to the product tampering cannot be found immediately.

Smoking as a dieting technique?

In the world of advertising, targeting the most profitable market is the name of the game. And learning how to win at that game is making tobacco companies a kill.

Last week the federal government released a report which charged tobacco companies of taunting women with cigarette advertisements. Of course they do because it works.

A survey in the July issue of Psychology Today tallied quite a few points for cigarette advertisers. While fewer people are taking up smoking, it seems a significant number of women have conceded a new reason for starting.

Fat. Close to 20 percent of the women surveyed said they began smoking to help them lose weight.

"So," you say, "some people will try anything." True, but why do we encourage those attempts? It's not a problem of education. Those people know smoking is harmful and may lead to their death. You see, we have created a world where it's more important to look good now - even if that means you pay dearly later.

We reinforce irrational dieting tactics by keeping appearance at the top of our expectations list. We see so many "beautiful" people in magazines and on television we have begun to demand their presence in reality - as if that could, or even should, be possible.

We must eliminate the "that's their problem" attitude and do what we can to allow each other to be satisfied with who we are and what we look like.

We should convince each other it's better to exercise and follow nutritionally balanced diets than to get instant results.

We need to re-evaluate the import of a good sense of humor, sensitivity and humility - qualities which don't necessarily come wrapped in the most enticing packages.

The good stuff on the inside is worth more happiness in the long run, plus it makes the unwrapping more fun.

Sikhs tortured for religious beliefs

The Indian government, which calls itself a democracy, is stifling religious freedom and is attempting to wipe out an entire race of people. The government of India has purposely misrepresented the conflict with people of the Sikh religion to justify the genocide which is being perpetrated.

Sikh patriotism and national contribution have been unmatched by any other group of people in India. Despite the fact that Sikhs comprise only two percent of India's population, the predominately Sikh state of Punjab produces more than 50 percent of the nation's food supply.

The most important stride that the nation has made since freedom from the British has been the "Green Revolution" which has been a Sikh contribution from the state of Punjab in which government contribution has been less than one percent of the national budget. Despite the productivity of Punjab (a predominately Sikh state) it receives less of the river-water supply than any other state in India.

Government violence has been increasing systematically leading up to the invasion of the Golden Temple and the massacre of innocent tourists and thousands of Sikhs including women and children. The imprisonment and torture of thousands of people and the denial of civil liberties have been the result of military occupation in the state of Punjab since the assault on the Golden Tem-

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's assassination gave the rulers of India and the unruly mobs working on the government's behalf an excuse to kill and burn everything and everyone connected with the Sikh faith. Governmental propaganda has designated all confirmed Sikhs as terrorists, including women and children of all ages. After Gandhi's assassination, government sponsored mobs brutally burned alive thousands of Sikhs by pouring gasoline over their heads and setting them on fire as police watched.

AJIT MAAN Guest Columnist

Sikhs have historically been considered protectors of the weak and fighters for freedom of religion, but have now been labeled "terrorists by faith."

There are a small number of extremists who, as a result of government corruption, subscribe to the idea of a separate Sikh state. These people had not been taken seriously by anyone but the government which used the existence of a small group of extremists as an opportunity to label all Sikhs as terrorists. Since operation Blue Star (the invasion of the Golden Temple) and the subsequent military occupation of Punjab, larger numbers of people are subscribing to the goal of a separate Sikh state for no other reason than to allow their children to live and worship freely. The threat of national disunity is a result of governmental terrorism against Sikhs, not the other way around.

The Indian army destroyed most of the structure of the Golden Temple, set fire to the reference library, destroyed sacred artifacts and killed thousands of innocent people. The day that was chosen for the attack was a holy day during which tourism is at its highest

The Golden Temple is a symbol of three centuries of sacrifices, martyrdoms, blood, sweat, hopes and labor for the love of God. It is to the Sikhs what the Vatican is to Catholics, what Mecca is to Muslims and what the Wailing Wall is to Jews.

Since the attack, thousands have been killed in "encounters" with police. Amnesty International has declared these encounters to be fake. One report cited that more than 1,000 men have been tortured to death at the hands of the police. The government has done its best to keep this information from reaching the rest of the world. Photographers and cameramen in India during the time of Operation Blue Star had their film confiscated. Reporters from outside were not allowed in the country and humanitarian organizations were denied access. The government also denid visas to concerned U.S congressmen and members of the British Parliament.

The Christian Science Monitor published an article by Anne Weaver on Oct. 15, 1984, which described the situation in Punjab, "The army moves in during the early evening, cordons a village, and announces over loudspeakers everyone must come out. All males between the ages of 15 and 35 are trussed and blindfolded, then taken away. Thousands have disappeared in Punjab since the army operation began.

Children as young as two years old have been held and subjected to torture under the guise of being "militant terrorists." According to the magazine, India Today, "the lofty laws protecting and respecting the child have all been violated."

I fail to see how Sikhs are harming anyone except a corrupt government which is attempting to eliminate opposition, in the name of democracy. Sikhs have historically been defenders of the weak, nonbelievers in the cast system; protectors of freedom of faith, fighters of oppression and bearers of the highest standards of courage and morali-

The same people who have been the suppliers of food and the strength of the country are now being destroyed on the basis of religious preference. Sikhs may never again know civil liberties or even basic human rights.

Kansas to offer Olympic-style competition

TOPEKA - Kansans will compete for gold, silver and bronze medals next year during the first Kansas Games, an Olympic-style competition which Gov. John Carlin and state athletic officials said Wednesday they hope will become an annual

Using the Capitol rotunda as a backdrop, Carlin announced that the first Kansas Games have been scheduled for July 10-12, 1987 at various sites around Topeka. 'We now join 31 other states that offer such a competition for their citizens annually," Carlin said. "This ... will allow participants and spectators alike to experience the excitement and pageantry of a multi-sport event." Hank Miller, a key organizer of the games, said a group of 50 to 60 people already has been working for about 10 months to organize the games, which will include competition in at least 14 different sports. Miller, who also is director of travel development for the Topeka Convention and

Visitors Bureau, said the event will be administered by a non-profit organization called Kansas Games Inc. in conjunction with the Governor's Council on Fitness. Carlin said he hopes the games will become "a long-standing tradition in Kansas." The governor said plans call for the games to be paid for through donations from individuals and businesses. Miller said officials have planned a $100,000 budget for the

The first year games will include competition in archery, bowling, diving, gymnastics, horseshoes, judo, raquetball, shooting, swimming, track and field, volksmarch and wrestling, the officials said. Team competition will be offered in softball and soccer. Each event will include separate divisions for various age groups and skill levels.

Soviet's five-year plan includes reactors

GENEVA — Several explosions equal to detonating one ton of TNT tore through a nuclear reactor during the disaster at the Chernobyl power plant, a Soviet nuclear expert said today.

The statement by Col. Arlen Kuznetsov expanded on previous Soviet reports, which said there was one explosion and a resulting fire at the plant in the Soviet Ukraine. The April 26 accident released radiation into the air that stretched worldwide. The Soviets said in early June that 26 people died. Kuznetsov said the investigation of the accident has determined there was a sudden and drastic rise in the reactor's power output and a chemical reaction involving steam inside the reactor, followed by a number of small explosions. Despite the explosions, windowpanes stayed intact in nearby buildings, said Kuznetsov, a doctor of technical sciences and member of the Soviet military's general staff. Kuznetsov is also part of the Soviet delegation to the 40-nation Geneva Conference on Disarmament, which is now in its summer session.

A government commission will present its findings on Chernobyl to the Viennabased International Atomic Energy Agency no later than Aug. 22, he told a news

He noted Moscow's current five-year plan still calls for building more nuclear power plants like those at the Chernobyl facility. Construction plans may be changed, however, after the commission releases its findings, he said.

Foundation recognizes American ecologist

TOKYO - The Inamori Foundation of Japan will award $285,000 each to an American ecologist, a Japanese-American sculptor and a French biologist, foundation officials said Wednesday.

Professor George E. Hutchinson, 83, of Yale University will receive an award for his ecological studies, and Dr. Isamu Noguchi, 81, a sculptor noted for his garden designs, will be honored for his contributions to the arts.

Professor Nicole M. Le Douarin, 56, of the French Science Promotion Organization's Institute of Embryology, will receive a prize for her inventions to aid the study of nervous systems in higher animals. The ceremony is scheduled for Nov. 11 in Kyoto, with the winners giving lectures on their research topics. The Inamori Foundation, established two years ago by industrialist Kazuo Inamori, gives annual awards to achievers in advanced technology, basic sciences and creative arts.

Insects gain nightly reprieve from zappers

JOLIET, Ill. - Bugs in Joliet are now safe from electrocution between midnight and 6 a.m.

Operating a bug light during those hours is now an offense, and those found guilty can be fined up to $500. The City Council on Tuesday approved an ordinance making the operation of electrical devices that make an audible sound and are used for killing insects outdoors between midnight and 6 a.m. illegal. The action came after complaints from residents.

FBI identifies Jewish extremists in bombing

WASHINGTON - The FBI has identified Jewish extremist suspects in the bombing death of Alex Odeh, a prominent Arab-American, and has linked his killing in California to two other acts of domestic terrorism last year, an official said Wednes-

Oliver Revell, the FBI's executive assistant director, said no arrests have been made in the three cases because of the difficulty in obtaining evidence that will stand up in court.

"We need a single break," he told the House Judiciary subcommittee on criminal justice, which held a hearing to examine possible discrimination against Arab-

Revell identified the three connected cases as the Odeh killing last Oct. 11, 1985 near Los Angeles; the Sept. 6 bombing of a house in Brentwood, N.Y., in which one person was injured; and the Aug. 15 bombing of a house in Paterson, N.J., which left a man dead.

The Brentwood house belonged to Elmars Sprogis, who the FBI said was "purportedly responsible for guarding Jews" at a Nazi concentration camp during World War II. All charges against Sprogis were dismissed at a deportation hearing, the FBI said.

Builders scrap kitchen in Statehouse plans

BOSTON - The wife of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis is steamed that planners of a $28 million Statehouse renovation dropped plans to construct a full kit-

Kitty Dukakis, a member of a committee advising planners on renovations, said "That's just crazy," Tuesday after learning of a revision of 2-year-old plans calling for a full kitchen to accompany a new interior courtyard at the Statehouse. Dukakis told The Boston Globe on Wednesday that would mean caterers would still be needed when dinners were served. Planners will reconsider building the kitchen, Secretary of Administration and Finance Frank Keefe said Wednesday, because of Dukakis' complaint. Massachusetts is one of a few states without an executive mansion. Its governors, usually residents of Boston or its nearby suburbs, have lived at home or taken apartments in the city. The Dukakises live in Brookline, an immediate suburb of Boston.

Royals face familiar scenario of having backs against wall

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The cheery greeting of the switchboard operator had more to do with recent history than current events:

"World champion Royals." Sure enough, phones have stayed busy at the stadium in western Missouri that flies the 1985 World Series flag. But the gritty, grimy reality is that the world champs played a miserable first half.

A 5-0 loss to Detroit's Jack Morris on Sunday sent them into the All-Star break with a 40-48 record, the worst since the infancy of the franchise in 1970 and their third-worst ever.

In their drive to defend their championship, the Royals start the second half Thursday in fourth place in the American League West, 81/2 games behind California, 7 behind Texas and one in arrears of the Chicago White Sox.

The collapse has been total, taking in hitting, pitching, fielding and, in large measure, self-confidence. The punch-and-Judy offense surprises no one. A year ago the Royals had the 13th-best attack in the 14-team league, but were elevated to the heights by a powerful pitching staff that included Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen's 20-6

Kansas Citians hoped this would be the year the hitting made strides toward the level of the pitching. And the two have come together. But not the way Kansas Citians hoped.

It all dovetailed late June-early

July into a team-record 11-game losing streak. On a road swing to Minnesota, Seattle and Cleveland, the world champion Royals went 0-9. They came home and dropped two more to Baltimore before rookie pitcher Scott Bankhead relieved the pain with a 3-0 shutout of the Orioles.

Still, nobody is giving up. The Royals, after all, were 71/2 games back at the 1985 All-Star break and have long been a notorious secondhalf club.

"We can still get this thing done. I'm sure we can," Manager Dick Howser said before leaving for Houston to boss the American League All-Stars. Part of the problem has been a shoulder injury to George Brett, their main offensive weapon, and a knee injury to outfielder Rudy Law.

Brett, who has not had a typical season and was batting .291 when he got hurt, may be back when the Royals open the second half with a home stand against the Indians. Law may be out another 2-3 weeks.

"We've got to get George healthy, get Rudy healthy, and get our pitching back to where it should be good," Howser said.

Saberhagen goes into the second half of the season with a 4-10 mark and an earned run average of 4.39. He got no decision in his last outing following a public reprimand from Howser about too many outside interests. But he pitched better.

"Our pitching has to be good. We can't afford to be major league average," Howser said. "We've got to be better."

Saberhagen is not the only culprit, of course. Mark Gubicza and Bud Black, former starters, have pitched themselves into the bullpen. Danny Jackson is 5-6 with a 3.97 ERA.

Dennis Leonard, coming back from a three-year bout with knee surgery rehabilitation, was almost unbeatable in April. But he has leveled off to 6-8 and a 4.08 era.

Charlie Leibrandt, 9-6, is the only starter over .500. On the bright side has been the emergence of reliever Steve Farr, 6-1 with four saves and a 2.24 era. The staff ERA, in fact, is a respectable 3.92.

'We've got to get our pitching back to where it was the second half of the season last year," Howser

But how?

"Just get them going. I'm not sure how you do it. Saberhagen, I've called him down a little bit. Leibrandt, I've stayed with him. You just have to be able to live with it. I'm not going to get in a position with these guys where I get upset with them. They're too good. These guys have been so good for so long, I think a lot of us forget that.

"Except last winter, they've never really had a winter off. And I don't find fault with them. We just need to take the break and get this thing going again.

"Some how, we're going to have to get this thing going again."

Without question, it just wouldn't sound the same to call the stadium and hear, "Fourth-place Royals."

drug testing programs in place. And a fourth - Fort Hays State University - also tests athletes in its programs for drug use.

Lynn Bott, director of sports medicine for KU, said former head football coach Mike Gottfried initiated that school's drug testing program in the spring of 1984.

The KU program involves random testing of every athlete, male and female, in every sport each year. If an athlete tests positive for drugs, the coach and athletic director are informed and the athlete is enrolled in a counseling and rehabilitation program.

If the athlete continues to test positive for drugs, it can result in temporary or permanent suspension from competition and a loss of scholarship.

"It's just a sign of the times," Bott said. "Everybody is concerned and although we don't think we have a problem here, we didn't want to stick our heads in the sand either.'

Hank Fijalkowski, assistant trainer at Kansas State, said the school has conducted drug testing of all athletes, four times year on a random basis, for two years. Although no athlete has ever been disciplined for drug use at K-State, Fijalkowski said the potential penalties exist.

Dan Beebe, WSU assistant athletic director, said a comprehensive drug testing policy is to be implemented this fall, replacing a less formal random testing program that has existed recently.

"If they test dirty, they will be placed in a counseling and education program," Beebe said. "If they test dirty a second time, they can be suspended and after a third time, they will be dismissed from the program and their scholarship remov-

Bob Van Poppel, athletic director at Fort Hays State, said his coaches have conducted drug testing on a random basis for three years. Usually, testing takes place when someone's academic or athletic performance changes drastically. However, Van Poppel echoed the sentiments of other small schools in saying he could not afford to test every athlete regularly and if such a program is mandated, he said the Legislature will have to provide funds to pay for it. "The idea is good, and if the Legislature appropriates state funds then that's super," he said.

David Suenram, Pittsburg State University athletic director, and his counterpart at Emporia State University, Bill Quayle, said they try to educate their athletes of dangers of drugs.

Revitalization of downtown will be taped

By SHEILA HUTINETT Collegian Reporter

Many communities in the United States may benefit from watching a videotape of the Manhattan redevelopement.

Bernd Foerster, professor of predesign professions and the chairman of the former Downtown Redevelopment Advisory Board, said many different audiences may learn from Manhattan's experiences. These audiences include communities seeking downtown revitalization, involved in preservation, concerned with new construction in historic settings and those interested in the urban design

The Manhattan Revitalization Video Project is a collaboration between the Manhattan Arts Council and the University to create a video production telling the story of construction of a mall shopping center in the central business district of the community.

The objective of the videotape is to deal with ideas and concepts, Foerster said, and simultaneously provide a visual record of development, encourage civic pride and supply useful information to other com-

According to information from the Manhattan Arts Council, the topics to be covered include revitalization of the central business district, relating the new construction to the existing surroundings, incorporating historically significant structures into the new mall, and dealing with a variety of economic, social and aesthetic issues.

The project may cost $90,000, Foerster said. A $40,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts has been applied for, but the results will not be known until November. The remaining $50,000 will come from local sources.

Foerster called the videotape a "healing document."

He said the video "will fairly show the pros and cons (of redevelopment."

The central theme of the videotape will be retaining the downtown as the focus for the community, Foerster said. It will describe the rationale for constructing a mall in the central business district, summarize the objections raised and subsequent deci-

Senator alters view on use of sanctions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - When pressures mounted on Capitol Hill to impose stiff economic sanctions against South Africa last year, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas was a voice of moderation who helped shape a compromise with President Reagan.

Now Kassebaum, the chairman of the Foreign Relations subcommittee on African Affairs, is talking tougher.

In fact, she's dropped her opposition to economic sanctions and introduced her own proposal that would prohibit new investment and banks loans to South Africa.

"I felt it was important for us to really focus our attention on stronger policy in relationship to South Africa and our willingness to help if they were willing to risk bolder action," Kassebaum said in a recent inter-

Growing violence among blacks and whites in the racially divided nation, she said, caused her change of mind.

The Foreign Relations Committee opens hearings July 22 on South Africa, and Kassebaum said she expects the panel to endorse some type of sanctions legislation.

But there is no doubt it will be less far-reaching that a House bill passed in June requiring the withdrawl of all U.S. firms operating in South Africa. It was the first time a disinvestment proposal had passed either chamber of Congress.

"My guess is there would be fairly good support for an effort such as mine just to limit new investment and new bank loans," she said. "I would make a fairly firm prediction that it won't be the House bill. It's going to be a more modified approach."

Kassebaum's shift in position on South Africa is viewed on Capitol Hill as another signal that the Republican-controlled Senate has become so frustrated with President Reagan's quiet diplomacy policy of "constructive engagement" that members are ready to abandon it.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., warned White House officials last week that South Africa is "a matter of growing concern in the Congress" and said he hoped the ad-

KBI, police investigate surplus equipment use in forestry department

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

Campus police and Kansas Bureau of Investigation authorities have been conducting an investigation of equipment usage within the K-State Department of Forestry, University officials confirmed Friday.

Jay Schultz, head of the forestry department, said the investigation, which concerns the unauthorized use of surplus government equipment, began June 10.

"The investigation was initiated as part of an on-going administrative project review," Schultz said. The K-State forestry department serves as the state forestry agency and the state forestry extension department. The equipment is to be used to assist rural fire districts throughout the state.

Schultz said as the state forestry agency, the department has 329 cooperative agreements with more than 500 separate fire protection

Schultz said the department issues the government-surplus equipment to the districts and takes the equipment back when it is no longer need-

Schultz said he was not entirely sure what type of equipment was involved, but explained the equipment concerned in the investigation is, "all types of excess military property required by the state forestry agency and is issued to rural fire departments."

Schultz said he could not comment on what he believed to be the nature of the misuse of equipment.

Cy Wainscott, managing editor for the Office of University Relations, said he was reluctant to speculate on the investigation because it is still going on; however, he said he believed one concern was probably that individuals were using the equipment for personal use.

According to an article in Saturday's Topeka Capitol-Journal, Wainscott said, "There certainly is reason to believe it was not just personal use. Some equipment may have been passed on to third parties.

"It hasn't been determined how much equipment is being diverted...there is a lot of paper work involved," Wainscott said.

However, Wainscott did say authorities believe there is a substantial amount of equipment involved.

According to the Capitol-Journal article, Wainscott said, "This means shovels, ladders, other items. There is at least reason to believe some vehicles were involved. Authorities refuse to confirm whether faculty members may have been involved and no charges have been filed. Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy and KBI officials have also refused to comment on the case, or to confirm the nature of the investiga-

"Basically we're looking at the possibility of misappropriation or misuse of federal GSA (General Services Administration) or surplus property," said KSU Police Department Chief Charles Beckom according to The Manhattan Mercury Sunday.

By The Collegian Staff

The Convocation Lecture Series speakers for the 1986-87 school year, including three Pulitzer Prize winners, were announced last week.

Eugene Kremer, chairman of the Convocations Committee, said all five speakers have confirmed they will participate in the series.

The first speaker in the fall, George Carrier, National Academy of Science medalist, will speak on Thursday, Sept. 11. The subject will be "Nuclear Winter: Atmospheric Effects of a Major Nuclear Exchange.

South African poet Dennis Brutus will speak on Tuesday, Oct. 14. The subject of his talk will be "South Africa in Turmoil."

Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist Jules Feifer will speak on Wednesday, Nov. 19. The title of his speech is "The Political Cartoonist and the

J. Anthony Lukas, Pulitzer Prizewinning author, will speak on Thursday, Feb. 19. The title of the speech is "In Search of Common Ground: Race and Class in America.

Bolivian-U.S. drug raids fail

By The Associated Press

TRINIDAD, Bolivia - Federal narcotics police and U.S. support troops bolstered themselves on Sunday, but bad weather kept them from any further raids on suspected cocaine-processing centers in Bolivia's steamy northeast.

The combined anti-drug strike force is trying to recoup from three straight failures.

The American-piloted U.S. Army Black Hawk helicopters that transported Bolivian forces in raids the two previous days were grounded when low dense rainclouds moved in over the Beni, the tropical flatlands where most of the drug labs are concentrated.

Subsecretary of Information Irving Alcaraz told reporters that Sunday's operations were limited to two early morning reconnaissance

According to a police source, 200 more members of the elite U.S.-trained and U.S.-financed police unit known as the Leopards were en route to Trinidad, 260 miles northeast of La Paz in the heart of the operational area.

They were to augment a force of 72 Leopards already taking part in the unprecedented operation, said the source, who spoke on condition he not be identified. He said earlier reports that 120 Leopards were involved in earlier raids were exaggerated.

The additional 200 Leopards were coming from the city of Cochabamba, southeast of La Paz in the Chapare region, where other actions against cocaine processors were under way without U.S. military assistance. A U.S. Air Force Hercules C-130 transport plane was seen arriving Sunday at the Trinidad airport, but no information emerged on what it carried. It was one of two C-130s that arrived in La Paz late Saturday from the U.S. Southern Command in Panama, according to Bolivian sources, who also demanded anonymity.

About 160 U.S. pilots, aircraft maintenance personnel and other soldiers arrived from Panama beginning last Monday to provide logistical and communications support to the Leopards. They brought six Black Hawks Aid is also being provided by 15 U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents. The DEA has provided two planes for reconnaissance.

Four Black Hawks could be seen parked Sunday at the Trinidad airport in a restricted area where some U.S. servicemen were bivouacked in eight large tents.

One of the four was apparently under repair, surrounded by a scaffold and maintenance workers.

The Beni's jungle and grasslands are believed to contain dozens of clandestine cocaine-processing centers hidden among the region's legitimate cattle ranches and farming plantations.

The joint forces have carried out four raids to date. Only the first, on Friday, was successful, resulting in seizure of an extensive processing center, a small airplane, chemicals used in refining cocaine, and one suspect. Later Friday, the joint forces went range of issues, Kremer said.

up in two helicopters but could not find the suspected lab. On Saturday, two expeditions landed at suspected processing centers only to find they were innocent ran-

Interior Ministry spokesman Orlando Viscarrea said Sunday it was too early to judge the joint operation's effects. "It is difficult to know if the operation has been successful," he said in Trinidad. "It is too early to tell."

The raids have been staged from the Josuani Ranch, a spread where Bolivian forces shut down an extensive drug lab last year. It is about 140 miles northwest of Trinidad. The operation is designed to cripple Bolivia's cocaine industry, which according to various estimates brings in between $600 million and $2 billion a year. Officials hope destruction of the labs will discourage coca leaf growers, whose ranks have at least doubled in the last year.

Students' needs important, candidate says

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

Stressing the importance of marketing, Richard Lancaster, one of three finalists for the position of vice president for institutional advancement, spoke at an open forum

Friday morning in Union 212. Lancaster, who is vice president for development and college relations at Earlham College in Richmond, Ind., said the key concept behind the new vice presidency at K-State is a concern for marketing the University effectively. 'We need to be more conscious of the customer," Lancaster said about K-State students. Studies show the reasons students drop out of college are: lines that are too long, a feeling that no one listened to their concerns, poor food service, noisy and crowded housing conditions, class scheduling problems, and inability to get into popular classes, he said.

"These are all things we can be sensitive to. I think we need to pick apart the students' - the consumers' - needs. We need to develop some effective strategies to meet student needs and respond to them even before they come and

He also said that many things need to be realized. K-State needs to know what competition it faces, what the prospective student knows about the University and what the target market is.

"In some ways we need to be very single-minded about our determination to market K-State better. It isn't going to come without a price though," he said.

Lancaster added that although it would be a tough job, he sees a lot of opportunity at K-State.

"I would be discouraged if all I after they are here," Lancaster saw was a burned-over field - that you had done everything and you still weren't able to change the trends here. I don't see that at all. I don't mean you haven't done fine things or you don't have fine people. But I see a lot of opportunity for better coordination and for additional incentives. It's going to take some money. It's going to take some people. But the payoffs will be worth it," he said.

K-State is going to have to change in order to attract and hold students, Lancaster said. He said he wasn't suggesting K-State change into a warm, fuzzy place that had no academic rigor. But students need a caring community that helps to facilitate students at a difficult time in life and also helps them to make a maturing adjustment.

When asked if he thought he could make a successful transition from a small college to a major university Lancaster said he didn't see any problems. "First of all, I don't think I would be dealing with that many more people on a personal daily basis. And I don't think I would come if I didn't feel I could bring to this University something that you don't already have here. I think I could bring a new energy and enthusiasm," he said.

Lancaster graduated with a bachelor's degree from Wayne State College in Detroit. From there he went to Florida State University in Tallahassee where he earned a master's in philosophy and anthropology. He then received his doctorate in higher education at the University of Michigan at Ann Ar-

Fair officials announce week's schedule

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

Although the final grandstand act wasn't booked until early this month, officials of the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson boast that this year's entertainment will have something

Ten evenings of entertainment, beginning Friday, Sept. 6, and concluding Sunday, Sept. 14, highlight the fair. The Fair Boards' Entertainment Committee has announced that single shows will begin at 7:30 p.m. while showtime will be 5:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. for nights featuring two shows

Sept. 5 is Preview Day of the state fair with John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band. The group is most famous for its role in the soundtrack of the movie "Eddie and the Cruisers," the story of a fictional rock group playing '50s-influenced rock 'n' roll.

The Oak Ridge Boys will perform two shows Sept. 6. The quartet gained national recognition as a top country/rock act with the release of 'Y'All Come Back Saloon" in 1977. The group's opening act will be Exile, a band that first became known for its popular category music, changing later to country-western Merle Haggard and Brenda Lee will take the stage for one show Sept. 7. Haggard has had more than 50 songs on the country charts during the 23 years since his first hit, "Sing a Sad Song," was released in 1963.

Beginning her singing career at the age of 11, Brenda Lee's record sales have topped $100 million.

The rock group Survivor originally had been scheduled to appear Sept. 7, but representatives for the group notified the fair that the group's tour had been cancelled.

Country music star Willie Nelson will give his fourth Kansas State Fair performance Sept. 8. In 1982, the grandstand was sold out for his show, the first sellout in the fair's history, according to fair officials.

Mr. Mister, a rock group formed three years ago, will perform Sept. 9. The group's opening act is to be announced at a later date.

The State Fair Truck and Tractor Pull will be at 1 and 7 p.m. Sept. 10. The Statler Brothers will be performing in the grandstand for a single show Sept. 11. The quartet, longtime 'Entertainers of the Year' in 1985 by the Music City News. Tammy Wynette, with opening act favorites of the fair, was voted

Michael Martin Murphey, will present two shows Sept. 12. Wynette has been named Country Music Association's "Female Vocalist of the Year" for three consecutive years.

Comedian Red Skelton is scheduled to appear for one show Sept. 13. His performing career has spanned vaudeville, burlesque, showboats, motion pictures, radio and 20 years on television.

Frankie Avalon, Fabian Forte and Bobby Rydell, three teen idols of the late '50s and early '60s, will be performing together on Sept. 14, the final day of the state fair. Calling themselves "The Golden Boys of Bandstand," the trio will appear for one show.

Ticket order forms, available in the Official Daily Program, were distributed in various newspapers

Sunday. In order to be fair to all who want tickets, Bob Gottschalk, executive secretary of the fair, said requests must be postmarked no earlier than Friday in order to be processed. Any orders postmarked before Friday will be returned unfilled, he said.

To order tickets without a form, purchasers must include all necessary information, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope and add $1 to the ticket total for postage and handling, Gottschalk

Information needed to process orders is the date and time of show, the artist performing, the ticket price, the number of tickets wanted, and the number of gate tickets

The fair has two special ticket packages available to save fairgoers money, Gottschalk said.

The "Family Fun Pack," selling for $15, entitles the purchaser to four outside gate tickets, 20 ride tickets, four tickets to the Old Mill and four rides on the State Fair railroad. The "Superticket" is a sheet of 10 outside gate tickets costing $20.

These ticket packages, as well as gate tickets, are available at all Dillon's stores including the Manhattan stores at 2700 Anderson Ave. and 632 Tuttle Creek Blvd.

Courses to enhance communication skills

By MARY TOMELLERI Collegian Reporter

A system to enhance student communication skills in reading and writing will begin this fall in cooperation with the English Composition I and II and Writing Lab programs, said Charles Heerman, associate professor in curriculum and instruction.

A 1985 study on the design and instruction of the college reading program at K-State indicated that reading instruction is beneficial to students. The study, conducted by Heerman and Harlan Trennepohl, associate professor of curriculum and instruction, also suggested the joining of reading and writing instruction could improve communication students'

Students can improve their reading skills or learn more effective study methods in two classes offered on campus, Heerman said.

These classes are the Developmental Reading Laboratory and the Study Skills Laboratory offered by the Department of Curriculum and Instruc-

The reading lab helps to improve students' reading skills, rates of comprehension, vocabulary and study skills. The study skills lab helps students learn effective study methods, analyze difficulties in reading and studying and prepare for exams.

"We want to make learning more efficient," he said.

Through observation and informal discussions with students enrolled in English composition classes, those instructors will determine which students may benefit from the reading lab while they are in the writing program,

The instructors will then recommend to their students that 'academic performance would be enhanced if they were enrolled in the developmental reading lab," Heerman said.

Students don't have to enroll in the reading lab, he said. "There is no force of law in this," Heerman

Students who do choose to enroll in the lab can be given general or specific reading instruction geared toward their English composition textbooks, he said.

The idea is that people would be taught how to read and write at the same time, "merging reading and writing instruction," he said.

Many freshmen are not prepared for the academic reading load they are assigned during their first semester at college, Heerman said. That is the time they should learn how to handle that load.

"There are not enough hours in a day to read a textbook," he said. If a student has a good background in a subject, there may be some things that he doesn't need to read, but if a student has no background in a subject, then he will want to read material slowly, Heerman said.

"Some material should never be read at a high rate of speed,"

Agency, churches aid needy in Manhattan

By MARK HOLLY Collegian Reporter

Battling hunger in Manhattan isn't an easy job, but The Food Bank at The Flint Hills Breadbasket, 901 Yuma St., is working to put up a good

According to The Breadbasket's 1985 information summary, The Food Bank is a year-round contribution and distribution network that distributed 39,033 pounds of food to 26 agencies serving an estimated 2,070 families and 4,176 individuals. It serves as a link between the food industry and the agencies that serve Manhattan's needy.

"The Food Bank is the most important program at The Breadbasket,' said Atina Hanna, executive director of The Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"It reaches more people than all the other programs," she said. "If a person is eligible for food bank assistance, he is automatically eligible for all of the other programs offered by The Breadbasket.

The Food Bank operates by supplying food to existing agencies and institutions rather than to individuals, Hanna said. "These people are experienced in identifying people who have a real need," she said.

According to Charlotte Scott of First United Methodist Church, 612 Poyntz Ave., there has been a definite increase this summer in the number of people in need of

"During May, 31 adults received assistance from The First Methodist Church Pantry. (And) in June, the number increased to 80 adults," Scott said.

She said the First United Methodist Church Pantry assists those in emergency situations by supplying them with a three-day supply of food after having been referred by Social and Rehabilitation Services or another referral agency.

"Our service is only the tip of the iceberg," Scott said.

According to the information summary, recipient agencies include four pantries operated by First Lutheran, First United Methodist, First Presbyterian, and Grace Baptist churches

Other agencies include The Emergency Shelter, Big Lakes Developmental Center, Pawnee Mental Health Center, The Douglass Center Fellowship Meals, Teen Outreach, Manhattan Day Care and several others.

"We are really pleased he and his wife are here," Garner said.

Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech, said, "We wanted to welcome the Wefalds to K-State and have them help celebrate the summer season. We have always had a summer repertory and we believed this would be a great time to have a special welcome for the new president.

"He is really interested in meeting the students," Shelton said, noting that "when President Wefald visited K-State earlier this year, he expressed an interest in the arts."

Wefald decides against loan of snooker table

By The Collegian Staff

The proposed loan of a snooker table from the Union to the president's residence has been canceled by University President Jon Wefald.

Referring to a guest column in Wednesday's Collegian, Wefald said, "I really appreciated (Steve Milligan's) column. It raised some good points.

"I thought it was excellent and completely correct," he said.

The column criticized the loan of the snooker table to Wefald because it was purchased with student money, among other reasons. The original request was made to Union Director Walter Smith by George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

"When we make a mistake, we just have to correct it and move on," Wefald said.

Journalism workshop starts

By TRACY MAYHEW Collegian Reporter

First-hand experience is what high school students and their advisers will receive by attending the Flint Hills Publications Workshop this week.

The workshop - directed by Dave Adams, director of Student Publications, Inc. - is designed to teach participants skills in four different areas of mass communications: newspaper, yearbook, photography and advertising, said Sue Majerus, workshop coordinator.

Classes began Sunday and will last through Friday. Students will have hands-on experience and will be using up-to-date equipment. They will learn modern editing and reporting techniques, and gain knowledge in the entire yearbook production process. This includes theme ideas, new trends and yearbook design.

Student photographers will work with workshop faculty trained in photographic techniques. They will assist the students in producing photographs to be published in the newspaper and yearbook produced by students, Majerus said.

This is the second year the advertising division has been included in the workshop. This class will also be open to publication advisers and student publication business managers. It will instruct students in writing and designing advertising copy, and it will teach students how to prepare a market survey for their school, she said.

The workshop will also offer a class for advisers called, "Supervision of School Publications.'

Participants have to come to the workshop willing to work, Majerus said. During the week, participants put together a yearbook and a newspaper called the Kedzie Krier. They must also meet deadlines, listen to lectures and finish story assignments, she said. Classes begin at 8:30 a.m. and last until 10:30 p.m.

The workshop is run by a staff which includes high school and university advisers, graduate teaching assistants, and will feature speakers from the Topeka Capitol-Journal, K-State Sports Information, Jostens/American Yearbook Co. and The Wichita Eagle and Beacon, Majerus said.

"The workshop is very beneficial. Some students come and start from scratch. It gives them great experience," Majerus

Approximately 50 scholarships will also be awarded at the workshop to those who apply. The awards will range from $35 to $50.

Criteria for awarding these scholarships include: the student's position on the high school staff this fall, the student's interest in pursuing journalism as a career. the distance the student traveled to the workshop, the recommendation of the publication adviser of the student, the student's academic potential and financial

"The workshop (size) is increasing steadily. We have the reputation of being a valuable experience for high school students and advisers," Majerus said. Last year 150 students attended the workshop. This year 175 students are expected. The cost is $135 for students and $150 for advisers.

Students' dean to leave post after 12 years at University

By KAREN SCHULER Collegian Reporter

After 12 years at K-State, Earl Nolting, dean of students and assistant vice president of educational and student services, is resigning effective Aug. 15.

Nolting has accepted a position at the University of Minnesota as the director of extension counseling, an office in the Division of Continuing Education and Extension.

"It was an opportunity for professional advancement in my field," Nolting said. "I don't want anyone to think I'm not happy here because that's not true."

In Minneapolis, home of the University of Minnesota, Nolting will be in charge of academic advising, counseling and financial aid for students taking classes through continuing education and extention. His new job begins Sept. 2.

"I'm in student services here and I will be in student services there. Some of the specific responsibilities will be different," he said.

At K-State, the programs Nolting is responsible for are Alcohol and other Drug Education Services, nonacademic misconduct (discipline), student activities, religious acCenter, the Women's Resource Center and women's programs.

Nolting said he believes he has done a lot to help make student services more visible and effective.

When he arrived at K-State in the summer of 1974, the student services staff was located in six different buildings on campus. In 1981, most of the staff moved to Holton Hall, he

"It made it more convenient to the students and improved communications internally among the staff..." Nolting said.

He has also helped plan the renovation of Holton which is planned to take place in 1987. The renovation will be a $780,000 project funded by student government, he said.

"I worked with a lot of other people in getting the building and getting it adapted to student services," Nolting said.

Some other programs Nolting has worked with are DIAL, Fenix and the Academic Assistance Center.

DIAL is operated through the University Learning Enhancement and Resource Network and is a prerecorded message about the campus and the community, he said. The tivities, the International Student Fenix program is for returning, older-adult students.

> Nolting has also helped students in crisis situations. If a student was involved in a serious accident, Nolting would contact the student and the dean of the college the student was enrolled in. He would try to help the student in any way possible, including finding a way to help the student keep up with classwork. He must also notify other University officials in case of a student's death, and continues working with the family in whatever way it needs.

> "This (crisis cases) is a growing action that my office has been involved in," Nolting said. "The crises range from minor surgery back home to major problems.

> A search has not yet begun for a replacement for Nolting.

> "It is likely that we will have to fill in with an acting position on a temporary basis. It is a very key position and we think we may look at the responsibilities and then write up a description," said William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services.

> Sutton expects the search to begin for Nolting's replacement by the end of August or beginning of September.

Survey reveals difference in gas prices

By JOSEPH TINKER Collegian Reporter

A spot survey conducted by the K-State Collegian concerning gas prices in Manhattan has revealed a difference of as high as 57 cents per gallon between full-service and selfservice facilities.

When asked why full service was more expensive, Don Baker of University Standard, 1701 Anderson Ave., said "we have to make it up somewhere."

University Standard offers fullservice unleaded gas for $1.16 a gallon, while the self-service unleaded is 73 cents a gallon.

"We provide the full-service customer with the service needed to keep a car in good condition, making sure that everything is running smoothly," Baker said. "We wash the windshield, check the air pressure in the tires and check the fluid levels," he said. With the summer months so hot it is very important to keep all fluids in the engine full. "Customers may go to the other stations in town because they might have a lower price for full-service, but they soon return to the far superior service provided by University Standard," Dave Porter said.

"The reason our self-service is so low is because we have to compete with the other service stations in town," Porter said.

Ave., while providing full service only, is currently selling unleaded gasoline at $1.06 a gallon. With full service, the attendants wash the windshield, check the tires and check all of the fluid levels.

When asked how Parkside Conoco arrives at the current price for a gallon of gas, an attendant, who refused to be identified said, "We have to provide a margin.'

This price is the same as Kerr-McGee at 1630 Poyntz Ave., also for Frank's "66" service station, 1629 Poyntz Ave., is selling unleaded gas at 99 cents for full service, while the Parkside Conoco, 1026 Poyntz self serve sells for 75 cents a gallon.

Derby Retail, 720 N. Third St., was the lowest surveyed, coming in at 85 cents a gallon for full-service unleaded, with the self-serve gas priced at 68 cents a gallon.

"We are here to serve the public," said Terry Converse of Derby Retail.

"We want our customers to come back again and again," he said, "and in order to do that, you need to provide your resources to them at a reasonable price.

"When a customer pulls up to the full-service island, we ask them if they want us to check under the hood, because sometimes the customer is too busy and only has time for a fillup," Converse said.

The second half of the concert will feature "The Hermitage Concert March" by Clifton Williams; 'Sandpaper Ballet" by Leroy Anderson: "Salute the Duke," arranged by Paul Yoder; "America the Beautiful," arranged by Carmen Dragon; and "Them Basses" by G. Huffine.

The Clay Center Municipal Band, under the direction of C.L. Snodgrass, will perform a variety of numbers at Tuesday evening's concert.

The exchange between the two uphold good community relations, Norvell said. Manhattan's band gave its concert in Clay Center June 18.

City provides land for private gardens "To get anything out of it though,

By MARK HOLLY Collegian Reporter

For gardeners and would-be gardeners in the community who do not have suitable land at their residence, The Community Gardens can fulfill their needs and wishes.

"I work in my garden at The Community Gardens nearly every day. Sometimes I work 13-hour days to stay on top of things," said Helen Sanford, 343 N. 14th St. She is a member of the Manhattan Community Gardens board of directors.

The gardens, located at 800 Riley Lane, were begun more than a decade ago as an urban renewal project, Sanford said.

"The University For Man, along with the horticulture department petitioned the city for land to be used by those who do not have the space to garden," said Julie Coates, director of campus and community programs for UFM.

PACs contribute positive aspects

Some congressmen are worried about the future states of their campaigns. They are worried not so much by whether there will be the needed money; instead, they are concerned about the origin of that money. For this reason they are fighting for the retention of a tax credit for political campaign contributions by individuals.

The current tax credit for small contributions - 50 percent of all contributions to a maximum credit of $50 per individual or $100 per couple - is being threatened by the Senate version of the tax reform bill.

The congressmen are concerned because the percentage of campaign funds given political action committees has risen while the percentage of funds given by private citizens has dropped. The change in funding sources can also be seen with Senate campaigns.

While PACs are generally seen as evil, vote-buying groups, they do have some positive aspects. They gather and compile information for the representatives and senators. For every pro-PAC there is usually an opposing PAC. And anybody can belong to a PAC.

But there should also be an avenue for people who want to contribute to a campaign fund without having their money labeled for a specific purpose. Congressmen and senators should also have the freedom to vote for a law or a cause without the heavy breath of a PAC beating down on

The tax credit should be reinstated so the average person has an incentive to contribute to the campaign funds of their elected officials.

Various factors determine quality

Of continuing concern by both administration and students is the condition of facilities at Farrell Library.

It has been well publicized that Farrell Library has the fewest volumes of any university library in the Big Eight Conference. And that, to some, is an automatic signal of inadequacy.

But the number of volumes is not the only factor that should be used when judging a facility. It must be remembered that some changes in university libraries are not necessarily the ideas of local officials. One example is the state fire marshall's office forcing the removal of study desks on the stairway landings.

Students' actions have also forced not necessarily desirable changes, as in the removal of certain study areas in the periodicals section in an effort to decrease vandalism to the publications.

One recent "plus" for Farrell is the acquisition of the InfoTrak information system, which allows the user to retrieve listings of periodicals by simply typing one word on the screen. The system, with individual terminals and printers, is what could be called extremely "user-friendly."

Nobody, including its personnel, is saying Farrell Library is perfect. But that realization is what prompts continuing changes in the system by its personnel.

Center could aid resource searches

Most persons acquainted with the University would probably assume K-State is the school in Kansas to turn to for information regarding the rural community. But, unfortunately, many University personnel have found that not to be the case.

At a noon-hour meeting last Monday, about two dozen people, some of whom have been meeting informally for several months, discussed a proposal - in initial draft form which calls for creation of the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives.

The intention of the center would be to serve as a "clearing house" for existing operations at K-State, thus providing others on campus information regarding the activities of other individuals, colleges or departments at the school. But, and perhaps most importantly, the center would serve as a contact source for persons needing assistance, but not aware of the exact source best for their needs.

But the meeting was not without controversy, starting with the word, "Center."

Some opposed the title, noting that centers, and the like, require approval of the Kansas Board of Regents, accompanied by strictly defined obligations. Others were concerned about having another "boss."

Noting that the past administration had given little support to previous efforts, Tony Jurich, professor of family and child development, said a vacuum existed between the various entities, and "nobody knew what to do...(but) somebody has to take the first step."

Sue Maes, director of planning and uncomfortable putting a proposal in writing at this time, but actions by Koeppe prompted the move.

TOM

John Murray, head of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, said creation of the center could result in a "major impact on legislators," after it was noted the University had not acted on a request from the Legislature last season. One such request led to the now often quoted 'Redwood Report," originating from the University of Kansas.

The proposal's draft states the center is necessary as a part of K-State's mission, "dedicated to the advancement of economic, social and cultural interests of those it serves." It also cites the high usage of the FACTS hotline as an indication of the severity of the farm crisis - and the University's response to it.

Benefits to the University, in addition to serving its stated mission, include contributions to the maintenance and development of rural Kansas and the enhancement of K-State's image "as an institution concerned about and willing to confront the difficulties"

port of recruitment and retention through direct involvement with rural communities and improvement of the University's visibility statewide, regionally and nationally as a model center.

Although the Dean's Council reportedly had a lukewarm reception to the draft, it must be remembered that it was only a draft - and rushed at that.

The new administration should assist, and actively pursue establishment of such an organization - under any title. But it cannot be allowed to take the typic route - there is not enough time.

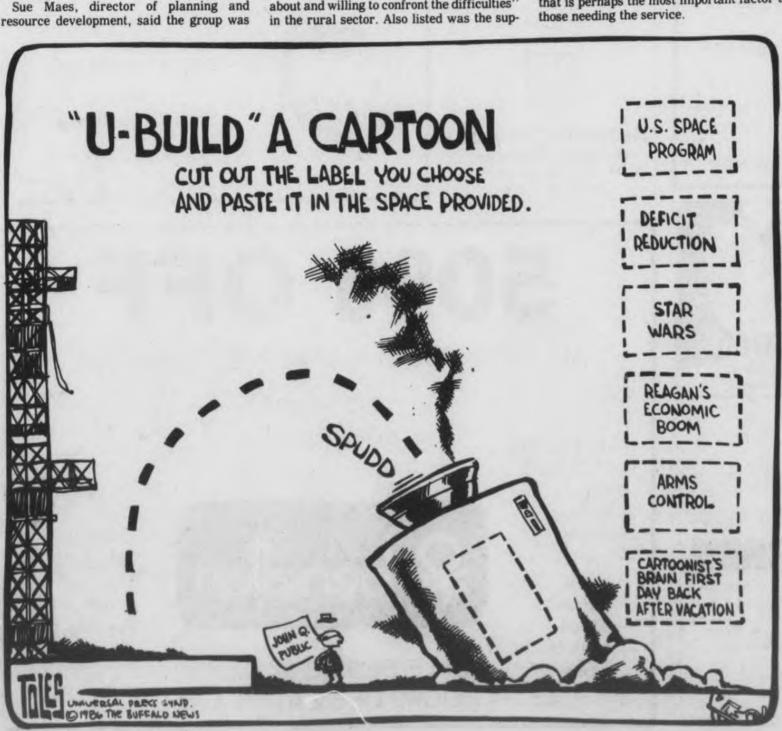

There is a real difference in timing between the University and the rural communities, with Jurich stating the farming sector may only have three months to allow for implementation. The active ingredients of the proposal are already fuctioning, all that remains is to tie up the loose ends, find a coordinator, and let the farming community in Kansas know

Yes, there will probably be oppostion, but one must hope it is for just reasons.

"(We) need to avoid setting up roadblocks," Jurich said. "Especially those involving egos.'

The proposal has great merit, even in rough draft. And it would aid both the residents of the entire state - and the University. K-State President Jon Wefald has proven interest in such matters, and his support could speed up implementation. And that is perhaps the most important factor to

Yearly festival keeps Japanese legend alive

TOKYO — One day each summer, Japanese city streets are filled with the sights and sounds of the "star festival," celebrating the 3,000-year-old legend of a pair of young lovers who meet only once a year, on a hot summer night.

'Tanabata'' or Star Festival, which commemorates the couple's annual meeting, originated in China, and later merged with Japanese native folk customs of praying for success in love and proficiency in such skills as sewing and calligraphy.

According to the legend, a man named Hikoboshi fell in love with a beautiful young woman, Orihime. Their love affair caused them to neglect their work as cowherd and weaver, which so infuriated the God of the Universe that he separated the couple, allowing them to meet on the Milky Way only once a year, on the seventh day of the seventh month in the lunar calendar.

The rest of the year, the legend says, they devote themselves to their separate livelihoods, and rains are the tears they shed.

The "star festival" is still observed in traditional ways elsewhere in Asia, especially among Chinese and South Koreans. But in Japan it has become increasingly commercialized, a fact lamented by some.

One of Japan's most ambitious celebrations is in Hiratsuka City, 40 miles southwest of Tokyo, where officials 36 years ago decided to use the legend to revive a busy shopping district damaged by World War II bombing.

Democrats select sites for 1988 convention

WASHINGTON — Democratic Party leaders chose three Southern cities among six finalists for their 1988 convention Saturday after hearing arguments the party needs to recapture the once-Democratic South to win the presidency.

Only two cities were eliminated from the party's preliminary list of eight possible sites - Detroit and the Cleveland suburb of Brook Park, Ohio, representing northern states that are bastions of organized labor, a traditional source of Democratic

Still in the running, with the winner to be chosen by the end of the year, were Atlanta, Houston, New Orleans, Washington, New York and Kansas City, Mo.

'Suspicious package' forces emergency stop

WICHITA - A suspicious package removed from a Trans World Airlines passenger plane during an unscheduled stop in Wichita Sunday contained at least one soiled baby diaper, authorities said.

The captain of Flight 169 bound for Phoenix from St. Louis made an emergency landing at 10:18 a.m. CDT at Wichita Mid-Continent Airport after a flight attendant noticed a suspicious package in the rear section of the plane.

'We isolated the airplane at the airport, disembarked all the passengers and then our bomb squad, along with the help of FBI and Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms people, put it in a bomb trailer and took it to a disposal area," said Capt. Stan Phipps, a Wichita police spokesman. "Then our bomb experts, using controlled explosives, blew the package apart and found the nasty diaper.'

The DC-9, carrying 43 passengers and six crew members, left the Wichita airport about two hours later for Phoenix, said Dann Oldani, director of corporate communications for TWA in St. Louis.

John Cherne, TWA station manager in Wichita, said a flight attendant noticed the package under a seat. He said the package was made up of air sick bags.

"He went to the cockpit and reported it to the captain, and the captain came back and looked at it," Cherne said. "There was no one sitting around it, so they elected to come in here (Wichita) as a precaution."

Police locate missing Topeka girls' bodies

TOPEKA - Two Topeka men have been accused in connection with the deaths of two girls whose bodies were found early Sunday in the basement of a mid-Topeka

Detective Sgt. Les Holder of the Topeka Police Department said the victims were Shannon D. Mahomes, 6, and her sister, Shavon D. Mahomes, 3. The two were last seen playing in a vacant lot down the street from their home.

The girls' mother, Pamela D. Mahomes, reported the girls missing at about 9 p.m. Saturday. After an intensive search, the two were found dead about 3:30 a.m. Sun-

Two men, ages 37 and 32, were apprehended in connection with the double murder and were being held in the Shawnee County Jail. No formal charges have been filed against the two.

Holder said the cause of the girls' deaths had not been determined.

Former senator to serve term for forgery

MOUND CITY - Former State Sen. Paul Hess, who moved to Saudi Arabia after being granted probation following an embezzlement conviction early this year, has been ordered to start serving a prison term for forgery.

Linn County District Judge Leighton Fossey denied probation for Hess at a hearing Friday, a week after he sentenced him to two concurrent terms of three-to-10

Fossey, who estimated that Hess would have to serve about a year before being eligible for parole, said his sentence can be reviewed after 120 days if the defense re-

Hess, 37, who spent 12 years in the Senate representing a Wichita district, had failed twice to appear for trial on the Linn County charges.

When he didn't show up a week ago Monday, Fossey issued a bench warrant for. his arrest. Hess appeared last Friday, saying he had been unable to leave Saudi Arabia earlier because of visa problems, and he pleaded guilty to two counts of forgery, while two theft charges were dismissed.

Hess was accused of forging the names of his former wife, Anne Oliver Hess, and her mother, Maxine Oliver, on a promissory note and mortgage used to obtain a $43,000 bank loan in 1984.

Presidential visit prompts redesign of suite

MIAMI - A suite at the Hotel Inter-Continental Miami has been redesigned to make special guest Ronald Reagan feel at home.

"I wanted it to have the overall dignity that the White House conveys," interior designer Irene D'Alessio, summoned to create a suite especially for the president,

Reagan will be staying at the hotel Wednesday when he's in town for a fund-raiser for U.S. Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., the newspaper said Saturday. The five-room suite, designed in the French Regency style, features silk draperies, hand-painted Italian wallpaper, Portuguese needlepoint rugs, a baby grand piano, a king-sized bed and paintings of horses, D'Alessio said.

After Reagan checks out, the suite will cost $1,500 a night, according to hotel spokeswoman Lesli Summers.

White slams KC past Indians

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Frank White hit reliever Dickie Noles' first pitch in the bottom of the ninth inning for a home run Sunday, lifting the Kansas City Royals to a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Noles, 2-2, had relieved starter John Butcher with one out in the seventh. Steve Farr, 7-1, pitched one inning of one-hit relief after Dennis Leonard allowed six hits over the first eight innings.

It was White's 12th homer of the season and capped Kansas City's comeback from a 2-0 sixth-inning

White doubled leading off the seventh against starter John Butcher, then with one out Jamie Quirk doubled into the right-field corner for

A popup double that shortstop Angel Salazar lost in the sun led to the Indians' two runs in the third.

Leonard had two out in the third when Tony Bernazard singled and Brett Butler drew a walk. Joe Carter then lifted a high pop fly onto the left side of the infield, and both runners scored when Salazar failed to make leading off the Royals' sixth when the left side of the Indian infield failed to come up with his high fly ball. Infield outs by Mike Kingery and George Brett scored Wilson.

Willie Wilson reached second

The Royals had only one hit until Steve Balboni, Quirk and Salazar slapped soft singles to load the bases with one out in the fifth. But Lonnie Smith, who had a third-inning double, lined hard to Brook Jacoby at third base, who threw to second to double off Balboni.

Brett, playing for the first time since missing 14 games with an injured right rotator cuff, was hitless

Howser's neck pains result of golf ball-size brain tumor

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Nine months after a champagnedrenched World Series celebration, Dick Howser has been told he has a tumor growing on his brain.

The Kansas City Royals are Mike Ferraro's team for the rest of this season. But the reaction of the players to this jarring reminder of their mortality is anybody's guess.

"If we win tonight, people will say we've come together in the face of this tragedy and now we're going to win it for Dick," said catcher Jamie Quirk. "If we lose tomorrow night, people will say we've lost our concentration and we can't possibly win because of what has happened to Dick. The fact is, nobody will know until October.'

Ferraro, Howser's third base coach, dabbed tears from his eyes as he discussed the news Friday that led to his being named interim

"I know Dick would want us all to pick up and keep going. I know he'd like to see us win," said Ferraro, 41. A close friend of Howser's, Ferraro was 40-60 with the Cleveland Indians in a brief managerial career before getting fired in 1983.

Howser, 50, underwent tests at Kansas City's St. Luke's Hospital barely 48 hours after managing the American League to victory in Tuesday night's All-Star game. He had complained for two weeks of a sore neck and was showing signs of mental confusion. The tumor described by doctors as a large one, 5-7 centimeters in diameter was discovered on the left frontal Surgery will be performed Tuesday or Wednesday after swelling has been reduced, Dr. Paul Meyer, team physician, said.

"Any time a person has a brain tumor, it is serious," Meyer said.

"But there is no way to know whether the tumor is malignant or not until the surgery.

Meyer said the affected area is where emotions and personality are centered. Performing the surgery will be a Kansas City neurosurgeon, Dr. Charles Clough.

"The neurosurgeon does not feel that this surgery is lifethreatening," Meyer said. "Under the best of circumstances, the recovery process would require three or four months.'

Howser has never managed a team that finished lower than second. And while occasional flareups are unavoidable, his players like him. Defiantly loyal, he was fired as manager of the New York Yankees in 1980 after refusing to fire Ferraro as third base coach.

"One of the reasons I came here in 1984 was the loyalty and friendship Dick showed me in New York," Ferraro said.

United States basketball team holds off late surging Soviets

By The Associated Press

MADRID, Spain - Guard Kenny Smith scored 14 of his 23 points in the second half as the United States held off a late rally and beat the Soviet Union 87-85 Sunday night to win the World Basketball Championship.

Center David Robinson scored 20 points, 17 in the first half, as the Americans won their first world championship since 1954.

The Soviets, who beat the Americans by one point in the final of the last championships in Colombia four years ago, rallied from an 18-point deficit with 7:45 to play.

Seven-foot-one center Arvidas Sabonis keyed the second-half Soviet rally, scoring 10 of his 16 points and finishing with a game-high 11 re-

Professor works to reduce stress of farmers

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

The farm crisis is drastically affecting people all over rural Kansas. Farmers, farm wives and small business owners are all feeling the stress of a depressed farm economy. It has even reached the University.

Tony Jurich, clinical director for marriage and family therapy and professor of human development and family studies at K-State, has become intertwined in the farm crisis. He feels the stress not as a farmer, but as a counselor who listens to the farmers and understands the problems they face.

Jurich is the "back-up" person for the FACTS hotline on campus. FACTS, or Farmers Assistance, Counseling and Training Service, is a telephone hotline for troubled farmers and is now in its second Jurich assists the hotline with counseling and crisis situations.

"I'm into a lot of different things, crisis work being my bag," Jurich said. "I gravitate toward real people type of things." The farm crisis is one of those things.

But Jurich's interest in farm issues didn't result from his growing up on the farm as one might expect.

"I'm a kid from Brooklyn," he said. "I had to walk five blocks to see a tree." After receiving his doctorate at Penn State in 1972, Jurich chose to come to K-State because of the department he would be working in. Jurich spent a lot of time studying farm issues.

"It took me four years to become familiar with it," he said.

Jurich is now quite familiar with the farm crisis. In the last year alone, he has seen a 300 percent increase in working with farm suicide threats and attempts.

"In previous years, one out of 50 suicide calls would be a farmer. Since Reagan took over, it has risen from 52 to 92 to over 100 a year," Jurich said. "I've gone out on 128 to plead his case about the farm suicide calls this year. A little less than half of those are rural people. We've never had a suicide problem like this before.'

Although the farm crisis hits close to home for a lot of Kansans, and rural America feels the crunch of the situation, counselors like Jurich cannot come up with national statistics on just how bad it really is.

National statistics are not available because the government is not funding research, Jurich said.

"Almost all of the information we have is based on families in urban and suburban areas. We just don't know that much about farm families," Jurich said.

In researching the farm crisis, Jurich has found one other research project on the farm crisis and four articles out of professional journals. The rest of the information he obtained "came out of the popular media," he said.

Jurich has gone to the USDA twice crisis

"They told me, 'there is no farm crisis.' Everyone knows there is a farm crisis, and the government says there isn't. Then people ask me why I am so angry with Reagan," Jurich said.

"So when we talk about the farm crisis, we just don't know that much," he said.

But what Jurich does know is that the problem is a real one.

"Farming is one of the most stressful jobs there is. It is more stressful than most white-collar jobs," Jurich said.

In his own experiences, Jurich has seen the farm crisis grow.

"In 1978, I did a farm stress workshop in northeast Kansas. Only one active farmer showed up. I did the same workshop in the same town again last fall and 120 people showed up, 60 percent of those being active farmers," Jurich said.

One of the things counselors like

Jurich are up against is the way farmers deal with hassles, he said.

"Farmers won't ask for help until it's too late. They say, 'we can deal with it," Jurich said. "Don't try to go it alone," Jurich stresses to farmers. "No man is an island and neither is a farmer."

Jurich does get angry about the farm crisis because "everyone is looking for a quick fix," he said.

"Instead of looking at a long-term answer, everyone is looking for Band-Aids. That is what is happening to American agriculture," Jurich

A quick fix will not work for the farmer because of the devastation experienced by the loss of a farm. Losing a farm is a "death, divorce and loss of a job all wrapped up in one," Jurich said.

"Death is the No. 1 stressor in our country," Jurich said. The loss of a farm is like a death because "a farm is not something like a car; it is a living, growing thing.

"Divorce is our No. 2 stressor," Jurich said. Losing a farm is also a divorce because the farmer is divorcing himself from previous and future generations.

Jurich will agree, though, that a quick fix is better than no fix. Rural Employment Assistance Program, was just recently set up for farmers. The program will train farmers for one year in a new vocation. Jurich contends it is a quick fix because the program can't teach the farmer enough in one year. 'One year is a quick fix for a lifetime," he said. The farmers need more than one year to recover from a crisis as severe as this one. 'We have to let go of the notion of the farm family as major producers and deal with the farm economy in a more constructive way," Jurich

"Unless some extraordinary methods take place, the farm crisis won't get any better for five years," ministration would toughen its policy. "I do believe that, in addition to becoming a very serious international problem this has now become a domestic civil rights issue," Dole told reporters.

The Reagan administration reportedly has started to review its South African policy and is considering whether to have greater contact with black nationalists including the outlawed African National Congress.

Kassebaum said one of the biggest problems for the administration fight is the "internal arguments" over dealing with the ANC, which South African has prohibited because of its ties to the South African Communist Party.

But in any event, she expects no major change in policy by Reagan and said there is little left for Congress to do but push for sanctions.

Although congressional action by itself is unlikely to prod the white minority government in South Africa to change apartheid, legislation "sends a certain message...that we're frustrated and disappointed,."

she said. Besides halting new investments and bank loans, Kassebaum's legislation would: Terminate U.S. landing rights for South African-owned aircraft.

- Put into law a presidential excecutive order that lat year banned the importation of South Africa's gold kruggerrand coins and prohibited the sales of U.S. computer to military and security forces or related agencies.

That order will expire in September, and was implemented by Reagan as part of a compromise worked out after the House and Senate passed limited sanctions legislation.

Require the president to review and determine whether there were adequate contingency plans for stockpiling stragetic minerals imported from South Africa. Among those are chromium, platinum, manganese and vanadium.

- Order a study of the effects of disinvestment on South Africa's neighbors. Kassebaum said she is concerned that surrounding countries should be hurt if foreign firms withdraw from South Africa because the nation might retaliate.

Other legislation in the Senate goes a bit further, calling for a ban on coal, uranium and steel imports from South Africa as well as a total U.S. cutoff of sales of computer equipment.

Kassebaum said the white-led South African government must begin negotiations soon for political change to end apartheid or that chance will disappear with the increasing violence.

"I personally believe that we should hold out our hand and be willing to support them and assist them if they're willing to step forward and make the changes that are necessary," said Kassebaum. "But they haven't signaled that. And for every step forward they take, they seem to take another step back.

Manhattan wins softball battle

Westloop team grabs title

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

Consistent pitching and hitting led the Westloop Merchants to an 18-9 victory over the Junction City Merchants in Sunday's Q-Ball Tournament finals.

Twenty-two teams played a total of 46 games in the men's doubleelimination slow-pitch softball tournament. Preliminary games were played Friday night and Saturday at Southpark Fields in Junction City. The final games were played on Sunday at the Northview and Jerry Wilson fields in Manhattan.

Westloop came up through the loser's bracket to defeat Junction City 11-6 in the first playoff game.

Lyndon Carter gave Westloop an edge with consistent pitching in the final games. The Junction City Merchants used three pitchers in the playoffs.

In the final game, Westloop jumped to a 12-0 lead at the end of the first inning. Junction City rallied in the fifth inning and brought the score within four runs, 13-9. Junction City Merchants didn't allow Westloop to score in the fifth inning, but fell apart in the bottom of the sixth when Westloop scored five runs. The final score was 18-9.

Cash prizes and trophies were awarded to the top five teams. Westloop Merchants won $200 and each team member received a KQLA T-shirt; Junction City Merchants won $100 for second place; in third place, Aggie Station won $75; fourth place and $50 went to The Barbery; and Mainstream took fifth place and $20.

Westloop's shortstop, Paul Oblein, was named most valuable player for his outstanding play throughout the tournament. The Q-Ball Tournament was hosted by the parks and recreation departments in Manhattan and Junction City and sponsored by KQLA and Audio Junction.

Men's teams classified D and E from Manhattan, Junction City and Fort Riley were eligible to play in the tournament. Entry fee per team was $75 and two regulation softballs.

Junction City Mayor Alex Scott bet a crate of oranges against Manhattan Mayor Rick Mann's bushel of little apples for the tournament. The apples and oranges went to the winning Westloop

The goal of the tournament is to bring the Manhattan, Junction City and Fort Riley communities closer together, said Steve Heston, general sales manager at KQLA. 'There seems to be some sort of wall between the communities and we're trying to chip away at it."

Marvin Robinson won the "Jacker Contest" held between the semi-final and final games. Each team in the tournament could enter two players who were allowed 10 hits. The player hitting the most home runs over the fence won. Robinson was the only player to hit one out of the park and won a

Regular drug users on Bias' team known about by staff

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE - Investigators looking into the death of Maryland basketball star Len Bias have been told that nearly half of the team's players used drugs on repeated basis last season, the prosecutor directing the investigation says.

Prince George's County State's Attorney Arthur Marshall Jr. told The Baltimore Sun the drugs said to have been used by "pretty close to 50 percent" of the team's 13 players "as a consistent matter" were cocaine, marijuana, barbiturates or amphetamines. All team members have been subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury that on Monday will begin investigating Bias' cocaine-induced death June 19. Bias died two days after the NBA Champion Boston Celtics made him the second pick in Investigators have also been told that one or more members of Maryland's coaching staff knew of the drug use.

Asked if head Coach Lefty Driesell was among those coaches, Marshall said: "He's the boss. He knew or should have known."

In an interview Friday with The Sun, Marshall gave his sharpest criticism to date of Maryland's basketball program.

eye on these kids. They're brought in not as students but as professional basketball players, and a lot of them are just plain used."

Marshall said Driesell was beyond the control of Maryland's athletic director, Dick Dull. "Who runs the athletic department? I get the feeling it's not Dick Dull," he said.

If a coach makes money for the school, "you don't mess with him," Marshall said.

Elaborating on allegations he made earlier in the week, Marshall said investigators had information from a "reasonably reliable source" that a single player wagered on a single game last season and could have been involved in point-shaving in that game.

Point-shaving involves a player's trying to win a game but by less than the number of points by which his team is favored. If the grand jury hears evidence of point-shaving, the information will be turned over to the U.S. attorney's office

Marshall has said that a friend of Bias, former Maryland student Brian Tribble, probably supplied the cocaine that killed the basketball star. Going a step farther Friday night, Marshall told ABC-TV news that he believed investigators had sufficient evidence to get the grand jury to indict him.

Marshall said earlier in the week that if charges were to be brought, they would be for drug possession or distribution, and not for any more serious offense.

Tribble's attorney declined comment late this week on the allegations his client was probably the sup-

British Open victory doesn't escape Norman last eight starts, he now has won By The Associated Press

TURNBERRY, Scotland - Greg Norman, who let this year's Masters and U.S. Open slip from his grasp, grabbed the British Open with a twofisted interlocking grip Sunday and won the 115th renewal of this ancient tournament by a five-stroke margin.

Norman, from Australia, needed only a closing round of 69 over Turnberry's Ailsa course to acquire his first major championship and confirm his position among golf's front rank

This one, secured on a 72-hole total of 280, even par, came with something approaching ease. He was so relaxed, he stretched out fulllength near his bag on the 16th fairway while waiting for his playing partner to line up a third shot.

Just as he did at the Masters and the U.S. Open, Norman held a onestroke lead going into the final round. It took him only one hole - with the help of nervous Tommy Nakajima - to expand it to three shots. No one ever got closer. By the turn, Norman led by five. When a beautiful approach shot nestled in some 30 inches from the cup on the 14th, Norman had a 6-stroke lead and from that point on, it was simply a struggle for second

Norman, who's already set singleseason money-winning record in the United States with $547,779, added another $105,000 to his enormous bankroll with this, the most important victory of his globe-trotting career. More importantly, it established him - at least for the moment - as the leading player in the world. In his three times, been second in three (including the Masters), had a 10th and a 12th (at the U.S. Open). In that period, he's won over $620,000.

Norman's task this mild, sunny day was made easier almost immediately.

Nakajima was one shot back and alone in second when play started. But Nakajima, Japan's leading performer, was burdened by national pride and enormous pressure in his attempt to become the first from his country to win one of golf's Big Four events and got away to a dreadful

He missed the green on the first hole, chipped back to about five feet and, almost incredibly, 3-putted, missing a second putt of about 18 in-

It was a double bogey. Norman suddenly had a three-shot lead but didn't falter. It quickly became a question not of who would win, but by how many strokes. The only drama remaining was whether Norman could fight his way through cheering, back-slapping fans on his way to the 18th green - he did - and the race for second. Journeyman English pro Gordon Brand claimed that position, taking an eagle-3 on the 17th and finishing at 285, five over par. He had a closing

MCC starts demolition of building

By TOM SCHULTES Editor

The last remaining, original structure on the campus of Manhattan Christian College will be relegated to memories and history books today.

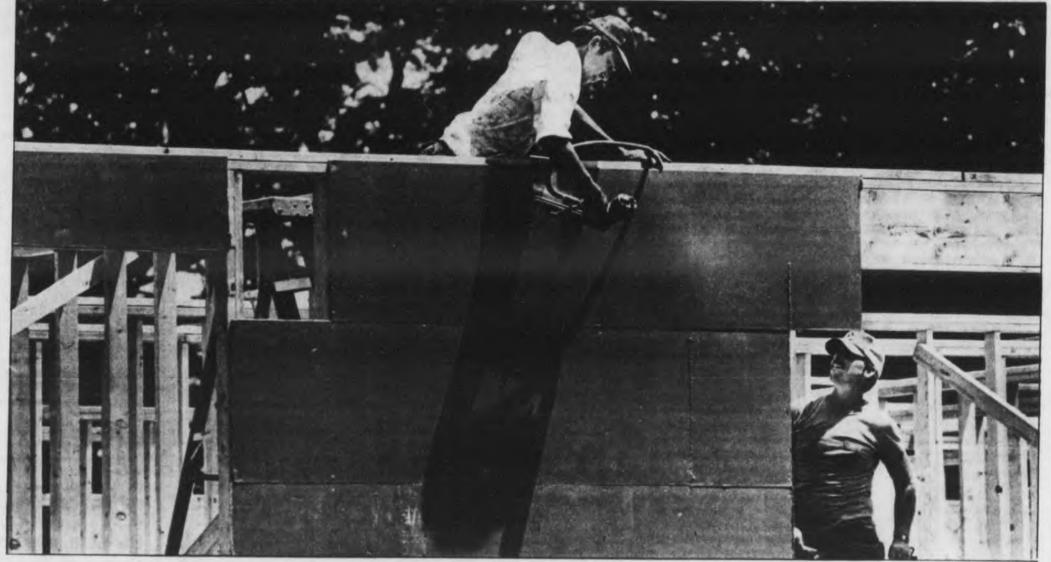

Memorial Hall, 1409 Anderson Ave., is scheduled for demolition, to begin at 8 a.m. today, said David Smale, director of public relations for the college.

Smale said the hall was the original building for the college after its purchase in 1927. The hall originally housed the entire school and had also been used as a women's dormitory. Its most recent usage was primarily for administrative offices and classrooms.

The school's administrative offices were moved earlier this week into the newly constructed administrative/classroom building immediately adjacent to Memorial. Smale said classes will begin in the new building this fall.

Funding for ministrative/classroom facility came from Bertha L. Coffin, Council Grove. Coffin is the widow of J. Donald Coffin, a longtime supporter of the school. He had been named to the MCC Advisory Council, but died in September, 1978, before he could attend his

Earthquake shakes southern California

By The Associated Press

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. - A severe earthquake shook Southern California early Tuesday, damaging a major aqueduct, shattering windows, triggering rockslides and blackouts and causing some minor injuries.

The quake measured 6.0 on the Richter scale, the strongest in the southern part of the state in seven years, said seismologist Kate Hutton of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

It was centered about 12 miles northwest of Palm Springs, said Dennis Meredith, a spokesman for the seismology lab at the Institute of Technology.

For hours after the quake, which lasted 20 to 30 seconds, there were numerous aftershocks above magnitude 3.0, Meredith said. Fourteen such temblors were registered in the six hours after the initial quake, he said.

A 6.0 quake can cause severe damage in heavily populated areas, but authorities reported mostly broken windows, cracked walls and spilled merchandise.

Preliminary indications were that the ground slipped about two inches sideways along a stretch 10 miles long and six miles deep, Hutton said.

The slip probably occurred on the Banning Fault, a section of the San Andreas system, in a sparsely populated area between the communities of Desert Hot Springs and Cabazon, she said.

Though people throughout Southern California were jolted from their beds, most of the damage was in the desert and mountain resort cities near Palm Springs, some 110 miles east of Los Angeles.

"If it had happened downtown, it might have been a different story," said Thomas Heaton, a U.S. Geological Survey scientist at Caltech. "It probably would have damaged pre-1930s buildings" those built before earthquake-safety rules were adopted.

The temblor, also felt in parts of Arizona and Nevada, was the largest in Southern California since a 1979 quake in the Imperial Valley hit 6.6 on the open-ended Richter scale. A quake registering 6.5 killed 65 people in the San Fernando Valley in February 1971.

"I really felt it, but fortunately I was in a water bed and the surf was up," said Bill Falkenstein, 45, whose flower shop in Palm Springs had heavy damage from shattered win-

But just 30 miles northwest of Palm Springs, one resident said he barely felt the temblor.

"I heard it more than I felt it, a big screaching sound like an old rusty door opening," said Chuck Herms, 64, a resident of Poppet Flats near Beaumont.

More than 100,000 homes lost electricity, but power was restored in about five hours, said Bob Hull of Southern California Edison. Major damage was done to a 500,000-volt transformer, however.

"Our system is stretched to capacity," Hull said in a plea to desert residents, where temperatures reached into the 100s, to turn off air conditioners.

The power outage shut down two pumping stations on an aqueduct bringing Colorado River water into southern California and forced officials to dump up to a billion gallons of water into the desert, triggering minor flooding.

Flooding from the Eagle Mountain pumping station, 160 miles east of Los Angeles, closed Highway 177 into Desert Center, said Tim Skove of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Water District, which supplies water for 6.5 million Southern Californians.

Elsewhere, an underground section of the aqueduct ruptured at a siphon station near Interstate 10. leaking water at a rate of 3.3 million gallons per day, and the district cut the flow to 25 percent of its normal

Among those reported injured was an inmate of the minimum security Banning Rehabilitation and Counseling Center, said Riverside County sheriff's Sgt. David Duncan.

"Apparently, when the earthquake went off he was sleeping and it startled him, so he jumped through a window and cut his hand," Duncan said.

Other than a crack in a bridge near Palm Springs on Highway 111, the main road into the city from the west, damage appeared to be confined to broken windows, police said.

Nuclear designer dies after eminent career

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Adm. Hyman G. Rickover, the salty engineer who refused to go by the book and goaded the Navy into the nuclear era, died Tuesday. He was 86.

The Navy, in a brief statement, said that Rickover "died this morning at approximately 8:45 a.m. at his home in Arlington, Va."

Sources, who asked not to be identified, said that Rickover had died of apparent natural causes and that the Pentagon had been notified of his death by his wife. He had been in poor health since suffering a stroke in July 1985.

In a Navy career that spanned six decades, Rickover, a Russian emigre, became one of the preeminent military leaders of his time despite a style that enraged the Pentagon brass and the defense industry. Congress revered him, and twice awarded him its gold medal for exceptional public service. No other citizen except Zachary Taylor had been honored more than once.

For 30 of his 60 years on active duty before President Reagan forced him to retire on his 82nd birthday in 1982, Rickover was skipper of a navy-within-a-navy, the nuclear Navy.

Former President Carter, who once said Rickover had played a greater influence on him than anyone except his parents, Tuesday called the retired admiral "one of America's greatest citizens and patriots."

Rickover had devoted much of his attention following his retirement to the Center for Excellence in Education, which was originally established under the name of the Rickover Foundation.

The center, with headquarters in Leesburg, Va., outside Washington, brings dozens of high school students who have displayed talent in the sciences to Washington for a summer of advanced course work.

Rickover was a tiny, tidy man who was as demanding of himself as he was of others, suffering neither fools nor superiors - indeed, he often pronounced them one and the same.

In the end, the Pentagon sounded a sour note even after his retirement. Navy Secretary John Lehman publicly censured him for accepting $67,628 in gifts over the years from the General Dynamics Corp., which built the nuclear submarines and ships born on Rickover's drawing

But Tuesday, Lehman lauded Rickover as "a dedicated officer of historic accomplishment."

"In his 63 years of service, Admiral Rickover took the concept of nuclear power from an idea to the present reality of more than 150 U.S. naval ships under nuclear power, with a record of 3,000 ship years of accident-free operations....All Americans owe him a debt of gratitude and all sailors mourn his passing."

When Rickover, who had suffered heart attacks in 1961 and 1974, was admitted to Bethesda Naval Hospital on July 4, 1985, with a stroke, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., suggested the ailment was "brought on possibly by being dragged through the mud by the very institution to which he rendered his invaluable services.

Rickover acknowledged taking gifts from General Dynamics, saying he in turn gave most of the items to others, including members of Congress.

General Electric and Westinghouse, also named in connection with gift-giving, had long felt the Rickover sting. He spent 18 years fighting Westinghouse to recover what he considered excessive profits on an order placed in the 1950s. He assailed General Electric when it attempted to turn down defense work in preference for commercial orders.

Rickover said that General Dynamics deliberately brought the issue of the gifts to light because of his pre-retirement insistence that the company had filed false claims with the Navy. But "I don't care," he said. "They're not taking any revenge on me. I have my own conscience."

Watkins noted that Rickover 'could have retired in 1952 at three-quarters pay and made a fortune in the private sector. But he stayed on serving his country for another 30 years. That's when he designed and built the nuclear propulsion plant for Nautilus and for all the ships that today comprise 40 percent of our major com-

Goetz to face assault charges

By The Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. - The state's top court reinstated attempted murder and assault charges Tuesday against Bernhard Goetz for shooting four youths on a Manhattan subway, and his attorney said he welcomed a chance to bring the notorious case to Goetz, 39, an electronics worker, was praised as a heroic crime victim by some and blasted as a triggerhappy vigilante by others, after he admitted shooting the four teenagers on Dec. 22, 1984, when one of them asked him for $5.

Goetz, a white man who had been injured in a 1981 mugging, has said he was acting in self-defense because he feared that the four black youths were about to rob him. The teenagers have said they were panhandling to get money for video games.

He was indicted by a grand jury on four counts of attempted murder and four counts of assault, but those charges were thrown out by lower peals unanimously overruled those lower courts and declared that a jury must get a chance to decide Goetz' guilt or innocence. Goetz's defense attorney, Barry courts. The New York Court of Ap-

Slotnick, said he would not appeal. Although disappointed by the ruling, Slotnick said, "what is about to happen is perhaps the best thing: Bernhard Goetz will go on trial. The public will now see and know all of the facts and he will ultimately be acquitted by a jury of his peers.'

Goetz told reporters in New York City that he was not sure what message the trial might deliver, but added: "Perhaps the most important thing is that New York is going to have to look at where it's going.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau said after the ruling that his office "will try the case promptly.'

The ruling "is significant because it clarifies the law of justification in New York," Morgenthau said. The Court of Appeals overturned a ruling by the Appellate Division of state Supreme Court that the prosecutor in the case had erred by telling grand jury members to consider what any reasonable person would have done when confronted by the same situation as Goetz on the sub-

The lower court said the prosecutor should have told the grand jury to consider whether Goetz himself - not a hypothetical reasonable person - believed that he was in danger and believed the use of deadly force was necessary for self-

The Court of Appeals said state law does not "allow the perpetrator of a serious crime to go free simply because that person believed his actions were reasonable and necessary to prevent some perceived harm."

It said that if the charges against Goetz were dropped a dangerous precedent would be set, allowing defendants to set their own standards and escape charges by claiming they believed they were justified in attacking others even if a reasonable person would not consider such an attack justified.

Three of the youths - Troy Canty, James Ramseur and Barry Allen have recovered from their wounds, but Darrell Cabey was left permanently paralyzed and brain damaged, authorities said.

William Kunstler, lawyer for Cabey, who has a $50 million lawsuit pending against Goetz for the shooting, said that if the appeals court had thrown out the charges against Goetz, it "would have elevated frontier justice to the level of law, a result which would make life in New York infinitely more dangerous to all our citizens.

The maximum penalty for attempted murder is 25 years in prison and each assault charge carries a penalty of up to 15 years. Goetz also faces a charge of criminal possession of weapons, which carries a top sentence of 15 years, and a charge of reckless endangerment, which carries a penalty of up to 7 years.

Farrell lacking fire protection funding

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

Farrell Library's 750,000 volumes are not protected from the danger of fire, said Dean of Libraries Brice

Hobrock said he did not understand why Farrell Library was recently passed over in funding for a fire alarm system, adding that "it was just explained to us that we were not funded this year."

Hobrock said three other buildings were considered a higher priority by authorities in charge of making decisions concerning campus safety.

"We did not receive top priority, which I do not understand," Hobrock said, "because the contents of this library are unfathomable in value...the average new book costs

John Lambert, director of public safety, said five buildings, including Farrell, were selected for review regarding fire alarm systems.

Lambert said the three buildings selected to receive fire alarm systems were Cardwell, Fairchild and Waters halls.

He said because $60,000 was requested and only $40,000 was granted, the group had to make decisions based on an arbitrary priority order.

He said the group based its decisions on fire codes and safety precautions, such as the number of people involved with each building, the total number of exits for each building and the type of buildings involved.

The campus is reviewed constantly by the authorities to ensure the best possible safety precautions are undertaken, Lambert said. He added that the fire marshall makes annual inspections of the campus.

Recently, tables located in the hallways off the stairway in Farrell were removed at the request of the fire marshall. Hobrock said although many people enjoyed studying in these areas, the library had to move the tables because of the fire marshall's decision.

Lambert said K-State will request more funds again next year and the group will wait until then to decide which building will receive the next fire alarm system.

However, Lambert added, "I am sure the library is first or second on

In examining the possibility of Farrell's receiving a fire alarm system in the near future, Hobrock said it is debatable whether to install a sprinkler system in a library. He said if the system went off accidently, many volumes could be ruined.

"The recent history of fires in libraries, and unfortunately there is some history...Los Angeles Public Library lost a quarter of its collection last month...shows that the amount of water dumped on the fire by the firemen caused much more damage than a sprinkler system would have," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said he believed if the Los Angeles Public Library had a sprinkler system the fire probably could have been put out much Hobrock said one of the biggest dangers is a fire starting at Farrell after working hours, which could destroy much of the library before being discovered.

Hobrock said he believed the library would probably be funded for an alarm system in the future.

Eating disorders increase on college campuses

By KRISTY EAKIN

Collegian Reporter "It's the biggest secret on campus," said Margaret Grayden, liscensed social worker at Lafene

Mental Health Center. The secret is anorexia nervosa and bulimia. These two eating disorders are growing rapidly among collegeaged women. Grayden said that at K-State she sees far more bulimics than anorexics.

Grayden explained anorexia as starving one's self. The anorexics have a patheological distorted view of their body. They see fat on themselves where everyone else sees skin and bones. They refuse to eat,

"With the anorexic, the therapist is seen as the enemy," Grayden said. The bulimics, she said, engage in binge eating and either force themselves to vomit or use heavy doses of laxatives to "get rid of it", as they say. Bulimia is rapidly becoming an epidemic, Grayden Lafene Mental Health offers individual or group therapy to overcome these eating disorders. The therapy centers on what causes these eating disorders in each person, Grayden said.

"Bulimics often eat to avoid dealing with daily problems like independence, autonomy and anger,"

Outside activities aid students' success rate

Collegian Reporter

Success, as defined by Webster's New World Dictionary, is to accomplish something attempted, the gain of wealth or power.

Success to a college student, as defined by Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for educational and student services, is involvement in an extracurricular activity.

"A student who is involved, through student government, their living group, intramurals or academic clubs, has a strong tendency to be more successful in their college years, than a student who is not involved," Bosco said.

The first thing Bosco recommends to a new student is to become part of an organized living group: a fraternity, sorority or residence hall.

"By becoming a member of a large, organized group, a new student can get acquainted with many people, and learn about their activities," he said. "Having someone to go with to meetings and to introduce them to other students can help the new student feel more comfortable."

After students have become adequately familiar with new surroundings and friends, they can then explore one of the 300 special interest or academic clubs K-State has to offer,

Often, the amount of time a student puts into an extracurricular activity can make a big difference in personal development, Bosco said.

"I think a student should contribute the equivalent of one course, (three hours a week), to an extracurricular activity. This gives the student an opportunity to show his or her commitment to individual self growth, and to the organization itself," Bosco said. "Not only will the student feel more a part of K-State, but they will feel a sense of ownership and pride toward the University, which helps the student feel more at home with his or her surroun-

The benefits of being involved in an extracurricular activity are numerous and advantageous to anyone's career, said Steven Johnson, student body president and junior in agricultural economics. "Being involved in different activities can get a student acquainted with staff and faculty, which is important while at K-State, but even more important after graduation, when students use their professors and instructors as references,"

Johnson said. More and more employers are looking for individuals who have shown the ability or desire to participate in something besides school work, Johnson said.

a student who has shown the initiative and drive to become a leader skills important in any work situain a club will be more successful in tion - Bosco said. the job market.

"Having good grades alone just doesn't cut it anymore," Johnson said. "Students have to show that they were willing to use their spare time to be a part of something, and it's even better if they were a leader in their group. This shows the prospective employer that this person was able to be an organizer of people, and a leader - not a follower.' In addition to the benefit of showing a desire to go beyond the scholastic area, involvement in an Johnson and Bosco both agree that extracurricular activity can give a student significant "people skills" -

> "People skills are necessary in any type of work," Bosco said. "The ability to work with a group of people; knowledge of group relations and conflict resolution is not something that can be learned in the classroom experience. It must be learned firsthand.

"A student should think of being involved in an extracurricular activity as an investment in themselves and in their future," Bosco said.

UPC begins programming for fall

By The Collegian Staff

Even though the start of the fall semester is several weeks away, the Union Program Council has already scheduled entertainment for the upcoming semester.

"UPC sponsors a wide variety of entertainment," said Janice Kiser, UPC program director. "The entertainment includes carnivals, comedy shows and concerts."

Every year, the Special Events Committee sponsors a "Welcome Back Concert" for all new and returning students. Scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. Aug. 24, the concert will feature the Rainmakers (formerly Steve, Bob & Rich), Johnny Reno and the Sax Maniacs, and Falcon Eddy.

Special Events is sponsoring an activities carnival in conjunction with the University Activities Board at 5 p.m. Sept. 7 in the Union Courtyard.

"This will provide the individual groups on campus a chance to introduce themselves to the students and entertain any questions that anyone might have concerning University facilities," Kiser said.

A highlight of the fall semester for Special Events will be Second City, a comedy troop from Chicago, with a performance scheduled for 8 p.m. Oct. 7 in Forum Hall.

The Eclectic Entertainment Committee provides entertainment in the intimate setting of the Catskeller. Performances are on various evenings and once a week, beginning at

Other scheduled performances include The Verandas, who will play at the All-Campus Dance at 9 p.m. Oct. 30, and comedian David Naster, who will perform Nov. 21. Both will be in the Catskeller.

UPC, made up of student volunteers, is divided into nine committees: Arts, Eclectic Entertainment, Feature Films, Issues and Ideas, Kaleidoscope Films, Outdoor Recreation, Special Events, and Travel and Promotions.

Group offers alternative library

By The Collegian Staff

Students interested in their future might want to check out the lending library provided by Fenix, a campus organization which addresses the concerns of and provides support for older students.

Although Fenix is geared toward serving undergraduate students who are 25 years of age or older, students of all ages may borrow books the office has made available, said Beverly Lasky, assistant director of Fenix.

The lending library is located in the Fenix office in Holton Hall. The books are intended to offer students some foresight into the world beyond the realm of the University.

It is essential that students become aware of what is going on in the world, Lasky said. Students should know about the trends that are shaping their future. Fenix wants to get students interested by offering them "a taste of what is being written," Lasky said.

These books allow students to widen their "breadth of vision" and to "become familiar with topics that should be of interest to them," Lasky said. These subjects give students something to think about and talk about with other students, she said.

The Fenix library also includes several books on trends that will affect women, Lasky said. These books include "Woman of Tomorrow," "The Cinderella Complex" and "The Wendy Syndrome."

This is the first year Fenix has lent books, Lasky said.

Unwed mothers need acceptance

Unplanned pregnancy can be devastating to the lives of many unmarried women. The Counseling Center reported there were more than 400 pregnancy tests performed on campus last year. Of those tests nearly one of every three was positive. More than half of those who tested positive sought a pregnancy alternative, the center's report indicated.

Society often ostracizes women who "get themselves pregnant," and as a result these women find themselves with nowhere to turn for support. Many women feel abortion is the only option allowing them to lead an unbranded life.

But students who want to avoid the abortion alternative may soon have another option. Manhattan Right to Life is planning to open Dream House-Maternity Home for unmarried pregnant women who want to have their baby and finish their education.

Although an unplanned pregnancy is not a dream, unwed mothers can best help their children by completing their higher education. This will increase their opportunities for higher paying positions upon leaving the University, and is a goal of the proposed support house.

The concept of the house is a message to other unwed mothers that they will find acceptance despite their "family way."

Dream House-Maternity Home is an idea that deserves the community's financial and moral sup-

Freeze or deepfreeze unacceptable

According to a recent article in The New York Times, researchers have moderated their predictions of prolonged freeze and possible human extinction put forward three years ago as part of the outlook for the aftermath of a nuclear war.

The new calculations put forth by researchers suggest the cooling effect would be less severe and of less duration than was first believed, with a drop of perhaps only 25 degrees instead of as much as 45 degrees on the Fahrenheit scale.

This means that if some people actually survive a nuclear war, they may even be able to survive the "nuclear winter" that follows. The misery is unimaginable.

This kind of research is an exercise in futility. Does anyone really want to survive a nuclear war, much less live in a world devastated by fire, radiation, smoke and soot?

Even if there are those who do want to live life "post-nuke," would it matter to them if the earth experienced a freeze or a deep-freeze?

One problem with this theory, or any theory about the aftermath of a nuclear war, is that it may lead people to believe that the devastation could be moderate enough to make nuclear war strategically acceptable.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Nuclear war, by nature, is suicidal and should be avoided at all costs.

Theories are fine, but this theory in particular is somewhat sanguine. In the field of science, the only way to truly test a theory is through realistic experiment. In this case, the experiment would be unacceptable because the cost is nothing less than human sur-

ne vote can make a difference

In 1984, only 69 percent of voting-aged Kansans were registered to vote. For one reason or another, more than 540,000 Kansans didn't bother to register. An additional 80,000 didn't vote, even after they were registered.

Although we continually see examples of people in countries who are not allowed to vote, many of us still don't take advantage of our right.

It might be easy to tune out all the "it's your right and your responsibility" garb you hear, but a recent U.S. Census Bureau report offers some information worth paying attention to.

The report noted election results from both local and state elections. In several instances fewer than 10 extra votes could have changed the election results. It happens all the time, even in Kansas, and yes, even in your home town.

One vote really does count. It's easy to complain about the way our respective local governments are being run, but it is even easier to do the least we can to change them by registering and voting for the candidates of our choice.

July 15 is the last day to register to vote in the August 5 primary. Although reading stacks of information and studying for tests tops priority lists, five minutes is all it takes to register.

Five minutes. That's it, even if you're going to be away from home August 5.

Absentee voter registration is simple and quick. Any registered voter in your county can register you at your local court house and sign on your behalf.

Protection helps

Recently, I was riding my beloved moped on a one-way street on campus legally, and out of the blue a car was coming at me illegally from the opposite side. To avoid a certain head-on collision I hit the brake hard and fell from the moped resulting in a trip to the hospital in an ambulance. The result of the accident was a large cut on my knee (very painful) and bruises on my face.

Fortunately, I had on a helmet, eye goggles and leather gloves at the time of the accident. I am certain that my injuries would have been much more serious had I not had all my protective gear. My advice to all bicyclists, mopedists and motorcyclists is to wear as much protective gear as you can. Your investment will be worth its weight in gold when an accident occurs.

I also want to thank the campus police, the ambulance personnel and professionals at The St. Mary Hospital for taking care of me after the accident. Sincere appreciation is extended to the two young ladies who called the police right after the accident. They were truly good Samaritans.

Apparent fall fatal to West Virginia man

FORT RILEY - A soldier stationed at Fort Riley died Monday after apparently falling from a third-floor fire escape at his barracks, Army officials said.

Pfc. Timothy J. Miller, 23, of Webster Springs, W.Va., was found about 4:15 a.m. Monday by a military policeman, according to the Fort Riley public affairs office. He was taken to Irwin Army Community Hospital where he was pronounced dead at

The Army said an investigation was being conducted.

Miller, who had been at the base since January, was a communications operator with the 977th Military Police Company.

FDA bans use of sulfites on fresh produce

WASHINGTON - The Food and Drug Administration on Tuesday banned the use of sulfite preservatives on fresh fruits and vegetables, including those in restaurant salad bars, because of potentially fatal reactions.

The FDA also ordered expanded labeling requirements for packaged goods containing detectable levels of sulfites

The regulation, which takes effect next month, was based on a government study of some 500 reports of severe allergic reactions, including 13 deaths. Most involved

Sulfite preservatives have been used for decades to make fresh fruits and vegetables look more attractive. Sulfites keep lettuce from wilting, for example, and prevent apple slices from turning brown.

They are harmless for most people. But an estimated 500,000 sensitive people, mostly asthmatics, can suffer an allergic reaction to the preservatives.

Most reactions are not severe, resulting in such symptoms as nausea, hives, diarrhea or shortness of breath. But severe reactions can send a person into shock and constrict the air passages, causing suffocation.

The FDA said the number of complaints indicates increased use of sulfites. In 1983, the agency said, it recorded only 50 complaints about sulfites in restaurant and supermarkets. That number increased to about 300 in 1984, it said.

Postmaster predicts profit for department

WASHINGTON - The postmaster general today projected a $414 million profit this year for the Postal Service, which finished last year with a $251 million deficit. Postmaster General Albert V. Casey attributed the good financial news to a 7 percent increase in mail volume and lower inflation rates.

A cost-of-living increase for postal workers that became effective May 10 was 3 cents an hour instead of 10 cents, as had been projected, because of a lower inflation rate than predicted. That saved $1 million a week.

After hearing the prediction and other reports at its regular meeting, the Postal Board of Governors returned to closed session to continue its search for a new postmaster to replace Casey when he quits on Aug. 15. At its meeting, the board abolished all but one of its standing committees, including a contingency committee established to find a new postmaster general last fall when some board members expressed dissatisfaction with then Postmaster General Paul N. Carlin.

Carlin has sued in federal court to get his job back when Casey retires, contending that the contingency committee was illegally constituted, met in secret without knowledge of the entire board and in violation of the government open meetings law, and spent money for an executive search without authorization.

NASA selects pilot as agency's safety chief

WASHINGTON - NASA reached outside its own ranks Tuesday for a safety czar to keep an independent watch on space agency activities to prevent another disaster like the one that destroyed the shuttle Challenger.

George A. Rodney, an experimental test pilot with great experience in safety programs during 41 years with aerospace giant Martin Marietta Corp., will head a new Office of Safety, Reliability and Quality Assurance in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Rodney's new title, that of associate administrator, gives him equal footing with the head of the space shuttle program. Rodney will report directly to NASA's administrator and he will have direct authority throughout the agency.

The establishment of such an office and a safety czar were among the key recommendations made by the Rogers Commission that investigated the Jan. 28 Challenger accident and the deaths of its crew of seven.

The office, to be at NASA's Washington headquarters, would be responsible for tracking such problems as leaks in booster rocket joint seals which doomed the

Countries settle bitter Greenpeace dispute

PARIS - France and New Zealand have settled their bitter dispute over the blowing up and sinking of the Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior by French agents, officials in Paris and Wellington announced Monday. Under terms of an agreement worked out by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, France will formally apologize for sinking the vessel in Aukland harbor last year and pay $7 million in damages. New Zealand will let two French intelligence agents out of prison to spend the next three years at a French military base on a South Pacific island.

The attack on the vessel, in which one crew member was killed, had poisoned French-New Zealand relations. France imposed trade sanctions on New Zealand as part of an effort to gain its agents' release.

The Rainbow Warrior, part of Greenpeace's militant ecological activism, was in New Zealand preparing to monitor French nuclear testing in the South Pacific when it was mined and sunk on July 12, 1985.

Most of the French agents involved in the attack slipped out of New Zealand in the following days, but Cmdr. Alain Maffart and Capt. Dominique Prieur were arrested, convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to 10 years in prison.

Old West-style wedding includes shotgun

LONGMONT, Colo. - When Jeanne Segerson and Mike Davey got married in a nice, old-fashioned, Western-style wedding, the bride was covered with ruffled pink and the groom was covered with a shotgun.

Davey, a stuntman and truck driver, and his bride exchanged vows Saturday in the Old West mock town of Heartache, built last week by 16 members of the Colorado Stuntmen's Association to entertain at the holiday Liberty Festival.

'We've always wanted to have a Western-style wedding," said Sergerson, who spoke her vows in a pink, 1870s-era ruffled dress. Davey wore cowboy attire, had a 45-caliber revolver on his hip - and a gun at his head.

All weekend at the festival the stuntmen had been re-enacting the shootout at the O.K. Corral and Billy the Kid's escape, but Saturday's visitors were treated to a unique prenuptial ritual The stuntmen, portraying an outraged father and his heavily armed male relatives, hustled a string of bachelors out of Heartache's saloon.

"Are you Mike?" they asked each one in turn, and answered every "no" with gunfire until only one bachelor was left standing. "This must be Mike," they shouted. The bride was fetched, the groom was led, and the couple was married by Boulder Judge David Torke.

The bride, who met Davey at a bar in Arvada where she works, said the the shotgun wedding was his idea and at first she wasn't too receptive. "I told him he was nuts," she said.

Clark selected to resurrect the 'Cats baseball fortunes

By The Collegian Staff

Mike Clark, who had a 293-136 record in seven seasons as baseball coach at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M College, was named Tuesday to take over the rising K-State program.

Athletic Director Larry Travis announced that Clark, 33, would succeed Gary Vaught, who left the University to take over the nationally prominent Oral Roberts University program last month.

Clark is a graduate of Missouri Western, where he was a pitcher and later an assistant baseball coach. After a stint as a high school coach in Arkansas, he went to Nor-

Miami in 1979, taking over a team that won only 13 games in three years and turning it into a consistent winner. This past season, Clark's team was 53-23.

Kansas State was 24-34 this

Travis said he interviewed four candidates for the vacant coaching position and Clark clearly stood out above the others.

"He's a super, super young guy," Travis said. "He's had a great record with pitchers and runs a very fundamentally sound team. He's had good success."

Clark should be somewhat familiar with many of the faces on next season's squad. Vaught, before departing to Oral Roberts, signed three recruits from Clark's former team, Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, and also recruited two other players from the junior college ranks in Oklahoma Clark coached against.

In addition, K-State will have seven holdovers from last year's team who came to the Wildcats via the Oklahoma junior college route.

"I think they will be more fundamentally sound (than Vaught's teams)," Travis said. "He believes in the basics, his teams are hard workers and are well drilled.'

Clark becomes the 14th head baseball coach in K-State history.

Union disputes Rozelle's plan

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - National Football League Players Association President Gene Upshaw on Tuesday accused NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle of "making a grandstand play" by mandating random drug tests for players.

The union, meanwhile, filed a grievance to block the plan which is scheduled to be implemented when the players go to training camp this month.

Upshaw, who said the players are "not willing to accept that the drug problem has gotten any worse," called the grievance the first step in what could be a legal challenge to the program announced Monday by Rozelle.

The commissioner said while the grievance came as no surprise, he was disappointed in the union's

'The issue of drug abuse by NFL players has arrived at a stage where everyone is being hurt - players, clubs and the league in general. My preference would have been to implement these improvements to our current drug program with union support," said Rozelle in a statement issued by the league.

The grievance was sent to the NFL Management Council, which is the bargaining agent for the owners, all 28 clubs and Rozelle. It asked the council to respond within 24 hours, rather than the usual seven days, to the union's demand that Rozelle's program be reviewed by an ar-

Jack Donlan, executive director of the council, said he would examine the grievance and respond in seven

If the council does not agree to arbitration, the union would go to court seeking a temporary injunction against the plan, said union attorney Dick Berthelsen.

Upshaw said the union is "very concerned" about drug use among players but has an obligation to protect the rights of the players, especially confidentiality of drug counseling, and uphold the terms of its collective bargaining agreement. The drug-testing plan, which calls for two urine samples from randomly selected players during the season, violates the bargaining agreement reached in 1982, Berthelsen said. He said the grievance asks for a quick meeting between the union and management and a continuation of the "status quo" until an arbitrator can be brought in.

Berthelsen said many people are trying to paint the union as protecting players using drugs, but he said, 'the bigger issue at stake here is whether we have a collective bargaining agreement." Upshaw said the union is not opposed to all anti-drug plans, but wants to negotiate a program through collective bargaining "I think the NFL and Pete Rozelle are making a grandstand play," Upshaw said. "Pete Rozelle is saying, 'I'll change society.

'What is his motivation? I think it's all public pressure," Upshaw said. "We're not willing to accept that the drug problem has gotten any worse. We have talked to Rozelle. He said it's gotten worse. We asked him how. He just said it did."

Baltimore continues Royals' perils in extra-innings; losing skid hits 11

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY - Two Baltimore runners scored on Kansas City shortstop Greg Pryor's 13th-inning throwing error and Juan Bonilla added a two-run single to lead the Orioles past Kansas City 8-4 and hand the floundering Royals their 11th consecutive defeat.

Dan Quisenberry, 0-3, took the loss while the victory went to veteran Odell Jones, 1-0, who was called up this week from Rochester of the Class AAA International League. Jones pitched three scoreless innings, allowing one hit.

The Royals, who have not won since June 26, managed only eight hits against five Baltimore pitchers as the Orioles won for the sixth time in the last nine games.

The Royals found themselves in an early hole, down 3-0, something that has become rather common in this losing streak. They managed to tie the game in the eighth inning, only to see the Orioles hit a home run off

The Royals also squandered scoring oportunities in extra innings, as has plagued them in the past, runners were left on base and they continually hit into double plays.

The school's music classes have been moved temporarily into Jolliffe Hall, with plans for them to be moved into the yet-to-be-constructed chapel this fall.

The chapel is to be a gift from Denver developer Floyd Sack, of Empire Development. Sack has been the general developer for the college's reconstruction projects.

Smale said formal dedication of the new facility is scheduled for Aug.

In other MCC activity, he said the new shopping center, being built along North 16th Street, between Laramie Street and Anderson Avenue would probably be open Aug. 15. Sack, who is responsible for funding and leasing arrangements for the center, has reached "tentative agreement" with its future occupants, Smale said.

The second floor of the L-shaped structure is to be used for married student housing. Smale said the college's food service will remain in the Campus Center, although under new, outside management following the retirement of the previous manager after more than 34 years of service.

Smale said the facility will contain 22 single-bedroom apartments and an additional four units with two bedrooms. The retail portion, comprised of approximately 17,000 square feet of retail space, is to include a Christian bookstore, coinoperated laundry, food service center and a 7-Eleven convenience

Therapy program successful

By CONNIE WELSH Collegian Reporter

While it is important for all students to gain experience in their fields, K-State pre-physical therapy majors are required to attend another university after completing their basic requirements to stay in

K-State offers a pre-physical therapy program, but does not have the actual pre-physical therapy training. To get this necessary training, students must attend a different university after fulfilling their basic requirements, said Phoebe Samelson, pre-physical therapy ad-

After learning the basics, many K-State pre-physical therapy students attend the University of Kansas or Wichita State University. But before they can apply for admission to these universities they must first complete "observation hours," or time spent viewing physical therapists in action.

"The local physical therapy schools want students to know what physical therapy is like, so the only way you can really tell is to spend some observation hours," Samelson

Students in pre-physical therapy must complete a minimum of eight hours observation time, she said.

"The idea is simply to get with a physical therapist and see all the different kinds of techniques," Samelson said. "Then when it comes time to apply (to a physical therapy school), the student has to write an essay on why they want to be a physical therapist. These observation hours give them a chance to share their experiences."

It takes approximately three years to finish the basic requirements at K-State; however, many students decide to stay and complete a degree at K-State before going on to physical therapy school, Samelson said.

"I decided to complete my degree in life sciences before I apply to a physical therapy school," said Kim Brookover, senior in life sciences. "I like K-State, so I decided I might as well go four years here. When I graduate, I hope to go to either KU or

Applying to a physical therapy school is not an easy task, Samelson

"In order to come in for an application to even be interviewed, they look at all of your records and your observation hours," she said. "WSU says vour overall science grade point average in your pre-physical therapy requirements must be a minimum of a 3.0; at KU it's a 2.5."

"In reality, it's hard for students with 3.2 GPAs to get in," Samelson

While the job market is very good for physical therapy majors, the competition is stiff.

"There are only 64 slots in Kansas for students in physical therapy; that's what makes it so competitive," Samelson said. "It's an expanding field with a good future, but you have to be strong in your sciences."

Weber renovations one-third complete

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

More freezer and laboratory space is being added to Weber Hall to help update the 35-year-old structure, said Vincent Cool, University architect.

Renovation of the building which houses classes in nutrition, meats and other animal products - is expected to be complete by spring 1987. The 11/2-year project is approximately one-third complete.

The building had outgrown itself, and an expansion was needed, Cool said. The building is being renovated and modernized to keep up with the growing technology in the meat production industry, he said.

"The meats technology has advanced so much in that time (that) Weber was no longer adequate," Cool said. "There is really nothing new; it is just modernized equipment."

The entire office and laboratory space has essentially been gutted, Cool said, adding that the offices and classrooms were forced to relocate during the renovation period. The offices were moved to Call and Moore halls. The classes in Weber dealing with meat production will be postponed until after completion of the project, he special advising sessions) to counsel students to take classes offered in Weber before construction or after the fall 1987 completion period," he said. Cool said students' graduation plans would not be affected by the delay of specific classes due to the precounseling sessions. The $7.2 million project, funded by the Legislature, will include a two-story addition to cover 2,300 square feet. The lower floor will contain refrigerator space, while the upper floor will provide more laboratory space, he said.

The Meats Industry of Kansas has also contributed $500,000 for the project.

The two-story addition is to include a 6-foot space between the two floors to contain refrigerator and cooling equipment. This space will be used by service personnel only, Cool said.

"The new addition will appear taller than the present two-story structure due to the ... space on the new section, but actually there will only be two floors of usable space," he said.

The Department of Agriculture must approve all temperature settings used in the refrigeration units of the building, Cool said.

"During the process of design we worked very closely with the USDA. They will have to approve "The administrators (held the final project," Cool said.

Ethnic paper provides alternative

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Alliance, an ethnic newspaper at K-State, was created to encourage minority students to read about matters of interest to them and to let them appreciate how a newspaper can help a person become involved in the community, said Susan Allen, assistant professor and editor of the Office of Minority Affairs' publica-the past several years, Allen said. It took about two years for the minority students to really become used to reading a newspaper that interested them, she said. Allen said it's important for the faculty to be aware of the need for diversity and be aware of the minority students on campus because this will find its way into their frame of reference and will show up in their

She said the purpose of the newspaper is to create cultural awareness and to offer an alternative perspective of what's going on in the world. Articles about minority students are one way of creating cultural awareness, but Allen stressed that not all of the editorial content deals specifically with minority

"The best way to reach people is through the media. That's what Alliance is really all about. It is a tiny model newspaper designed to promote cultural awareness and a global consciousness through public education," Allen said.

Allen, who has a doctorate in media anthropology, believes that public education can best be achieved through the media.

Currently, Allen does all of the writing and layout of the newspaper. However, she encourages anyone who is interested in contributing to the paper to contact her.

One of the features of Alliance is Allen's regular column "Global Alliance," for which she won an Award of Merit for editorial content writing. The award came from the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education in January.

Alliance is circulated free of charge to all minority students, interested faculty and staff, multicultural educators in the region and other interested people.

Anyone interested in being placed on the mailing list should contact the Office of Minority Affairs.

Republicans want tough line toward Botha government

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan, on the eve of a major policy speech on South Africa, was warned by Republican allies Monday he must take a tougher line toward the white-minority regime in Pretoria or face the certainty Congress will enact stif sanctions on its own.

But Reagan was described by aides as adamantly opposed to sweeping sanctions and determined to pursue a course of diplomatic persuasion with Pretoria.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said he told Reagan there has to be "some new, credible initiative.... We need something, some positive thing to forestall action.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said, "I think we all agree the status quo isn't acceptable.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Richard Lugar, R-Ind., predicted, "there will be a new policy in terms of our emphasis upon how we can be effective with our allies, as a unified presidency and Congress. Obviously that's the reason why the president is giving the speech, to try to put a new cast on a new policy."

In his only public appearance Monday, Reagan declared that his selection of a new ambassador to South Africa would not be based on race. His first choice, black businessman Robert J. Brown of North Carolina, withdrew under fire from considera-

The White House expressed regret that Brown said he no longer wanted to be considered for the job. It appeared Brown pulled out after the White House decided to abandon his nomination in the face of questions about his business dealings.

The intended nomination of Brown as the first black U.S. ambassador to South Africa was to have been a dramatic highlight of the speech Reagan was scheduled to deliver at 2 p.m. today in the White House to members of the World Affairs Council-Foreign Policy Association.

Dole, Lugar and Kassebaum conferred with the president for 45 minutes. Emerging from the meeting, Dole said, "I indicated to the president that unless there were something forthcoming, there'd be an amendment to the debt-ceiling (bill under consideration) this week on South Africa, and we wanted to

Poll defines categories for outdoor activities

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Are you "fitness driven" or one of the "unstressed and unmotivated?" An obsessed jogger or a lazy slob?

A poll for the President's Commission on Americans Outdoors says we're all one or the other - if we aren't "getaway actives," "health-conscious sociables" or "excitement-seeking competitives."

See related stories, Page 4

Pollsters from the Detroit firm of Market Opinion Research were able to sort out what drives people to do what they do outdoors. There are a lot of reasons, but they tend to fall in five clusters.

The "getaway actives" and the "health conscious sociables" each make up 33 percent of the adult population.

The sociables are "heavy on the spectator side despite the fact that 79 percent rate keeping healthy as a very important reason for participating in outdoor recreation," the study noted.

The "spectator side" includes not just watching sporting events but picnicking, walking and driving, visiting zoos, historic sites, fairs, plays and concerts, and just plain sightseeing.

The active more often say they need to be alone, and frequently commune with nature - backpacking or bird-watching, for example.

'They are not loners, however, for they also rate social motives...as very important - the chance for family to be together and just having fun," the study said.

Completely unlike either the active or the sociable type is the competitive type. The "excitementseeking competitives" are 16 percent of all adults.

"More than any other motivational groups they participate in team sports such as basketball, baseball, football and competitive sports such as golf and tennis. However, this is not to the exclusion of individual sports such as running and swimm-

The fitness-driven are only 10 percent of the total. It has the most college graduates, 38 percent. Fifty-six percent of this group are female.

'Keeping fit appears to be their near-total reason for doing outdoor recreation," the pollsters commented. Chief activities: walking -64 percent do this often - and running, 22 percent.

The 8 percent unmotivated "all rate the motivation scales low with the single exception that one-third think the family being together is important....Whereas one-third to over one-half of other groups think an important reason for doing outdoor recreation is to relieve stress, only 3 percent of the unstressed and unmotivateds think so."

Separatists fire rockets in Madrid

By The Associated Press

MADRID. Spain - Twelve anti-tank rockets were fired at the Defense Ministry on Monday from a bomb-rigged car that exploded 15 minutes later. Police said nine people were hurt and blamed the attack on Basque guerrillas.

A ministry statement said six rockets hit the building at midmorning and one landed in the office of the deputy person-, nel director, Vice Adm. Carlos Vila Miranda, wounding him slightly. Defense Minister Narcis Serra was in his fourthfloor office, but was not hurt, the statement said.

It was the second attack in Madrid in a week. The Basque separatist organization ETA claimed responsibility for a July 14 car bombing that killed 10 young paramilitary civil guards riding in a bus through the same fashionable residential neighborhood in which Monday's attack occurred.

ETA has claimed responsibility for attacks this year in which 26 people have been killed, and four of its members

The end is near for the search committee set up to find nine admissions counselors for the University.

The committee interviewed all 19 finalists Wednesday and Thursday and met Monday to deliberate on the final candidates who will be offered jobs, said William Sutton, vice president for educational and student ser-

Sutton said he was hopeful the committee would be able to complete its task during Monday's meeting. The candidates selected by the committee are subject to President Jon Wefald's approval.

Sutton expected that more than nine people would be offered the positions. A few will most likely turn down the offer, he said. Although University officials want to hire up to nine people, the committee may ultimately end up with only seven or eight counselors.

The committee was impressed with the overall quality of the applicants.

A fourth name has been added to the list of candidates for the position of vice president for institutional advancement.

Edward Boehm, assistant vice chancellor for enrollment management and dean of admissions at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, has been selected as a candidate, said Charles Reagan, chairman of the Vice Presidential Search

The committee narrowed it down to five people that we thought were good candidates," Reagan said. Before the candidates were invited wanted permission to contact their references. However, two of the five were on vacation and could not be contacted, he said. Rather than wait for permission, the committee checked the references of the other three and set up interviews, Reagan

"Then while we interviewed the three, we checked the references of the last two, and out of the last two we decided we would like to see one person," Reagan said. "He wasn't added because we were unhappy with the other three."

Boehm has been with TCU since 1979. His current responsibilities into the interview, the committee clude enrollment management which deals with recruitment of new students. He is also chief administrator for TCU admissions.

"Boehm has done a lot of fund raising for TCU and has been very successful. He went to TCU and turned around an enrollment deficit much like we have at K-State," said Sally Traeger, chairman of Student Senate and member of the selection committee. Before going to TCU, Boehm was director of university development at American University in Washington.

Boehm will appear in a 90-minute public forum to be held at 10:30 a.m. Friday in Union 212.

Supremacy groups still active, experts say

By The Associated Press

SPOKANE, Wash. - The white supremacy movement is very much alive although its members are few and its ranks thinned by the government's case against those in one organization, say experts on extremist groups

"Even small numbers can do quite a bit of damage," said Marvin Stern, director of Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith in Seattle. "Very definitely, no one should be complacent about these people." Earlier this month, 185 white supremacists gathered at a remote Idaho compound for what they called the Aryan Congress.

The supremacists themselves say the movement is still active, despite the federal government's claim that the militant, revolutionary group The Order was dismantled when 10 of its members were convicted in Seattle last December

The Order, which split from the Church of Jesus Christ Christian-Arvan Nations in 1983, was blamed for two murders, more than $4 million in robberies, counterfeiting and other crimes.

Eleven members pleaded guilty before the trial and one afterward, and member David Tate is imprisoned in Missouri for killing a state trooper

Kootenai County, Idaho, Under-

sheriff Larry Broadbent, a 15-year veteran of dealing with extremists like those who met July 12-13 in the Kootenai community of Hayden Lake, said national reports don't show any significant decrease in supremacist membership.

The Order convictions probably helped keep those people out that want nothing to do with violence,"

Pend Oreille County, Wash., Sheriff Tony Bamonte agreed, saying The Order convictions weeded out the weak. "But the ones that are firm in their commitments are going to remain so and possibly become more active," he said.

Pend Oreille County includes Metaline Falls, hometown of Order founder Robert Mathews. He died Dec. 8, 1984, when a flare ignited his hideaway on Whidbey Island north of Seattle, ending a 37-hour standoff with FBI agents.

Some supremacists, including Ku Klux Klansmen from Chicago and the firebrand leader of a Californiabased student racist group, say The Order and its declared war against the U.S. government were merely the tip of a supremacist iceberg.

Andy Friedman, assistant regional director of the Anti-Defamation League in Seattle, says his organization, which keeps tabs on racist groups was concerned, but not alarmed, about the Aryan Congress meeting.

Friedman said his group strongly applauded the Kootenai County Task Force on Human Relations, which drew 1,000 to a Human Rights Celebration to counter the Arvan

Friedman said the supremacists have a charismatic leader - the Rev. Robert E. Miles of The Mountain Church in Cohactah, Mich., a former Klansman who called for a white territorial sanctuary in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Wyom-

Miles, 61, and the Rev. Richard G. Butler, 66, leader of the Aryan Nations, say they decry violence to attain their goals, although both vehemently spoke out for their rights to bear arms.

More militant is Greg Withrow, from Sacramento, Calif., who leads the White Student Union.

He gave a speech that read in part, "The next line of leadership shall be a generation of ruthless predators that shall make past Aryan leaders and warriors seem pale in comparison."

Withrow 25, would not give a membership count, but said the White Student Union includes people aged 16-25 in 12 chapters in California, Montana, Delaware and North Carolina.

Former governor reminisces

By The Associated Press

WAKEFIELD - A view of Milford Reservoir stirs bittersweet memories for Bill Avery.

Avery can stand on his patio deck and remember the farm that was deeded to his family in 1880. More than half the Avery acreage is now under water, the land condemned in the early 1960s for the reservoir. Two silos and 400 acres of mostly pasture land are all that remain.

At the same time, it was debate over the reservoir's construction that started Avery on his political career - first as a Kansas legislator, then as 2nd District congressman and finally as governor.

"They were tearing down the house my father built at the same time I was moving into the governor's mansion," Avery said. "Of course, they took the good land and my improvements and left me with the hill.'

At 74, Avery can still talk a good game of politics. But he avoided the public spotlight for 20 years before he endorsed Secretary of State Jack Brier for the GOP nomination for governor in May. It was the first time he had made a primary endorsement since leaving the state's highest office in 1967.

Avery said he missed the political life for a year or two after his retirement. But now he is content in the town that has been home to his family for generations.

Two years ago, Avery and his wife Hazel had the house on the reservoir built. Nearby is a farm the former governor purchased in 1948. It's there he keeps his antique farm machinery, the kind he remembers his father using, and his team of matching Belgian horses - Barney and L.J.

"It's not an economic operation at all," Avery said of his hobby "It's strictly for pleasure and nostalgia."

On the walls of a basement recreation room are reminders of his political life. There are photographs of former presidents Gerald Ford and Dwight Eisenhower and a picture of Avery with the governor's mansion in the background. He is dressed in a suit, white shirt and tie, a sharp contrast to the jeans, workshirt and demin jacket he wears to work his horses.

Avery's father, Herman, served two terms in the Kansas Legislature. Avery was in Topeka four years before being elected to Congress. He was in Washington for a decade and came to know such political lights as Eisenhower and Harry Truman.

"I thought Eisenhower was a good president at the time," Avery said. 'You look back and you can't fault many of the decisions he made ....

"Truman wasn't as bad as they said then or as good as they say now," he added.

In the mid-1960s, about the time Milford Reservoir was becoming a reality, Avery returned to Kansas to campaign for governor. The road back to Topeka was not an easy one.

Avery's primary opposition included McDill "Huck" Boyd, Phillipsburg newspaper publisher, Paul Wunsch of Kingman, then a powerhouse in the state Senate, Attorney General William Ferguson of Wellington and Harold Chase, a former lieutenant governor from

When Avery took office, the state was broke - not because of an economic decline in its major industires of agriculture, oil and aircraft - but because of added financial responsibilities such as taking Wichita State University into the regents' system.

"Another part of it was that everyone who could have done something about (the state's financial problems) was running for governor, and they didn't want to be associated with the stigma of a tax increase so they let it slide," Avery

After the Wakefield Republican took office, he pushed for an increase in the sales tax and ordered enforcement of the state withholding tax. Officials estimated 10,000 Kansans were not paying their withholding taxes. After tax returns were filed, it became clear the number was closer to 100,000, more than enough votes to defeat Avery in the next election against Democrat Robert Docking.

Despite his experience, the former governor supported John Carlin and his call this year for an increase in the state sales tax.

"It was the only thing to do," Avery said. "I can remember governors back to the 1920s and I think John Carlin will go down as the most effective Democratic governor. He's the only Democratic governor who has ever been for anything. You don't have to agree with him, but he tackled the severance tax, reappraisal, liquor-by-the-drink, the lottery and parimutuel (wagering), all hot potatoes for 10 or more years."

In the meantime, Avery farms for pleasure - and says he is much happier endorsing a candidate than he is being one.

'Curse' illustrates Shepard's skill

Staff Writer Sam Shepard's "Curse of the Starving Class" should receive top billing in the Summer Repertory Theatre's three summer plays. This is the show you shouldn't lau Keview

The play is a contemporary work of art. Shepard has been labeled today's master of literary allusion. And although "Curse of the Starving Class" is not yet one of his most widely recognized works, it is clearly quality work.

The play initially humors significant societal ills by downplaying humanistic aspects of problems such as poverty, manipulation and alcohol abuse.

Shepard traps attention, then polishes off the kill by poignantly addressing not only the difficulties encountered by the poor, but by those starving for communication, acceptance and empathy.

In addition to the outstanding material, the repertory group has wholly thrust itself into this production, giving the audience nothing but an outstanding performance.

The cast of seven shares the stage with a live lamb, adding an interesting bit of variety to indoor theater. Little touches - like the cooking of ham and eggs on a working gas stove - make this play more interesting than television or a typical theatrical produc-

Bradley Atchison, junior in prephysical therapy, as Wesley, delivers an insightful role as a young man fighting his way out of juvenile idiocy into meaningful maturity. Atchison's face shows the raw expressiveness makes a reality of staged performance.

Wesley has to constantly battle for simple concern from his mother, Ella (played by Jennifer Dohl, May graduate from Bethany College in Lindsborg), an emotionally distressed mother who is trying to grow up while raising two children and an alcoholic husband.

This is by far Dohl's best effort of the summer. She not only looks like a pathetic mother in curlers, a sloppy housecoat and slippers, she has mastered the lack of emotional variety. Although some of the dialogue is stilted. Dohl presents an interesting look at this unbalanced woman.

Timothy Smith, graduate in theater, plays the eccentric father, Weston. Smith creates a painfully believable, sensitive person who, amid his attempts to reform, is rejected. Smith's spontaneous reactions and ability to focus attention during a single moment add an unmatched level of intensity to this performance.

Emma, played by Nancy Sloan, senior in theater, lightens the somber mood throughout the play with her s med-brat ar shares Emma's dreams and expectations with such conviction that it's easy to disregard she's dressed a little too much like a big 6-year-old who needs a lollipop.

"Curse of the Starving Class" should leave you a bit depressed at the close. The play fosters discussion of different perspectives on dreams and reality, faith and responsibility.

The play is to be presented at 8 p.m. Wednesday and Saturday in Nichols Theatre.

Volunteers assist Humane Society

By The Collegian Staff

The Riley County Humane Society is putting its best foot forward in helping man's best friend.

Julia Cleland, Humane Society secretary, said the Humane Society consists of volunteers who administer a variety of programs in conjunction with the city of Manhattan.

'The most important program is the Cruelty Investigation Program," Cleland said.

She said when the Humane Society receives reports of animal abuse such as inadequate shelter, food or water, its officers investigate the situation.

"If the problem is not corrected, the animal impounded," Cleland said.

The Pets and People Program is another program administered by the society, Cleland said. It is a program in which pets are taken to the local nursing homes once a month so they can be enjoyed by "Those in the homes get a lot out of it," Cleland said.

She said the Humane Society also offers a low-cost spaying and neutering program.

"The program operates by giving 10 percent to 50 percent off the cost of spaying and neutering to those who adopt a dog from the Manhattan Animal Shelter located at the Sunset Zoo," Cleland said.

'The animal shelter, which is funded by the city of Manhattan, is seeing its seasonal increase in the number of dogs that are being kept in the shelter," said Anne Collins, animal shelter coordinator.

According to Collins, the shelter does not take cats because there is no city ordinance pertaining to

Many people will not even consider living with a person of the opposite sex until they are married, but for some K-State students this way of thinking is passe. While there are those who choose to cohabitate (live together as husband and wife), others select a platonic living arrangement as simply a matter of convenience. Kim Schulte, Manhattan, has had male and female roommates for the past three years. The men who have shared a residence with her have all been in her brother's fraternity. "I prefer having people I know coming from," he said. Many said members of the opposite sex are less demanding.

"On the whole, men are easier to live with than girls are," Schulte said. Although the men were not as clean as she would have liked, they would clean up after themselves once asked, she said.

Purdum agreed with her on the thought of living with the same sex. He said it was easier to live with two women than with two men.

He said he believes because roommates of the opposite sex tend not only to respect each other more, but are also more careful about what they do around each other.

"If you knew something got (the women roommates) mad, you wouldn't do it as often as with a

Purdum said he and his female roommates could talk to each other about the way men and women treat each other - something he found difficult to do with his male friends Not all were impressed with the opposite gender's skills.

"They cleaned and I did the yardwork," Purdum said.

The only rule Schulte developed was for the men to take turns putting out the trash. Other than that, she said, they all understood what was expected of each other.

Living with the opposite sex proved to have its surprising moments.

Purdum said he and his roommates would sometimes run across each other walking naked from the bathroom.

"The only problem was that in my apartment the bathroom is next to the living room, and when you open the door you can see everything, Hensley said.

"I don't think some people would like it," Hensley said. "You can't be a really private person. If you don't like a lot of people around it wouldn't work out."

Seth Child's inadequate for traffic

With the passing summer months, construction crews are busy at the Town Center Mall site, Manhattan Christian College and residential sites. But, once again, crews are not to be found on Seth Child's Road.

For years, discussions, plans and arguments concerning the road's adequacy (or lack thereof) and its condition have been passed on for the next year's agenda.

Many in the community have believed the only direction Manhattan could grow was to the west - but the mall made it expensively clear that merchants the fear of traffic problems. are willing to give Pottawatomie County a chance.

North of Claflin Road, Seth Child's Road seems to be adequate. But something must be done for the section between and including — the intersections of Anderson Avenue and Fort Riley Boulevard.

The issue was discussed with the construction of the Seth Child's Cinema last year. And more recently, a proposal to bring a second Wal-Mart store to the community has been delayed by

One may wonder if the store's delay is actually caused by the fear of the traffic flow, or if the traffic conditions will be allowed to persist because of the Wal-Mart proposal. Those responsible are going to have to realize that Wal-Mart or no, Seth Child's Road is inadequate for the community.

Manhattan and Riley County should not have to experience further decreases in the tax base due to inaction.

Cocaine available for the asking

Leaving Bolivia with empty hands doesn't say much for the efforts of the United States to crack down on a primary distributor of cocaine.

Despite the administration's hopes to "catch 'em in the act," too many people were aware of the plan before the helicopters took off. Leaks within our administration, or theirs, or both will continue to doom such attempts to failure.

Cocaine is big business — and big names are involved. That's not a big secret.

Even right here in Manhattan, some think they have reason to believe there's something fishy going on behind closed local doors.

University students have found cocaine readily available at their slightest whim. All one has to do is

Earlier this month a report published in the Washington Post revealed staggering statistics of cocaine availability and student experimentation levels. The Post reported that close to a third of all college students try cocaine before leaving their alma mater.

Most of us assume some young people will experiment with marijuana, but what we haven't expected, and hardly dare to suspect, is that the number of students willing to try cocaine is growing at a rate twice that of those who try marijuana.

Thrill-seekers are getting younger by the day, and yet awareness of the magnitude of the problem doesn't increase. We think if we ignore it long enough, it'll go away - like florescent socks have.

Wake up, Manhattan.

It's time we stuck our noses into our own business. By educating and informing ourselves about cocaine and its dangers, we're opening our eyes to an international and local reality.

Destined to plague

Editor,

On July 3, during our "Liberty Weekend" celebration, a U.S.-supplied Contra land mine killed a truckload of 32 civilians in Nicaragua, including 12 women and 12 children, two of whom were infants. An entire family of 13 was wiped out.

A century and a half ago, Latin American liberator Simon Bolivar put it well, "The United States appears destined by providence to plague America with miseries in the name of liberty."

Comments mislead

I want to address some of the comments made by Mike Jones and Kirk Caraway in the July 16 Collegian article "Task force studies possibility of athletic fee.

The headline accurately states the purpose of the Athletic Fee Task Force as explained to me during an interview for one of the "atlarge" task force positions - to study the possibility of an athletic fee at K-State.

Comments by Jones, a non-voting task force member representing the athletic department, and Caraway, one of five student senators on the task force, in the July 16 article are misleading.

Their statements imply that a student athletic fee at K-State is a foregone conclusion. They indicate the only purpose of the task force is to establish how much money is needed and how to collect it. In the article, "Jones said he would like to see the task force push for a small athletic fee accompanied by a small ticket price."

It is inappropriate for a member of the task force, voting or non-voting, to announce what he thinks the task force recommendation ought to be. Jones' statements reduce the task force to a puppet of the athletic department before it has even started to "study the possibility" of an athletic fee.

In the article, "Jones said he believes the majority of students support an athletic fee..." I wasn't aware that a formal survey of K-Staters had taken place. The task force will surely be enlightened if it can review the results of such a survey.

My sincere hope is that the rest of the task force members will investigate the issue thoroughly and impartially. They should present K-State students with a recommendation that will benefit the students and the University the most, now and in the future. It is not a task to be taken lightly

The truth is that Nicaragua is one of the most open societies in Central America. Freedom of travel has been unrestricted. The abundance of foreign reporters and observers from all over the world have made Nicaragua the most carefully scrutinized country in the region. In contrast with El Salvador and Guatemala, visitors hear critics of the government speak openly without fear.

Indeed, the idea that the Sandinistas have the ability to conceal reality from the world is ridiculous. The many problems of this poor country - mostly inherited from the Somoza regime - are visible to all and noted constantly in the U.S. press.

As for the reality of Sandinista accomplishments, Verschelden should consider these sources: the World Health Organization and UNICEF both gave Nicaragua their awards for best health achievement in the Third World; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization awarded Nicaragua its 1980 Grand Prize for the country's National Literacy Crusade; and in recognition of their advances in health care, a Nicaraguan was elected as the president of the Pan American Health Organization in 1982.

If Verschelden wants to learn something about Central America, I suggest he begin by reading the eyewitness testimony of the 70 Kansans who have recently been there. It has been collected as "The Kansas Citizens' Hearing on Central America" and is available at the Farrell Library reserve

Two men face charges in double murders

TOPEKA - Two sisters who apparently died after being smothered were found in the basement of a neighbor's house Sunday, and authorities said two Topeka men were being held in connection with the killings.

Shannon D. Mahomes, 6, and Shavon D. Mahomes, 3, of Topeka were reported missing Saturday night after their mother noticed they had disappeared from their

David Howard, 32, and Noland Prewett, 37, both of Topeka, were booked into the Shawnee County Jail Sunday on two counts of first-degree murder, Topeka police

Dr. Roman Hiszczynskyj, Shawnee County district coroner, said the girls died of asphyxiation. He said it appeared that the girls were smothered to death, not strangled. Hiszczynskyj said there were no apparent signs of sexual molestation, but he said he was still awaiting test results to provide a definitive answer to that question. There were no other serious wounds on the girls' bodies, only superficial bruises and cuts, the coroner said. Hiszczynskkyj said the girls died sometime between 7:30 p.m. and 11 p.m., but he could not be sure of the exact time until tests were completed.

The girls' mother, Pamela D. Mahomes, 28, said she first noticed the girls missing about 8 p.m. Saturday. Mahomes, her boyfriend and two neighbors searched for about an hour before she called police. By midnight, police and volunteers from the Citizens Emergency Radio Team began a search of the area.

Police later obtained a search warrant and went to the men's home, where the girls were found in a space between a furnace and a wall, police said.

Slasher victim's wife sues for $56 million

NEW YORK — A Manhattan woman has filed a $56 million lawsuit against the hospital that released a mental patient who allegedly stabbed her husband to death aboard the Staten Island Ferry. Ruby Walker, 61, charged in the suit filed Monday that Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital was "negligent and careless" in failing to determine whether Juan J. Gonzales, a homeless Cuban refugee, was dangerous before releasing him.

Walker's 61-year-old husband, Jordan, a security guard on the set of ABC-TV's "All My Children," was fatally stabbed in the back with a sword on July 7 as he was going to Staten Island to visit friends. He died en route to Staten Island Hospital. Gonzales, 43, had been admitted to Columbia-Presbyterian on July 3 and diagnosed as suffering "acute psychosis." Two days later, after telling doctors he was no longer hearing voices, Gonzales was released and told to report to Harlem Hospital as an outpatient, according to Alice McGillion, deputy police commissioner for Gonzales boarded the Staten Island Ferry where he allegedly went into a murderous frenzy, wielding a sword with which he "slashed, stabbed, injured, maimed and mutilated several innocent passengers," according to court papers.

Police said two were killed in the attack and nine others were wounded, including a couple from McPherson, Kan.

Kansas City campaigns for '88 convention

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Now that the number of cities vying for the 1988 Democratic National Convention has been reduced to six, officials in Kansas City are going to assemble another group of strategists to lure the Democrats to town. After Mayor Richard L. Berkley and other representatives made a successful presentation to party officials in Washington last week, they now have to determine what the next step will be.

Gil Langley, of the Convention and Visitor's bureau of Greater Kansas City, said area Democrats will figure heavily in plans for the next pitch.

One thing that places Kansas City at somewhat of a disadvantage, and is a reason the city is considered to be a longshot, is the fewer number of hotel rooms that are available in the other five towns.

The other cities still in the bidding for the convention are New York, Washington, Atlanta, Houston and New Orleans.

Politicians and convention officials want to convince the Democrats that they will pick up votes by holding the event in Kansas City.

A management consulting firm has been hired to conduct a search for a new director for the convention bureau.

Royals' manager to undergo brain surgery

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Manager Dick Howser of the Kansas City Royals will undergo surgery for the removal of a brain tumor today at St. Luke's Hospital, the Royals said Monday Team spokesman Jeff Coy said the operation, expected to last four hours, will begin at 11:30 a.m. (CDT).

Dr. Charles Clough, a neurosurgeon at St. Luke's, will make a statement about the operation after consulting with the family, Coy said.

Howser, 50, was admitted to the hospital last Thursday night after complaining for two weeks of a stiff neck and headaches. Just two nights earlier he had managed the American League to a 3-2 victory in the All-Star Game in Houston. Associates said even then he was showing signs of memory loss and mental confusion, associates said. Doctors said the confusion and memory loss may be only temporary.

"We will not know until the operation whether the tumor is benign or malignant," Dr. Paul Meyer, the Royals' team physician, said earlier. Meyer said the recovery process would require a minimum of three or four months. The tumor was discovered on the left frontal lobe, where personality and emotions are centered, Meyer said.

Mike Ferraro, Howser's close friend and third base coach, has been named interim manager of the Royals, the defending World Series champions.

Titanic exploration thrills historical society

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. - Every report about the exploration of the sunken luxury liner Titanic is enthralling for a group of amateur historians who formed a society nearly 25 years ago to coordinate their speculations about the world's most famous sea disaster.

Since the wreck was found last year by a joint U.S.-French expedition, the usually staid members of the Titanic Historical Society have not been exempt from the excitement that has struck the public.

"I thought how marvelous it was they could take a picture of a chandelier 21/2 miles down in a ship. It's like taking a picture in an ink bottle. There's absolutely no light," society treasurer Louis O. Gorman said about photographs and a videotape released last week. The pictures were taken by a remote-controlled miniature sub equipped with lights.

Publicity about the discovery and subsequent submarine exploration also has increased membership from about 2,200 to more than 3,000 people willing to pay $15 to belong to the society, which publishes a quarterly journal about Titanic trivia and other passenger ships of the White Star Line. "It's difficult to say how many of the people who are joining are interested in the deep history that we get into," said society President Charles A. Haas.

Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution researchers at the Titanic site, about 450 miles off Newfoundland, rode a small submarine to the wreck at a depth of more than two miles Monday to inspect the liner's stern, which lies largely intact about 200 feet from the main portion of the hulk.

Serious society members hope to learn which end struck the bottom first, whether the impact tore the stern off or whether trapped air in the stern blew it off as water pressure soared, he said.

But the big question regards the size of the fatal gash left by the iceberg that the ship struck.

Tennis team signs Florida transfers

By The Collegian Staff

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau has completed his women's tennis team recruiting for this season with the signing of two players to national letter-of-intents to join the Wildcat program next season.

Valerie Rive', a native of Lake Worth, Fla., will transfer to K-State from Florida State University where she redshirted as a freshman last season. Rive' will have four full years of eligibility remaining.

"Valerie comes from a great tennis family and she will be an asset to our program," Bietau said. "Her father was the coach at Palm Beach Junior College and her brother was an outstanding player at Florida

Palm Beach Junior College is where current Wildcat standout Lena Svensson played before transferring to K-State last year and is the school where Bietau found his other recruit for next season.

Lena Nurmi, who hails from Helsinki, Finland, will be a sophomore athletically next year and will also transfer to K-State from Palm Beach.

"Lena is a real good player," Bietau said. "Her record was better than Lena's (Svensson) when she played down there. She also played doubles there which Lena didn't."

Bietau had planned to sign three recruits during this signing period, but sophomore-to-be Annika Emtell, who Bietau thought was going back to Sweden, decided to stay at the University next year.

Sigrid Ivarsson, last year's No. 2 player, however, returned to Sweden to finish her education at home.

Tuttle Creek Lake offers wind surfers ideal place to set sail

By JEAN TELLER Managing Editor

Many area residents participate in different sports but according to board sailors, Tuttle Creek Lake is perfect for their sport.

Jennifer Cale, sail board instructor for The Pathfinder, 1111 Moro St., said local enthusiasts are lucky to have access to one of the best lakes in the region for the sport commonly referred to as "windsurfing."

Despite problems this year with gusty winds, "supposedly Tuttle Lake is one of the best areas for a good constant wind," she said. "We have the best waves at Tuttle Lake that you can find in Kansas.'

The art of board sailing is learning how to throw one's body weight around. Cale said.

"It's not like a sail boat," she said. "Around here to start you're pulling the sail up out of the water and the wind will catch that. Basically what you're doing is standing on a board and leaning back and your body weight is what's counteracting the force of the wind.

'Anybody can do it (sail boarding)," Cale said. "People think you have to be really strong but anybody can do it...in a mild wind. Anybody who likes to go out on the water, likes to go fast and have fun (can participate)."

It's a sport for the whole family, she said, and for all ages. Most people looking for lessons are over 30 and some even in their 60s. Every year the level of interest in board sailing increases, Cale said. After the purchase of the board and sail, board sailing is a relatively simple and quiet sport that can be done alone or with a few friends.

Cale said the cost of a board and sail can range from $500 to more than $1,000, depending on accessories. A board complete with foot straps, extra sails and an adjustable mast track can cost close to $1,200. The adjustable mast allows a board sailor to adjust the mast and sail on the board while moving. To adjust the sail on most boards, the mast must fall over and a knob turned while the board is stationary.

For University students, the Union Program Council is offering a Windsurfing Clinic scheduled for Sept. 5-6 at Tuttle Creek Lake. The Pathfinder and Blue River Water Sports will be providing certified instructors.

An informational meeting is to be held at 7 p.m. Aug. 26 in Union 208, said Sylvia Scott, UPC program director. The cost for the clinic, to be held Friday evening and all day Saturday, will be approximately $25.

Both businesses also offer lessons to interested parties and also rent

Cale and her colleagues have been certified by the International Windsurfer Sailing Schools. The schools were started by Hoyle Schweitzer, inventor of the sail board and founder of Windsurfing International Inc. Windsurfing International manufactures the popular Windsurfer® boards.

In order to become a certified sail board instructor, a person must pass a written test, an on-water board test and a teaching test.

"Guaranteed" lessons are given so the student is assured of learning the art of board sailing. The lessons are scheduled for a six-hour period but if the student is uncomfortable or the instructor feels additional work is needed, the length of the lesson is extended at no extra cost to the student. The lessons include on-land and onwater training.

Safety precautions for board sailing include the lessons, life jackets and, in Kansas, boating regulations. The state considers a sail board to be a boat so the user must follow all boating rules and regulations.

"It's fairly hard to get hurt on a windsurfer," Cale said. "Sometimes if the wind knocks the sail out of your hand, you'll get bumped on the head or something but usually not hard enough to really hurt."

It's easy to recover if a person falls off the board, she said.

"If there is a really high wind, sometimes if you have too big of a sail, it's hard to get the sail up out of the water," she said. "But otherwise it's just a matter of learning how to throw your weight around and get the sail up. And that's pretty easy.

"It's really fun and exciting. And you can make it as exciting as you want," Cale said. "It's such a variable sport, you can do pretty much what you want to with it."

Weight training offers complimentary exercise

By JEAN TELLER Managing Editor

Weight training may be beneficial but it is not magic or a panacea for physical fitness.

"Lifting weights alone is not the answer," said David Laurie, assistant professor of physical education. "You're going to have a tough time getting an aerobic workout with weight training."

Weight training is a means of maintaining and improving muscular fitness if done in conjunction with a form of cardiovascular fitness training, such as swimming, jogging, or aerobics.

The majority of people who are now becoming involved in weight training do so for appearance, in addition to the fitness benefits.

The benefits of weight training are increased strength, more endurance, increased flexibility, more muscle tone, and the muscles are more supple and better shaped. A person's confidence level is also increased, said Larry Noble, professor of physical education. A person will have a greater sense of self-worth and the "locus of control is internalized," Noble said.

have all these "You factors...physical fitness, muscular fitness, just to be functional and to have some suppleness about you but strictly from a fitness standpoint. Then you have the comestic thing, 'I want to look a certain way.' And then you have enhanced athletic performance. And then you have the top rung are the few people who care to compete (in power lifting, weight lifting or bodybuilding)," Noble said.

For athletes, weight training is used to enhance performance and to prevent injuries, said Russ Riederer, director of physical development of athletes for K-State.

"For the average population, you're looking at the overall fitness benefits and the appearance concept," he said.

Most people lift weights at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex for physical appearance, said Jonathan Burnette, physical fitness director for the Rec Complex.

"They want to change their body types somewhat. And (from various sources) they are learning that weight lifting for both men and women can be very beneficial, if not for only physical reasons then for sports," Burnette said.

The number of women utilizing weight training has increased over the past three or four years, Burnette said. Most of them begin lifting due to a husband's or boyfriend's interest in the sport and stay with it due to the appearance factor.

Weight training can be done using either free weights or machine weights. Free weights - weight plates fastened to bars - are more versatile and can used for working specific muscule groups. Free weights, if used properly, also require more time and one or two other people to "spot" or watch the lifter.

Machine weights allow the lifter to exercise more safely, Noble said, and to change the weight lifted more

"As far as an individual coming in who wants a total body fitness program, there wouldn't be any difference (between free weights and machine weights)," Burnette said.

For athletes, machines are used more for injury prevention while the free weights are used to improve a specific skill, Riederer said. If an athlete is injured, the only means of weight training may be the machines, he said.

"The machine weights are balanced...(and are) designed so if you did drop them, they're not supposed to hurt you," Laurie said. "Whereas with the free weights the balance point's critical...so you (might) have a little bit of a problem.

"As far as what they do, they're the same," he said.

"Fitness is not a fad and this (weight training) is one fitness outlet. This is something that is real," Noble said. "People are concerned about living healthier, more productive lives and getting as much quality of life as they can and a sensible lifestyle just has to include a certain amount of physical activity. People are beginning to realize that and so that's not going to to go Disturbances due to heat and cold are both dangers involving outdoor conditions, but heat disturbances can be more dangerous because they have a faster effect on the brain, said Dr. Daniel Martin of the Lafene Student Health Center.

Hypothermia, the loss of body heat, kills an estimated 700 people every year, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. Also, more than 1,000 deaths in the United States have been attributed during the summers in recent years to heat disturbances Martin said with heat casualties the brain begins to be affected almost immediately, however with hypothermia it takes much longer for the cold to have an effect on the Martin explained this with the ex-seasonal hot weather when ing by evaporation. workplace environments subject employees to high temperatures, or during sports activities such as late summer football practice or long distance running events. "Being outside, exerting oneself, or not being in good condition are some of the reasons for heat casualties," Martin said. "Those in good condition are not as susceptible, however, anyone can be affected." Martin said Lafene treats about one or two patients a month during the warm months for heat exhaustion. However, he said they only treat about one or two patients every 10 years for conditions that go beyond heat stroke. These conditions are very serious, Martin said, adding they are considered medical emergencies. An environment hotter than 95 F, exposure to high radiant heat, increased metabolic heat production from work or sports, or diseaseinduced fever usually causes perspiration, which aids body cool-

Interference with the normal loss of heat by radiation, convection, conduction, or heat evaporation may lead to serious changes in organ function and temperature regulation.

High humidity or temperature, low air flow, poor preconditioning for sports, obesity, belladonna-like drugs or electrolyte disturbances from reduced fluid or salt intake may rapidly cause critical body disturbances and possibly lead to a fatal outcome.

Martin said treatment for heat casualties includes getting the victim out of the sun and into shade. He added one should also douse the victim with water and call for help immediately before more serious conditions can develop.

Hypothermia is defined as lowering the core body temperature to 95 degrees Fahrenheit or below, or a drop of 3.6 degrees from normal, but how low the temperature can go depends on such things as body weight and pre-existing medical

A person suffering hypothermia may appear intoxicated, show problems with coordination, slurred speech or even display irrationality. Other symptoms include the skin appearing blue or puffy.

Martin said Lafene doesn't have many cases of injuries due to cold because most people don't go out when it is really cold.

"However, there are some exceptions," he said. "A warm day may suddenly turn really cold or a boat may go out in early spring or late fall. It doesn't have to be terribly cold, especially when water is involved. A water temperature of 40 degrees could be quite sufficient."

Treatment for cold casualties includes gradually warming and drying the victims. Sudden warming could cause cardiac problems, according to unnamed experts quoted by The Associated Press.

Eye injury precautions vital to athletes

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

Physical fitness for athletes includes keeping their eyes physically fit as well as their bodies.

Paul E. Bullock, Manhattan optometrist and vision consultant for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said all athletes, both professionals and amateurs, should take precautions against eye injury.

'It is a very serious problem because many people can have severe eye injuries," Bullock said. Eye protection should be used by everyone, not just those with the need for vision correction, Bullock said, through the use of protective frames with non-prescription lenses.

The sport with the leading number of eye injuries is baseball followed closely by basketball and racquet sports. The injuries are usually caused by misjudging the speed and position of a ball or an elbow from another player, Bullock said.

Because bicycling has been becoming more popular, eye injuries are increasing in that sport, he said. Airborne insects, rocks, debris and gaseous fumes from automobiles are blamed for these injuries. Bullock said bikers should use goggles and helmets that can be purchased at most bicycle shops.

Bullock, who is a member of the Council on Sports Vision, said soft contact lenses often help protect the eye from scratches. As an example, he said that if a finger were to scratch someone's eye, it would scratch the contact - maybe even tear it - but it would act as protection for the eye. Although contacts can help, additional eye protection is

Retinal detachment is the damage most likely to be done if a person is hit in the eye with an elbow or a ball, Bullock said, noting that if this injury

"The sooner (eye injury) is treated, the better the chance for full recovery," Bullock said.

Bullock said he knew of a high school student who sustained an eye injury while playing football. He said the injury could have been corrected by surgery, but instead was left unattended. The athlete ended up losing his sight in the injured eye.

Bullock, who is also an adviser for Kansas Athletic Trainers Society, urges trainers and athletic directors tection in their programs.

"It's really unfortunate," he said. 'We sit down with trainers and athletic directors and discuss what we need to do, but the topic of money gets in the way." Symptoms to watch for if one's eye has been injured include flashes of light, distorted vision, pain, discomfort, double vision, excessive eye watering, and sensitivity to light. If any of these symptoms are present, medical assistance should be sought, Bullock said.

Mexican press freedom on trial

Two journalists die in attack

By The Associated Press

MATAMOROS, Mexico - Colleagues who paid final respects to two crusading journalists shot to death by unknown killers in this border city insist they they won't be intimidated, but they're wondering who's next.

"We don't want this to be an infringement on the freedom of expression for us or anybody," said reporter Hector Miguel Chavez of the Matamoros newspaper El Bravo. "We should have the right to criticize the administration, criminals, anybody.

"We can't be at the mercy of murderers," he said. Ernesto Flores Torrijos, publisher of El Popular, and Norma Moreno Figueroa, assignments editor of the anti-corruption tabloid, died in a hail of bullets when they arrived at work Thursday.

It was one month after a newspaper publisher in another border town was shot to death. On Friday, friends and family paid last respects to Flores Torrijos and Moreno Figueroa and called on officials to find their killers.

"Matamoros is a very difficult town," Mayor Jesus Roberto Guerra said. "All the border towns are difficult, but the police can only do so much."

Victor Purata, a reporter for El Popular, agrees.

'Here in Matamoros, like in other parts of Mexico, there are narcotics smugglers, illegal-alien smugglers, electronics smugglers, weapons smugglers, corrupt politicians and just plain thieves and murderers," Purata said.

"When we have proof of something we print it. Lots of other newspapers won't do that, but we will," he said. "We are going to keep going like we are, without change." In Reynosa, 60 miles west of Matamoros, police still are investigating the June 17 killing of allergist Dr. Jorge Brenes, 46, publisher of two newspapers and chairman of the board of a universi-

Brenes was shot four times by an unidentified man wearing a motorcycle helmet who appeared at the publisher's home as he was meeting with five editors. The man lifted the helmet's plastic shield to ask for Brenes, and when the publisher identified himself, he opened fire.

Two days later, a police officer investigating the slaying was killed and another injured when they stopped two men for questioning. No arrests have been made in either slay-

Authorities don't believe the killings in Reynosa and Matamoros are connected.

Flores Torrijos, 47, knew about organized crime in his hometown. Moreno Figueroa, 24, wrote about that and alleged political corruption in her daily column.

"This was an attempt to stop the truth, to shut up the reporters," said Virginia Castillo, a magazine reporter and a friend of Moreno

China holds reporter for espionage

By The Associated Press

PEKING - Executive Editor A.M. Rosenthal of The New York Times said Monday that China's detention of the newspaper's Peking correspondent on suspicion of espionage could harm U.S.-Chinese relations.

John Burns, 41, a Briton, has been in police custody since Thursday. Chinese officials say he is being investigated on suspicion of gathering intelligence while on a motorcycle trip through restricted areas of central China.

After meeting with Burns for 30 minutes, Rosenthal said the detention "is not only bad for John Burns, but it is not good for relations between China and the United States, and the longer it goes on the worse it

"The idea that China is opening has taken hold in the United States and abroad and I don't think this will do it any good at all, to put it politely.

Rosenthal, who arrived here Saturday with Times Foreign Editor Warren Hoge, said Burns "is no more an intelligence agent than my grandmother, who I assure you was not an intelligence agent.'

Earlier Monday, Burns saw his wife Jane Scott-Long and their two small children for the first time since being locked up. He also met with U.S. and British embassy officials.

All said Burns was healthy and in good spirits, and reporters outside the gate of the Peking Public Security Bureau branch saw Burns hug his children - Jamie, 5, and Emily, 2 and kiss his wife goodbye.

Jane Scott-Long said her husband was "in very good spirits. ... He's not sure how long he's going to be held....He says all the charges are unfounded and that he's in very good

Burns is being treated "like a privileged prisoner" who has his own cell and two exercise periods a day, she said. Rosenthal said the reporter is under round-the-clock guard and has been bothered by a light which never goes off.

The Chinese have not filed any charges against Burns, but say he will be detained until the investigation is concluded. He has not had access to a lawyer.

Automatic tellers win acceptance

By JOLA MURPHY Staff Writer

Please insert card. Choose a transaction. Key in amount. Please remove card. Thank you and have a nice day. These are the common commands of an automated teller machine, or ATMs are becoming more common, with several banks in Manhattan having installed them for the convenience of both their customers and the bank itself.

"The primary purpose (of the Capitol Federal Passcard center) is to allow customers to have access to their account at a time other than our bank's regular hours," said Spencer Puls, branch manager of Capitol Federal Savings and Loan Association of Manhattan, 14th Street and Poyntz Avenue. "The ATM is mainly for hours when we are not open.

"The machine was expensive to install and expensive to service," Puls said, "but, it doesn't have sick leave, a pension plan, a salary and it doesn't have to take a vacation like a regular teller operation."

Puls said the ATM is roughly one-fourth the cost of the regular teller operation.

For the month of May, the Capitol Federal Association, based in Topeka, made 219,722 transactions by the use of the ATM. Manhattan's branch comprised 11,789 of those transactions. When a savings or checking account is opened at Capitol Federal, the customer receives a passcard to use the ATM. When money is withdrawn or deposited through the ATM, the transaction takes place in their account.

Several different transactions possible through an ATM include cash withdrawal, cash deposits, transfer of funds between checking and savings, balance information, and cash advance.

Many passcards can be used at different locations throughout the

The Via machine, for example, is located at more than 150 locations in Kansas. Locally located at Columbia Savings, 630 Humboldt St., the Via ATM is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"When a person wants to open a Via account, all they have to do is come in and sign an application. No credit check is required," said Lindsay Olsen, vice president of Columbia Savings. "After the application is signed, it takes about three weeks to get the card. If someone abuses the card, the account will be closed down.'

When a passcard is issued, a secret number is chosen by the customer. This number is known only by the customer and the bank.

The secret number system is used as a precaution against card theft, because a transaction cannot be made without both the card and the secret number.

Perhaps the most popular and widely distributed ATM is the ZIP machine, which can be found at several locations in Manhattan.

"When we open a new account we do what we call a tele-check." said Marie Dellen, new accounts. "In a tele-check we check the customer's driver's license and if they haven't been bad we will issue them a ZIP card.

Dellen said there is a initial $3 fee and 50 cent charge per transaction. Each customer gets two free ZIP transactions per month.

These locations are the Kansas State Bank, 1010 Westloop; Kansas State Bank, 11th Street and Bluemont Avenue; the K-State Union; and Citizens Bank and Trust Company, Sixth and Humboldt streets.

After a transaction is made through an ATM, the customer receives a receipt acknowledging the amount involved in the transaction.

avoid that."

Dole and Kassebaum expressed hope for a strong statement from the president. "The most persuasive person I

"The most persuasive person I know of in the world when it comes to dealing with South Africa is inside the White House — Ronald Reagan," said Dole. "If it's a powerful statement it will have a powerful impact, more than anything we (Congress) do."

Lugar said, "We've got to be more persuasive (with the South African government). We can do so through diplomacy. I would hold up the thought that we might do so through sanctions, through a combination of those with our allies."

However, he said he did not get the impression that Reagan was willing to consider even limited sanctions. "I don't think he's going to discuss the sanctions issue."

Kassebaum said she detected a willingness on Reagan's part to consider renewal and expansion of limited sanctions imposed on South Africa last year by Reagan. They expire Sept. 9.

Standing in the White House driveway, Dole said, "We're here as members of his party, suggesting that something needs to be done. I think we're the messengers."

Dole said he suggested appointment of a special envoy to South Africa.

Kassebaum said Reagan did not endorse legislation she has proposed that would prohibit new U.S. investment or bank loans in South Africa and terminate landing rights in America for South African planes.

have been slain in shootouts with police. The separatists have been fighting for years for an independent nation in three Basque-dominated provinces of northern Spain.

ETA has concentrated its attacks on civil guards, other policemen and military targets in Madrid and in the Basque country. The initials mean Basque Land and Liberty in the Basque language.

In Paris, a car bomb exploded early Monday outside the offices of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, breaking windows but injuring no one, police reported.

The French terrorist group Direct Action claimed responsibility. It was the fourth bombing in Paris claimed by the group this month, including one that killed an inspector at a police office.

Government spokesman Manuel
Moles said the 12 rockets were fired from a sedan double-parked on Manuel de Falla Street in northern Madrid, about 450 feet from the the ministry across the Paseo de la Castellana, one of the city's main thoroughfares.

He said four rockets hit parked cars, one hit a wall and ricocheted into a bus, and one failed to explode.

Moles said at the car bomb was detonated by remote control at 10:28 a.m., 15 minutes after the rockets were fired, and eight people were wounded by flying debris, including a policeman.

Museum group to submit proposal

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

Although at least one University professor would like to see a museum at K-State, "They ain't gonna do it because it's too good of an idea."

This is Patricia O'Brien's humorous, yet serious, way of saying the chance of K-State getting a museum is slim, or so it has seemed the past few years.

O'Brien, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, is a member of K-State's ad hoc Museum Committee. Several years ago, the committee drafted "A Proposal for a Museum of the Folk Arts of Pottery and Textiles."

O'Brien said the proposal was distributed to former president Duane Acker, University officials and college deans, but no action has been taken on the proposal.

K-State is the one of three Board of Regents institutions that does not have some type of museum, O'Brien said. Pittsburg State University and the Kansas Technical Institute in Salina are also without museums. The proposal outlines museum facilities open to the public at Regents institutions

The University of Kansas has three: art, natural history and anthropology. Wichita State University has two museums: art and anthropology. Fort Hays State University has a geological museum with an internationally famous collections of fossils from western Kansas. Emporia State University has a natural history museum. But K-State, the second largest university in the state, has

The proposal also includes sections on the benefits of having a museum, the rationale for a museum, a history of museums at K-State, the museum facility, museum collections, library, staff, exhibits and shows, book-gift shop and security.

The proposal states "museums are an integral part of the land-grant university in its mission to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes." Kansas State University, the first land-grant institution, has no museum with which to further the above stated goal, and it is herein proposed that Kansas State University create a 'Pottery and Textile Folk Arts Museum."

This type of museum was suggested in the proposal because K-State's Department of Clothing and Textiles has "extensive research collections of textiles and historic garments from all over the world." K-State also has ceramic collections that are housed within the Department of Art and the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work.

Angelo Garzio, professor of art, would donate his private collection of more than 450 pots to provide the core of the ceramic collections.

Burt Hall is the only existing campus building, according to the proposal, that meets the required criteria of museum standards and could realistically house the museum. "But," the proposal continues, "the ideal situation is to construct a museum specifically designed to house the collections it would hold. Two areas stand out for such a purpose: the vacant field east of Justin Hall and the president's home, and the old stadium just west of the Union."

No actual dollar amount for a budget was listed in the proposal, but items included in the budget include a staff, consisting of a director, curator of ceramics (half-time), curator of textiles (half-time), curator of art/director's assistant, preparator, sales clerk and University guard.

Cost for exhibit construction and changes in exhibits is estimated at $1,000 per month. National competitions held in the museum would award two first prizes at $500 and eight purchase prizes at $250.

O'Brien said she believes the proposal will be re-submitted to President Jon Wefald sometime in the near future.

Jazz Ensemble to play in Europe

By AMY CARROLL Collegian Reporter

Seventeen K-State jazz students will get the chance of a lifetime when they travel to Switzerland next July to play in the Montreux Jazz Festival.

These students will be the members of the 1986-87 K-State Concert Jazz Ensemble to be selected in the fall. According to Bill McFarlin, instructor of music and director of CJE, the group was selected to attend the noted jazz festival after submitting an audition tape of last year's group. # Community welcomes victims of ferry slasher

By The Associated Press

McPHERSON — A central Kansas couple who were injured earlier this month during an attack on a Staten Island ferry say the caring attitude of family, friends and strangers has helped ease the pain of the incident.

"We had a wonderful homecoming," Connie Nichols said Sunday of the people who gathered to greet the couple the day before when they arrived in McPherson. "There were two banners at the airport and signs when we got to our house. Gosh it's good to be home."

Nichols and her husband, Richard, were among nine people who were injured July 7 when a man carrying a sword attacked a group of people during a trip to see the refurbished Statue of Liberty. Two other people died in the attack that occurred one day after the end of the Liberty Weekend festivities.

Richard Nichols was the most seriously injured, suffering damage to his stomach and spleen. He spent 10 days in a Staten Island hospital, and his wife said he expects to spend nearly six more weeks recovering from his injuries.

"He is up and walking very slowly, but he really is doing well," she said during a telephone interview Sunday. "He has to spend the next two weeks at home and then he can slowly inch back into his work."

Richard Nichols is president of the McPherson State Bank and Trust Co., and Connie Nichols is employed by McPherson College. Workers and friends from both institutions were at the McPherson airport with banners to greet the Nicholses when they arrived Saturday.

Earlier in the day, the Nicholses met their children during a brief stop at the Kansas City International Airport.

ort.
Richard Nichols told his family that he was "a lucky boy." He said the pain of the attack had been eased by the concern expressed by hundreds of people in New York and Kansas.

"I'm sure it will always be with us," he said. "But it has been clothed in such a caring outpouring of warmth from everyone — people in Kansas, in New York, all over the country — that it has taken most all of the pain away."

After the greeting at the McPherson airport, the couple returned to their house, where they were greeted once again by family and friends. The couple's two mothers also were there.

"Like most mothers, the first thing they did was tell us to lie down and rest," Connie Nichols said. "While we were lying down we just kind of looked at each other and said 'Well, here we are resting in our room.' It was strange, but nice."

The Nicholses had another homecoming to celebrate Saturday. Their 5-month-old grandson, Evan, came home from a Kansas City hospital after suffering two heart attacks earlier this month. The Nicholses' son, Ron, and his wife, Candie, picked up their son after seeing the Nicholses at the Kansas City airport.

"Ron called us later and told us Evan was home," Connie Nichols said. "You see, everything has worked out so well for us. Life has been given back to us so many times."

She said she plans to start working this week, and the couple will spend their spare time going through hundreds of cards they have received.

"These cards have come from everywhere. You can't imagine the thrill it's been to see our life affirmed over and over," she said. "If we can spread that around a little, we feel privileged to do it."

Kedzie becomes wheelchair accessible

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

It's been a long time coming, but the first floor of Kedzie Hall will soon be accessible to individuals in wheelchairs.

Construction is nearly complete on the glass enclosure and chairlift being added to the east side of Kedzie, University officials said.

"It should be open for use by Aug. 8," said Jack Piper, project coordinator in Physical Facilities.

This is the first glass-enclosed addition for handicapped accessibility at K-State, said Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning. Glass was chosen over other materials because it was aesthetically pleasing, said Gretchen Holden, coordinator for Services for Students with Physical Limitations.

Installation of the glass enclosure has been completed, Piper said. Other construction still to be done includes extending a wooden platform to the chairlift location, installing the chairlift, laying floor tile, installing an outside metal railing and inside handrails, and installing lighting, Piper said.

Piper said.

Planning on the project started years ago, Holden said.

"Many of us had been considering this problem (of handicapped access into Kedzie) for several years," she said. "This was a very difficult solution to find because you not only have to get (the mobility impaired individual) into the building, but also must get to two levels on the main floor."

Holden said Bob Jackson, former director of Facilities Planning and now associate professor in the Department of Architecture, came up with the solution of a combination ramp-and-chairlift in that location shortly after he became director.

Construction on the project started with groundbreaking Feb. 24, Piper said.

"The biggest problem we encountered was that there was a 10-inch-thick, U-shaped concrete foundation under the slab outside the double doors," Piper said. "We only expected a small footing under the slab. It took us at least 10 days to jackhammer the foundation out. It was better than eight feet deep."

The foundation had to come out because the new footing for the addition had to go through that location and had to be six feet deep, Piper

Garvin said additional delays in construction were caused by disagreements between the University and the contractor concerning waterproofing details and glass specifications.

"The glass supplier took a long time to tell us he couldn't supply the glass specified and that he wanted to substitute another kind," Garvin said. "We originally specified safety glass, but the glass industry prefers to specify tempered glass."

The glass that was put into the addition is tempered glass and is tinted to reduce heat absorbtion, he said.

Garvin said small construction jobs like the project at Kedzie are actually harder to coordinate than large jobs.

"Where all the trades are involved, it's more difficult to use people's time efficiently on a small job," he said. Masons, sheetmetal workers, concrete finishers, glazers, and electricians were involved in the project, he said.

The handicapped accessibility addition cost $46,500, and funds were taken from "special maintenance" out of the University budget, Holden said. The addition is very important because it made one of the 11 large lecture rooms on campus, Kedzie 106, accessible, she said.

Another important point is that the previously inaccessible print journalism program will be partially accessible, she said. The Department of Journalism and Mass Communications' photography lab is located on the second floor and will still be inaccessible, she said.

Kedzie currently houses the journalism and political science departments, the South Asia Center, Student Publications Inc., and the K-State Printing Service.

After fleeing while movers left a door open, the Wefalds' dog, Tuffy, has been returned.

Ruth Ann Wefald said Tuffy was returned late Thursday after spending three days with two different Manhattan residents.

The 5-month-old toy poodle was found by a young boy in Aggieville and taken to his home at Flint Hills Place, Wefald said. Since pets are not allowed there, the dog was then given to the boy's auth, who had just moved to Manhattan from St. Louis. While the woman was looking in the want ads for employment, she ran across the Wefalds' lost dog announcement. The women called the Wefald home, confirmed the identification of the dog and received the $200 reward.

"We're delighted that our dog was returned, and that the reward money was needed by the people," Wefald said.

Grand jury indicts KU executive

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE - Richard L. Von Ende, executive secretary to the chancellor of the University of Kansas, on Tuesday was indicted by a federal grand jury in Kansas City, Kan., on six counts of conspiracy to distribute cocaine.

Von Ende, 43, and Dennis Barritt, president of the Westridge Construction Co. of Lawrence, were among 21 people named in federal indictments and state charges filed in Douglas County District Court.

By late Tuesday, 10 of the 21 had been arrested and some had made their first court appearances. They had bonds ranging from $10,000 to Von Ende had not been taken into custody, said Douglas County District Attorney Jim Flory. He said Von Ende was reported to be ill, though not hospitalized.

Von Ende is well-known in legislative circles as an influential lobbyist on behalf of the university and counts several key lawmakers among his closest friends.

However, Ben Burgess, U.S. attorney for Kansas, who announced the indictments and arrest with Flory at a news conference here, said there was no indication Von was involved in distribution of cocaine either to KU students or lawmakers or state officials in Topeka.

Also charged in the federal indictment with Von Ende were three other Lawrence residents: Michael

Candidate sees need for coordination in recruiting efforts

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Title

A more comprehensive university with a better sense of direction is what K-State should strive to become, said Robert Krause, candidate for vice president for institutional advancement.

Krause, director of student affairs for the Minnesota State University system, spoke to about 35 people at an open forum Tuesday morning in Union 212.

"This institution is at a point where it needs some coordination. It needs some direction," Krause said. He said he sees a lot of recruiting efforts going on, but not a lot of coordination among these efforts.

The statement, "K-State is the best-kept secret in Kansas" may be appropriate, he said.

"We (K-State) are a comprehensive university. We have a commitment to excellence," Krause said. "We can build on the good agricultural image we already have. We need to incorporate the pride that individual colleges have into a larger, corporate pride.'

Krause stressed the importance of communication, both within the University and with the media. He said people need to know the realities of what is going on, and that relationships with the media be candid and

"You can't run a closed shop at a public institution," Krause said. Concerning recruitment, Krause said it is important to determine the message K-State wants to convey. "We need a very focused effort, not a shotgun approach, when we recruit," he said. Research can greatly aid recruitment efforts, Krause said. It is important to see trends develop over porate thoughts and recommendations of K-State's staff into this research, he said.

Current K-State students could also play an active role in recruitment by working with New Student Programs, being campus tour guides and working with the Office of Admissions, he said. Students could also work in their own communities to inform prospective students about K-State.

Krause said when retention is focused on, it is important to analyze what is going on at K-State.

"There should be a flow from the first contact with students until they graduate. There should be ongoing contact from the time they show an interest," Krause said. There is a bonding process that occurs during a student's first three weeks at a university, he said. It is important new students be made to feel like

Student input about recruiting and retention efforts is necessary, Krause said, adding that these efforts need to be centralized.

Krause said he has a set of skills that qualifies him for the position of vice president for institutional ad-

"I have an external and internal understanding of administration," Krause said. "This is an important quality to bring to the position." He said he has a sense of timing that enables him to know when it is time to move ahead, time to lay back and time to act.

Saying that "administration is an art and not a science." Krause said he has the ability to quickly understand rules and how they work when dealing with administrative relations. He also said he can sense relationships among seemingly unrelated activities, citing the use of alumni-related affairs to help promote job placement opportunities as an example. Krause said he recognizes two facets of the position of vice president for institutional advancement: to promote a better understanding and awareness of the position, and to advance the University by identifying the people "who want to help advance the goals of our institution." Krause compared painting with watercolors to working in administration.

"You learn rules because you can't change them. You make a commitment and stick with it. You create with rules and look for relationships consistent with what statement you want to make.'

Krause cited several areas in which K-State could work to im-

Offering more service functions within the Office of Student Financial Assistance would enhance K-State's image. Krause said. K-State should develop a strategy to get more funding by evaluating funding formulas and asking what can be changed, he said.

K-State should have an obligation to tell students if they have a low probability of succeeding academically. K-State also has an obligation to provide resource sevices for these students, he said.

More concerted efforts could be made in the areas of graduate student recruitment and graduate student research projects.

Krause was the third candidate for the position of vice president for institutional advancement to speak at K-State. A fourth candidate, Edward Boehm, assistant vice chancellor for enrollment management and dean of admissions at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, will speak at a public forum at 10:30 a.m. Friday in Union 212.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan implored Congress and America's allies Tuesday to resist the "emotional clamor" for sanctions against South Africa and urged the white-ruled government there to fix a timetable for abolishing its system of segregation that has plunged the country into crisis.

"We and our allies cannot dictate to the government of a sovereign nation, nor should we try," Reagan said in a speech that firmly rejected demands from Democrats and many Republicans in Congress for a tougher policy toward South Africa. His White House audience consisted of foreign policy experts and some members of Congress.

Western nations should not cut off economic ties with South Africa but should become more deeply involved in its business community so they can serve "as agents of change and progess and growth," the president

"As one African leader remarked recently, Southern Africa is like a zebra," Reagan cautioned. "If the white parts are injured, the black parts will die too.

"Those who tell us the moral thing to do today is embargo the South African economy and write off South Africa should tell us exactly what they believe will rise in its place," the president said. "What foreign power would fill the vacuum if ties with the West are broken?" And he denounced South Africa's system of rigid racial segregation as 'morally wrong and politically unacceptable" but praised the government of President P.W. Botha for his

Most of the time there are no true monsters in this world of ours, but as you learn in "Aliens - The New Movie," that isn't always the way it is in the world of science fic-

Film Review

Once again, the monsters of the original "Alien" haunt human dreams and terrify even the most stalwart of moviegoers.

Those of us who are even a little bit squeamish ought to think twice about seeing this one (I know I had to). But if you saw the first "Alien," you really have to see the second one. And if you haven't seen the first one, "Aliens" is an excellent science fiction drama that stands on its own.

This sequel isn't quite as gory as the original and isn't quite as abruptly terrifying. It is suspenseful and intense, wellwritten and well-acted, and also satisfying as a science fiction story. It is also violent and has the language you would expect in a R-rated movie.

Director James Cameron (director of "The Terminator") has created a believable means of bringing the terror of the aliens back into our movie-viewing lives. The special effects (and aliens) are spectacular without being over-

"The Terminator" has to have been one of the better science fiction plots in a long time — just from the standpoint of the story, even if you didn't care for the acting — and Cameron has brought that same believeability and excellent storyline to "Aliens." Sigourney Weaver reprises her role as Ripley, the sole human survivor of the original "Alien." Weaver is as intense in this actionpacked sequel as she was in the

Ripley is the only one who knows and understands the danger of the aliens. The company that sent the Nostromo spaceship to find the aliens blames her for the loss of her ship and crew. She is demoted and shunned by those who should recognize her courage and tenacity to stay alive.

After 50 years in hyper-sleep, Ripley is at first extremely reluctant to brave the wilds of deep space again. But during those 50 years, the planet on which the aliens were first discovered has been colonized and now contact with the colony has been severed.

Should Ripley assist the company with a rescue attempt, complete with an elite group of Marines, or should she stay where it's safe? After all, she still wakes in the middle of the night, sweating and screaming. Why should she place herself in that situation again for a company that rejects her story and for people she has never seen?

Weaver portrays the courageous Ripley with conviction and just the right amount of terror and frustration to make her a very believable heroine. Ripley shows the meaning of true courage by being able to face what she knows is almost certain death.

The group of Marines is a splendid mixture of personalities and people. The movie shows the superb training this group of men and women has gone through and the possible future of present-day armed forces. The group is well cast and will poignantly make you realize the loss of each individual.

The entire cast creates a real look into the ways humans react in the face of unknown terror and danger. Even after the soldiers know what they are facing, they still manage to maintain their training, courage and wit to fight back.

Michael Biehn ("The Terminator" and "Hill Street Blues") is Hicks, a quiet, unassuming type who seems to be particularly in tune with Ripley. He eventually has to assume command of the group and the situation, although Ripley is the ultimate answer to the question of survival.

The quick glimpses of humor only highlight the shock of the terror facing the characters, but it is an excellent means of showing human stubbornness to stay alive.

"Aliens - The New Movie" may not be your idea of entertainment, but critics are acclaiming the movie with ratings of four stars or nines on a scale of 10.

"Aliens" is an excellent movie choice, although I would recommend going to an early showing so the sun is still shining.

Professor researches genetics

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Robin Denell, professor in the Division of Biology, was recently awarded separate grants from the National Science Foundation and the American Cancer Society to continue research on the genetic development of the fruit fly.

Denell said fruit flies have been used in genetic research since the turn of the century because they are a highly developed laboratory organism.

"The fruit fly is now one of the most specialized and useful systems for studying genetics that is available," Denell said. "People generally try to study phenomena in the fruit fly that should be common to all organisms, including humans." The $88,000 one-year grant from the National Science Foundation will enable Denell to continue his work on an ongoing project the foundation has supported for 14 years.

Denell is interested in particular kinds of genetic variations called homeotic mutations. These mutations cause parts of the body to form essentially the wrong structure in a particular place. For example, a mutation called Antennapedia causes a leg to grow where an antennae should be.

Homeotic mutations are rare in humans, probably because the mutations cause death before birth. Because developmental events from the early embryo to the adult stage can be studied in the fruit fly, the organism can be used to examine the effects of the most extreme mutations resulting in early death, Denell

"It is now quite clear that looking at homeotic mutations gives us a clue to the genes that control developmental pathways, which is what we're really interested in studying," Denell said.

There are two approaches to study Denell and his staff are using. The first is to make and mutations and analyze their development and their genetics.

The second is to look at the genes themselves and the way they function on a molecular level, and to understand how they cause other specific cells to create a particular structure, such as a wing or a leg.

awarded Denell a one-year $75,000 grant to continue a project it has supported for two years.

The American Cancer Society

"In this case, we're interested in using the genetic advantages of the fruit fly to study the mechanisms by which genetic changes cause tumors. It is now known that many types of tumors are caused by genetic changes," Denell said.

He said he is able to make mutations which will lead predictably to certain tumors, which are similar in many ways to tumors that occur in mammals and human beings. He is interested in kinds of mutations which affect certain tissues.

"The most promising set of mutations we have affects the immune system of the fruit fly. At the moment, the evidence indicates that these mutations cause abnormal proliferation of the blood cells associated with the immune system. This is something that is at least remotely analogous to leukemia in human beings," Denell said.

Campus career center faces budget reduction

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

The Career Planning and Placement Center could be operating with an $8,000 to $10,000 deficit by the end of the spring semester 1987, said Bruce Laughlin, director of the center.

"The time may be rapidly approaching when we may have to start charging for some of our services," he said. "We're trying to figure how to survive financially during the current fiscal year."

His concern was prompted by the near-$6,000 cut in operating expenses the center suffered in its 1987 operating budget. In 1986 the budget was $42,226. For 1987, the budget was cut to $36,248.

These figures comprise the center's "student expenditures" fund - the amount allocated for hiring student employees - and its other operating expenditures.

Laughlin said the center had anticipated the budget problem. But even though the center knew about the cuts in advance it was already operating on an tight budget. The center has been taking measures to reduce the costs of running the office such as buying stationery in bulk. But those measures are not enough.

'We can't keep going on providing the services we've had when our budget is cut. Our cost-cutting options are about exhausted," he said. At this time, the center's choices are either to reduce services or raise

One method of raising revenue would entail charging students for

The center offers students services such as career counseling, oncampus employment interviews and employer information and contacts. The center also acts as a career resource center.

Currently, the center does not charge students for its services. However, it has been inviting employers who conduct on-campus interviews to send contributions with their requests for data sheets, Laughlin said. The data sheets are filled out by students and used by employers to select interview subiects.

Some companies believe this is 'sub-professional," Laughlin said. However, many know why it is nec-

He said those employers are aware they are getting a good service and are used to paying fees to professional employment agencies. Although the center has been reuesting contributions, Laughlin does not believe the companies should be paying a substantial portion of the center's operating costs. "We don't want to be motivated in the direction of serving only those who pay us," Laughlin said. He said those who pay the most might expect special treatment. Whichever direction the center takes - either a reduction of services or raising revenue - it will need to do more research to find what other universities in the same situation are doing, he said. In the meantime, students should think about which services they would be most willing to give up and which they would be most willing to pay for, he said.

The center will try to resolve the issue by Jan. 1, he said. With a new vice president for institutional advancement to be named by the end of the month, Laughlin said he believes there is a possibility for reallocation of services or funds to the center.

naire to fill out. Questions concerning how "flirty" one thought the other to be were "hidden" among the other items in the questionnaire. Each pair was also watched by observers.

In all, the results of the 97 male and the 110 female observers plus the results of the questionnaires given to the 49 pairs found that the men thought the women were being more sexy, seductive and flirtatious than the women thought they were, Saal

In the second study, Saal chose a local department store as the location to shoot a videotape. An actor and actress were used to pose as a male boss and a newly hired female employee. In the videotape, the boss is teaching the new employee to use the cash register. The script, Saal said, was written to be as boring and asexual as possible.

The 88 males and 75 females shown the videotape were told it would be used for training new employees how to operate the registers. Again, from the results of the viewers' opinions, the males misread the actions of the female in the videotape, Saal said. The actions of the actress were perceived by the men in the study as being more sexy and flirtatious. The third experiment moved the setting of the videotape from the department store into the classroom. The videotape of a situation where a young woman asked for an extension on a term paper deadline yielded the same results as the two previous studies, Saal said.

There is a significant difference between men and women on the perceptions of sexual motives of each gender, he said. One reason is that many men have not communicated with women outside of a dating situation.

This creates a problem when a man is required to communicate with a woman in the workplace and/or the academic setting. The problem is heightened when a man ends up talking and communicating with a woman as if she were a date.

Another reason is that in the media women are portrayed in a sexual way. Men see women's actions in sexual ways in advertisements and then apply these sexual stereotypes to real-life situations.

The male ego may also play a part in this problem of sexual perception,

One of McCain Auditorium's main attractions for the 1986-87 season has cancelled its United States tour, said Richard Diehl, director of the auditorium.

The Cologne Radio Orchestra, under the direction of Gary Bertini, was to perform at McCain Nov. 6 but had to cancel its tour because of insufficient funding, Diehl said.

Scheduled to replace the Cologne Radio Orchestra is the Denver Symphony Orchestra, which will be at McCain at 8 p.m. Nov. 4. Pianist Andre-Michel Schub, who was to perform with the Cologne Radio Orchestra, has been retained and will play with the Denver orchestra, Diehl said.

The McCain director said patrons who have ordered tickets for the Cologne Radio Orchestra will receive tickets for the Denver Symphony instead. People who have a conflict with this change can return their tickets for a refund after Sept. 1. Diehl said tickets are still available.

The Denver Symphony Or-

NAIA requires colleges to develop drug education, screening program

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Colleges belonging to the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics must adopt a drug education and screening program for their athletes by the end of this year, the NAIA announced Tuesday.

While the screening program is directed specifically at illegal drugs, the policy adopted at a meeting of the NAIA's Executive Committee and Council of Presidents last week also urges schools to inform athletes of the dangers of alcohol and tobacco and discourage their use.

The NAIA's Policy on Substance Abuse says the organization "is concerned about and resolved to support definitive actions designed to assist student athletes striving to cope with escalating substance abuse problems in our society. These substance abuses center on drug use, alcohol, tobacco and smokeless tobacco."

By Jan. 1, the 480 institutions which belong to the NAIA must submit a philosophy statement outlining their position on drug abuse and describing their method of educating athletes on the problem and screening them for use.

The member schools set their own guidelines, but must have screened all athletes by Jan. 1, 1988, and must outline procedures to be taken if drug tests are positive.

By May 31 each year, schools must file annual reports describing results of their drug education and screening. The NAIA staff, working with the Medical Aspects of Sports Committee, will review this material to prepare a report and recommendations to the President's Council and the Executive Committee.

Glickman criticizes licensing of Wolf Creek

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rep. Dan Glickman sharply criticized the Nuclear Regulatory Commission on Tuesday, saying it had "swept a few things under the rug" in licensing the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant in Kansas.

Glickman, a Wichita Democrat and past critic of the NRC, contended that the agency mishandled worker allegations of problems at Wolf Creek and failed to promptly review the "Quality First" program formed by the plant's utility owners to internally investigate questions of safety and wrongdoing raised by employees.

The fifth-term congressman delivered his criticisms during testimony before the House Interior subcommittee on energy and the environment. He spoke in support of legislation to establish an independent inspector general's office within the NRC to replace the agency's current investigatory arm.

"My experience with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has left me less than confident in the NRC's ability and commitment to carry out its regulatory responsibilities," Glickman said in his testimony. "Its diligence in responding to questions potentially affecting safety is neither timely nor adequate."

Lando Zech, chairman of the NRC, took issue with Glickman's statements. "We have a lot of integrity in the licensing process," Zech told the sub-committee. "We do take safety very seriously. We have a group of professionals who are dedicating their lives to...their fellow Americans and the safety of nuclear power."

Glickman's criticisms about the NRC's handling of Wolf Creek focused mostly on allegations of harassment of employees, falsification of documents and drug use at the plant site — all which were reported to Kansas Gas and Electric Co., the plant's utility operator, through the Quality First program.

Many of the allegations were brought to the attention of the NRC in May 1985, by two watchdog groups, the Washington-based Government Accountability Project and the Kansas-based Nuclear Awareness Network.

The NRC approved a full-power operating license for Wolf Creek on June 3, 1985, after reviewing files of the Quality First program and concluding that there were no unresolved safety issues involved in the allegations.

Glickman, however, described the Wolf Creek licensing procedure as an abomination

"We need some form of outside pressure keeping a watchful eyes on these guys during the licensing process," said Glickman. "We need nuclear power, but we need integrity in the licensing process. I don't think we have it." Glickman released two NRC documents, one from November 1984 and one from December 1984, that pointed out deficiencies in the Quality First program. The documents raised questions that "warranted immediate and further review, investigation and mitigation," he said.

"To my knowledge, that did not occur. Instead, these concerns were swept under the rug, only to be aired again in the days and hours before the full-power license was issued last June," said Glickman.

The NRC opened another investigation last month into the Quality First program, according to Glickman. The agency authorized the probe in January but it was not started for six months.

In general, Glickman said the NRC's handling of the Quality First program and licensing of Wolf Creek testified to the need for an independent investigator within the regulatory agency.

This was not the first time Glickman has criticized the NRC. Last March, he complained that the agency was not quickly resolving allegations of falsified and missing records at the plant.

In the wake of the Chernobyl nuclear plant accident in the Soviet Union in April, Glickman said Congress should review the adequacy of the NRC and he described the agency as a "pretty weak watchdog."

Health, nutrition differences continue

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

In our health-conscious society, the controversy between nutritionists and health food users continues. Two major issues are the use of vitamin and mineral supplements and methods of weight loss.

Jeanne Dray, project director of the ABCs of Nutrition Education at K-State, said the average person can get all the nutrients needed from the foods he eats and doesn't need a vitamin or mineral suppliment.

"There are cases where a supplement is appropriate," Dray said, noting "certain people who don't eat a balanced diet can benefit from them."

But Don Stillings, owner of said.

Manhattan Health Foods, has a different opinion.

"People can't get all the nutrients they need from the food they eat. The soil in this country is so depleted and the crops are in such poor health that the food we eat doesn't contain all the vitamins and minerals we need," Stillings said.

"Because of the processing and long shelf-life of food in grocery stores, the vitamins and minerals get lost," said Larry Hansen, owner of Hansen Nutrition Center. "Unless you grow all your own food, your diet in probably deficient in some way."

By taking into consideration a person's eating habits and lifestyle, it can be determined what vitamins and minerals are needed, Stillings

Both Stillings and Hansen stock a wide range of natural vitamin and mineral suppliments.

"Ninety-nine percent of my job is education," Stillings said. "I show customers reprints of articles and clinical studies and let them decide for themselves."

Weight loss has become a big issue in America, Dray said. She spends one-half day a week counseling people on weight regulation.

Using a manual titled "The Diet," Dray teaches sound nutrition and food knowledge. The nine-part manual was written by the Department of Foods and Nutrition to help people change their eating habits over time, Dray said.

Stillings sells three different types of products to people wanting to lose weigh

"There are three ways to lose weight," he said. "One is to take something to curb your appetite. Another is to fill up before the meal so you don't eat as much. The other is to take a meal replacement.

"These are low-calorie, highprotein drinks to be substituted for one or two meals a day," Stillings

Stillings said Manhattan is not a good market for health foods and vitamin supplements.

Across the country, health food store customers account for only about 6 percent of the population, Stillings said.

"Most of the people are interested in living as good of a life as long as they can," Stillings said.

KSDB to replace NPR news show

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

When the Corporation for Public Broadcasting changed a few of its policies, KSDB-FM 88.1 lost the right to use National Public Radio.

NPR is a national non-profit broadcasting service out of Washington, D.C. Among other shows, NPR broadcasts the "All Things Considered" news pro-

In the past, KSDB has used the NPR broadcastings through a verbal agreement with KKSU-AM

"It's a whole new system starting this fiscal year," said Jack Burke, head of the Department of Extension Radio, Television and Film.

"Money from the corporation used to go directly to NPR. They had the money to produce programs, regardless," Burke said. "Now we have a whole new way of doing business. Station money is involved."

To do business with NPR, a station must qualify through the CPB. "We (KKSU) are an NPR station," Burke said.

Previously, KSDB used the service when KKSU was not using it. But now KSDB would have to qualify for the service by becoming an affiliate station with KKSU.

KSU. Things Considered" pro KSDB would have to serve 75 from 4 to 5 p.m. weekdays.

percent of KKSU's broadcasting. This would probably not be an appropriate alternative because the stations serve two separate audiences, Burke said.

Money for the NPR service used to go directly from the corporation to NPR. Now the grants from the corporation go directly to the stations, Burke said. "The thing they (KSDB) miss the most is the 'Morning Edition,'" Burke said.

"I think they were or had been negotiating for another news service," Burke said.

According to Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and faculty adviser for KSDB, the FM station would carry CNN Radio news daily in place of the NPR program.

CNN will be part of the station's regular broadcast starting Sept.

1. It will air a five-minute newscast at the top of every hour. In addition, CNN will give a sports newscast and a business newscast twice every morning and twice every afternoon.

KKSU broadcasts from 12:30 to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. It has been a share-time station with WIBW 580 Radio in Topeka since 1929. KSDB was able to use NPR when KKSU was not broadcasting.

KKSU broadcasts the NPR "All Things Considered" program from 4 to 5 p.m. weekdays.

Brief articles, essays, diagrams, excerpts from medical journals, and Q. and A. columns are the menu of many of them. Others limit their efforts to single topics, rare disorders and obscure data. Almost all claim their purpose is to provide readers with reliable information and to correct misconceptions.

University-based letters set themselves apart with heavyweight advisory boards loaded with M.D.s and Ph.D.s, most of whom work directly with the publications or are on hand with backup expertise. This lends these newsletters credibility, and they tend to be a bit more cir-cumspect than some of the unaffiliated letters.

The second main class of health letters are supported by subscription revenue for profit. Some have rounded up their own impressive advisory boards.

A third category of health newsletters — often free for the asking give readers tips and information on diseases and conditions. Some of these are published by clinics, hospitals and prepaid group practices to keep their patients abreast of

Nolting's resignation leaves gap

Although he may not have had one of the most visible posts at the University, the announced resignation of Earl Nolting, dean of students, presents a gap in services that may be hard to fill.

Nolting's position is perhaps one of the most difficult to define, due to the wide variety of duties, often invoked during emergen-

He not only had to deal with students in difficult positions, such as in disciplinary cases, but also with the University community, students, their families and friends in case of tragedy.

In cases of serious accidents and death, Nolting was the person contacting all those he felt should be notified immediately, such as the student's deans and relatives.

If one was not able to contact him by telephone, it was probably because he was out working, not because he did not want to communicate.

Nolting, whose last official day at K-State is set for Aug. 15, will be moving to the University of Minnesota for an advanced administrative post.

With his drive, he will probably serve that community successfully also.

During Nolting's 12 years at K-State many families and students probably found a humane side to the bureaucracy at this institution through their contact with him. We wish him well in his endeavors.

Red scare rampant

Editor,

In Tim Verschelden's letter in the July 16 issue of the Collegian he puts forward some important things to consider - mainly, what will the Sandinistas do if allowed to stabilize Nicaragua into a coherent government and social system?

Indeed, logically, the possibility exists that the Sandinistas could venture militarily into neighboring Central American countries. But how can we predict this with any degree of certainty? To do so is, if not irrational, extremely unfair, and only heightens the new "Red scare" syndrome running through American politics and American minds these

I pointed out in a guest column a few weeks back that in my estimation, the United States is on a collision course with direct military involvement in Nicaragua due to the passing of the Contra-aid bill.

Since no amount of funding will help the weak Contra forces to actually overthrow the Sandinista government, there will be no other alternative.

But let's say things were to go a different route. Let's say the Sandinistas establish a stronghold in Nicaragua, then begin to overstep their boundaries into other Central American countries. Then, and only then, might the U.S. government have reason to fear the Sandinistas as the power-hungry expansionist demons they already accuse them of being without evidence. And only at such a time should military intervention be considered.

Censoring should be parent's duty

Rock 'n' roll has always been a center of controversy for religious zealots, and it produces plenty of things for critics to complain about, but the fact remains that it is a part of culture and that it rides on the outer edge of what our society finds acceptable.

Recent events have pushed the music industry to its own edge, yet it is still holding its ground.

Last fall, some household names in the music industry squared off against the Parent's Music Resource Center during a Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation to debate about rock lyrics.

In less than five months, the women of the PMRC took their crusade against explicit rock lyrics from a church meeting to the media and then to Capitol Hill.

Basically, what the PMRC wanted the record industry to do is to monitor artists and rate records for lyrical content. Albums deemed to be sexually explicit or promoting violence, rape, suicide or drug abuse would need to be rated.

The members of the PMRC insist they are not enacting censorship, but attempting to alert parents as to the albums they think contain explicit material.

Rating records is most certainly a form of censorship. According to the editors of Rolling Stone magazine, "the PMRC knows that to label a record R for "restricted" would force distributors and retailers to think twice about carrying it. Chain stores that operate primarily in shopping malls would certainly refuse to do so.'

That statement has just been converted to fact last week when officials for Wal-Mart stores announced that the chain store would no longer sell rock 'n' roll magazines and record albums.

It is obvious that the pressures put on Wal-Mart by groups like the PMRC and religious leaders like Jimmy Swaggart (who, by the ing fire against rock 'n' roll.

SCOTT SEWELL Staff Writer

way, is a cousin of Jerry Lee Lewis and Mickey Gilley), have most certainly had an

A 22-year-old man died of a broken neck after a fall at a Ozzy Osbourne concert in Long Beach and four other people were injured when they jumped from the arena balcony to the ground-level seats.

For those fanatics who are convinced that rock 'n' roll has a corruptive influence on our society, the incident at the Ozzy Osbourne concert generates even more anxiety about what listening to the music does to an individual.

If the death had occurred at the internationally televised Live-Aid concert, most people would have thought of the fall as just a tragic accident.

But the fact that it occured at an Ozzy Osbourne concert may have caused even the most liberal music listeners to suspect that the hard-driving, reckless division of rock 'n' roll known as heavy metal was the culprit.

Admittedly, Ozzy Osbourne is not an ideal role model for the youth of today, (it is rumored that he once bit off the head of a live bat on stage) but should he, and other rock 'n' roll artists be held accountable for the problems of the young people of today?

It seems that the only sensible answer is Sure, some heavy-metal groups seem to go out of their way to glorify destruction and violence in their music, but most, including Osbourne, rely on the music's energy and theatrical imagery to fulfill the audience's appetite. Some of the groups that seem to be promoting reckless behavior are actually warning against it.

Besides, most fans of heavy-metal are able to see through the theatrics, the outlandish characters and the lights and consequently take the concerts no more seriously than te latest "Friday The 13th" movie to come out. How can young, impressionable minds dissect all the events in rock 'n' roll in order to come to such a conclusion?

The basic issue regarding censorship of rock 'n' roll is that the responsibility lies on the shoulders of parents. Parents should monitor or censor their own child's choice of music and not be influenced by a small group of so-called "concerned" parents. Parents are able to withhold money the children may want to spend on albums or concerts.

The most crucial aspect governing behavior of fans of rock 'n' roll is not what the artists give to the fans, but what attitudes and values the fans have. The most important door a fan walks through on the night of a concert isn't the door of the concert hall, but the door of his or her home As stated earlier, rock 'n' roll has always pushed society to its limits. Because of this, there will be those who will listen to and enjoy rock 'n' roll, and there will be those who will oppose it and try to censor it. Let's just hope that whatever direction rock 'n' roll takes, we are allowed to make up our own minds about whether or not we want to follow.

House impeachment vote first in 50 years WASHINGTON - The House, taking its first impeachment vote in 50 years, unanimously recommended on Tuesday the ouster of a federal judge who refuses to resign and is still drawing his salary while serving prison time for tax evasion.

The 14th impeachment vote in House history sent the case of Harry E. Claiborne to the Senate for trial. Conviction there would remove Claiborne from his lifetime appointment as chief U.S. district judge in Nevada and possibly bar him from any further federal employment.

Even in advance of the 406-0 yote in the House, the Senate put itself a timetable that could lead to Claiborne being stripped of his position by fall.

In the closing minutes of a "debate" in which no member rose to the judge's defense, Rep. George Gekas, R-Pa., said Claiborne "mocks us" and is "laughing at Earlier, veterans of the impeachment effort against former President Nixon a dozen years ago urged support for impeachment to stop Claiborne from returning to the bench and continuing to collect his salary.

House Judiciary Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., said that Claiborne is sitting in prison "while retaining many of the incidents and emoluments of the office which he has disgraced.'

He said confidence in the judiciary would be gravely jeopardized if Claiborne is not removed. Rodino pointed out that judges are the only federal officers serving life terms, but in return must meet "the most exacting standard of public and private

Contests require free entry, Stephan says

TOPEKA - Any contest which requires participants to purchase a newspaper to obtain an entry form before they can win prizes is an illegal lottery under Kansas law, Attorney General Robert T. Stephan said Tuesday.

In a legal opinion, Stephan told Linda Trigg, Seward County attorney, that a contest conducted in the Liberal Southwest Daily Times was illegal if it had no provisions for entry other than buying a copy of the paper to obtain a coupon.

However, an advertisement for the contest supplied to Stephan's office by Trigg stated that "no purchase is necessary to register" to enter the contest. The newspaper was giving away a free automobile in celebration of its 100th anniversary in conjunction with a local car dealer.

James S. Head, publisher of the Daily Times, said Tuesday thousands of the coupons were available free of charge in the newspaper office, the automobile dealer and around town.

"No purchase of any product or of the Times was necessary to register," Head said. "The contest was open to the public, anyone 18 years and older. Everyone was invited to register. This notice appeared in the paper and in radio spots.'

Neil Woerman, special assistant to Stephan, said that if free entry coupons were available at convenient locations in Liberal as the advertisement stated, the contest was completely legal PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia - Martina Navratilova blew away China's Xinyi Li, then blew kisses to the crowd at she ended an 11-year-long chapter in her life Tuesday at the Federation Cup.

Navratilova's 6-1, 6-0 victory over China's top women's player was her first match in Czechoslovakia since she defected to the United States in 1975. This trip is her first time back since then, and the crowd that overflowed the No. 1 court at Stvanice Tennis Stadium cheered her every shot.

The victory and the welcome enabled Navratilova to end an unsettled era in her

"It was emotional, but it was happy emotion," she said. "It was like a chapter in my life that I am finally able to finish. It's been open for a long time.'

The victories by Navratilova over Xinyi and Zina Garrison, 6-3, 6-2 over Ni Zhong, enabled the United States to advance to the second round of the national-team, single-elimination tournament that is the women's tennis equivalent of the Davis

Navratilova and Pam Shriver then completed the three-match sweep with a 6-2, 6-0 victory in doubles over Lilan Duan and Xiufen Pu.

"This is a team sport, and I'm on the American team," said Navratilova, who received her citizenship in 1981. "I'm an American and I won for America." The United States, the top seed, will face Spain in the second round Wednesday. The Spaniards eliminated Indofesia on Tuesday.

Howser's tumor malignant

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A malignant tumor was partially removed Tuesday from the brain of Dick Howser, manager of the Kansas City Royals, in a three-hour operation, doctors said.

Howser, 50, was alert following the surgey at St. Luke's Hospital, said Dr. Charles Clough, the neurosurgeon who performed the operation.

Dr. Paul Meyer, the Royals' team physician who assisted in the operation, confirmed the tumor was malignant and said that only part of it was removed for fear of damaging the brain.

Meyer said future treatment will not be known until the exact nature of the tumor is diagnosed. Doctors earlier had said the tumor was approximately the size of a golf ball.

"We encountered a tumor in his left frontal lobe, cystic in nature," Clough said in a statement he read to newsmen. "This tumor appeared to be a type of tumor called

Royals grieve over Howser's news

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE - The Kansas City Royals took the field Tuesday night faced with the difficult task of blocking out the news that Manager Dick Howser has a malignant brain

"With this, or with any other problem, you don't take it out there with you," pitcher Dennis Leonard said. "There's time to reflect on things like that before or after the game." But, Leonard conceded, "it's in the back of everybody's mind.'

That's his nature and his spirit." Interim Manager Mike Ferraro broke down while talking with reporters in describing the impact of the news relayed by Schuerholz.

"A few of the heads hung down," Ferraro said, "probably in disbelief.

Police arrest guerrilla forces

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa Police captured African National Congress guerrillas suspected of involvement in deadly attacks around Durban and seized hidden weapons and explosives, the government said Tuesday.

Law and Order Minister Louis le Grange said the arrests were an important breakthrough in the campaign against the outlawed ANC, the main guerrilla movement fighting to overthrow the government. He did not disclose when the arrests were made or how many suspects were captured.

Le Grange said interrogation of people detained under the June 12 emergency decree "proved invaluable during the investigation." The decree allows security forces to arrest anyone without warrant if necessary to maintain public

British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe was to arrive today to meet President P.W. Botha. Howe said he hoped to also see black anti-apartheid leaders as part of his peace initiative on behalf of the European Common Market.

The United Democratic Front, the nation's largest anti-apartheid movement, said it would not meet with Howe and described the trip as a tactic to delay imposing economic sanctions against the government. With thousands of activists in jail, detention or hiding, "Who is Sir Geoffrey Howe going to talk to?" the group said in a memorandum to European em-

Le Grange said the ANC suspects were held in connection with nine attacks in Durban since March, including a car bomb explosion that killed three people and wounded 69 on June 14. The Indian Ocean port has been the main target for sabotage blasts in recent

Apartheid foes promise fight despite Reagan's veto threats

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Backers of economic sanctions against South Africa said Tuesday they have strong bipartisan support to adopt them despite President Reagan's plea that no action be taken and his threat to veto punitive legislation.

And they said that in refusing to consider a tough sanctions plicy in a White House speech earlier in the day, the president made the U.S. government a defender of white-run South Africa's apartheid system of racial separation.

"Today, President Reagan declared the United States and Great Britain co-guarantors of apartheid," Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., one of the leading House supporters of tough sanctions, said in the text of a televised response to the president's address on South Africa.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy,

"hope and sustenance to the forces of apartheid.' 'The president's statement is not only a disappointment but a disaster," Kennedy said. Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., said the speech represented a thoroughgoing defense of Reagan's "constructive engagement" policy and contained "nothing new."

"I would say there is very strong support for the toughest of sanctions," Weicker said.

He said it is now clear the Senate will vote on a sanctions bill, adopt tough measures and preserve them by overriding a presidential veto.

But Kennedy, who said there may be support not just for a middle-ofthe-road sanctions package but for complete U.S. business disinvestment in South Africa, predicted that overriding a veto may not be necessary

"I predict that the president will hear the American people on this issue and see the wisdom of reversing his position and hopefully sign this legislation," he said.

But for the moment, Kennedy said, it is clear that Reagan "continues to embrace a failed, flawed, bankrupt policy that has brought America into disrepute in southern Africa.

In the House, Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, said Reagan's speech contained "nothing new" but reaffirmed his position "as our nation's leading apologist for the Botha regime" in South Africa.

Leland said he and caucus

D-Mass., said Reagan has given members are "appalled that this president has placed America on the wrong side of history. At a news conference in Washington, civil rights leader Jesse Jackson called Reagan's speech an apologetic step backward. "The president is being unresponsive to the people of the United States and the people of South Africa," Jackson said. Jackson called for total U.S. disinvestment from South Africa and will try to force the resignation of Chester Crocker, the assistant secretary of state for African affairs, who was a chief architect of the constructive engagement policy.

Even some of Reagan's staunchest supporters on Capitol Hill voiced reservations over his South Africa policy, although some said sanctions are a bad idea

Rep. William Broomfield, R-Mich. the ranking GOP member on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he had hoped Reagan would have set a "definite timetable" for the ending of apartheid with a deadline for results.

"The president was correct when he said that more and more South Africans have come to recognize that change is essential for survival," Broomfield said. "But unless the Botha government acts quickly, that realization may be too late.

Broomfield said he agreed with Reagan, however, that "sanctions would not only destroy America's leverage but open the door to the disaster we are trying to prevent in South Africa."

Cocaine

Kiefer, 24; Robert L. Parker, 31; and Christopher Clark, 24.

Von Ende, Parker and Kiefer were charged with distributing 6.7 grams of cocaine last February. Parker also was charged in a separate count of distributing four grams of cocaine on a separate occassion.

Clark was charged with cocaine and distributing methylenedioxy methamphetamine, commonly known as MDMA, which Flory called "one of the new designer drugs.

The indictments and arrests resulted from a months-long investigation involving the federal Drug Enforcement Administration, the Lawrence police department and the Douglas and Johnson County sheriff's offices.

All the cases made so far stemmed from cocaine and MDMA buys made by undercover agents, Burgess said. He said agents bought 15 ounces of cocaine at a cost of $26,000 during the investigation.

No wiretaps were involved in making the cases, he said.

Burgess said the investigation has produced additional leads which will be followed up. "It's an open investigation. I can assure you we will be relentless to bring all of those individuals involved to justice," he told a large news conference at the Douglas County judicial-law enforcement center. Burgess said the arrest of a person of the stature of Von Ende did not mean law enforcement was trying to make examples in its crackdown on

"We're not singling out prominent people as such," he said.

Flory said there was no evidence that Von Ende supplied cocaine to anyone in Topeka, where he was a familiar figure during legislative

He estimated that 30 percent to 40 percent of those indicted and arrested had "some connection" with the university, mostly students or former students.

Burgess said he "would hesitate to call it a drug ring." He said most of those charged knew each other socially, so it wasn't a case of dealers distributing to strangers for profit.

"The conspiracy charges reflect that Von Ende got the cocaine from...a supplier," Burgess said. "To label Mr. Von Enge as a ringleader or anything other than a distributor (would be wrong). He conspired and did distribute cocaine on at least three occasions.'

Von Ende was charged in one indictment with two counts of conspiracy and two counts alleging he distribute cocaine. In another indictment, he was charged with one count each of conspiracy and distribution.

Burgess said Von Enge "emerged at an early stage as a key suspect." He rejected any suggestion that Von Ende's alleged involvement meant the KU administration was infiltrated by drug dealers. 'The fact he's assistant to the chancellor is just coincidence," Burgess said. "There is no indication he used his position in any way to commit these alleged crimes. He acted as an individual. Robin Eversole, director of KU's office of university relations, said:

"We are distressed that one of our staff members has been indicted. under our criminal justice system, people are presumed innocent until the charges against them are pro-

She said Von Ende has been on sick leave for the past several weeks and was on sick leave Tuesday. She said she did not know the nature of his ail-

She said there KU Chancellor Gene Budig would have no comment, and that her statement constituted the university's official reaction.

Eversole said she had consulted with unspecified high-level university officials before releasing her statement

When asked if she was shocked, she said, "I'd rather not discuss my personal feelings about it."

Burgess said federal warrants had been issued for the arrest of Von Ende and the other persons indicted by the grand jury and he expected them to be executed within a day or

Flory said the arrests should make a significant dent in the cocaine dealing in Lawrence, but added, "I can't sit here and say we've solved the drug problem in Douglas County, because we haven't."

Besides Barritt, 40, those charged and arrested on state counts were:

- Robert F. Bell, 35, Lawrence, named in a warrant charging him with one count of selling cocaine. His bond was set at $10,000.

- Carl Keith Stilley, 24, Lawrence, charged with one count of sellling cocaine. His bond was set at $10,000.

Rusty Lynn Howard, 24, Lawrence, charged with two counts of selling cocaine. His bond was set at $20,000

- Howard Wayne Edmiston, 44, of Auburn, charged with four counts of aiding and abetting the sale of cocaine and one count of possession of cocaine. His bond was set at $40,000.

Senators say administration's S. Africa policy inadequate

By The Associated Press

Kansas State University

WASHINGTON - Secretary of State George P. Shultz told Congress Wednesday that imposing punitive sanctions on South Africa would lock the Reagan administration into a "straitjacket of rigid legislation" and weaken or destroy the ability of the United States to influence events.

"The question you have before you is whether to pull the plug and leave," Shultz said.

But senator after senator told Shultz they believe the administration's South Africa policy is unequal to the task of compelling change in a society they said is rapidly becoming polarized and descending into

In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which echoed President Reagan's televised address on Tuesday, Shultz said the administration is prepared to take coordinated action with U.S. allies "to change the mix of our pressures, positive and negative, to meet the rapidly changing course of events in South Africa."

But he declined to spell out those measures, saying it is usually counterproductive to threaten another country. In any case, he said he remained skeptical about the ability of economic sanctions to have any positive effect. Chairman Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said he does not believe diplomatic rsuasion would produce significant changes in sufficient time and said that for that reason "something more is required.'

Later, responding to questions from reporters, Lugar said a bipartisan Senate majority favors additional sanctions against South Africa but that no agreement has been reached on what form those sanctions should take.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan, expressing "keen disappointment" that the president had not given his policies a new direction and instilled them with "renewed vigor," told Shultz: "I believe the time for quiet persuasion has passed."

"I agree with the president that we cannot cut and run from South Africa," she said. "But neither can we simply sit down and shut up. Now is the time to speak forcefully and wisely to a friend and to use every tool available to us to see that our message is heard."

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., told the Senate he had hoped the president's speech "would have been a little better," adding that the president left unresolved the question of how the Pretoria government can be pressured to change the apartheid system and allow blacks a political role.

But he warned that "if we end up with a piece of legislation subject to extended and divisive debate - and generating a presidential veto then we are not going to send the kind of clear, strong message that will do any good."

William Casey denies published be acceptable to the president.

reports that the United States has given South Africa intelligence information on black nationalist groups. However, Sen. Mitch McConnel, R-Ky., urged the Senate Intelligence Committee to open an immediate investigation into the allegation saying, "I believe it is our clear responsibility to clarify and resolve this situation at once.

- Disclosed that he will soon meet for the first time with Oliver Tambo, a leader of the black nationalist African National Congress.

Confirmed that Reagan will shortly nominate a new U.S. ambassador to South Africa.

- Declined to say whether Reagan will retain the list of limited sanctions he imposed by executive order last year.

In his testimony, Shultz said a House-passed bill calling for complete U.S. disinvestment from South Africa amounts to "a declaration of economic war against the people of Southern Africa" and would "end our capacity to have any positive influence on the struggle for justice and human rights in southern Africa."

He said less sweeping legislation would still "weaken our ability to have a positive effect.'

Meanwhile, White House spokesman Larry Speakes, traveling with President Reagan to Dallas aboard Air Force One, would not confirm reports that Reagan will veto Stated that CIA Director say if any forms of sanctions would

Millions view royal wedding

By The Associated Press

LONDON - Prince Andrew married red-haired English commoner Sarah Ferguson Wednesday at Westminster Abbey to bugle fanfares, pealing bells and a nation's cheers in a spectacle that mustered the pomp and glory of Britain's 920-year-old monarchy.

To Britons, it was an invitation to put aside their troubles for a day and celebrate the sturdier values of their heritage, which is anchored by Europe's most popular and enduring monarchy.

Ferguson, dressed in a beaded ivory silk satin gown, and Andrew, in full Royal Navy uniform, took their vows in firm, self-assured voices. She stumbled just once, on one of Andrew's four names.

Andrew, the queen's second son and fourth in line to the throne, gently slipped on his bride's finger a ring of gold from the same Welsh mine that provided the wedding ring for his grandmother in 1923.

"I pronounce that they be man and wife together," the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. Robert Runcie, told the kneeling couple at 11.50 a.m. (6:50 a.m. EDT).

Then, with only their close relatives present, they signed the register and legally became the Duke and Duchess of York. The queen conferred the dukedom, usual title for a sovereign's younger son, on Andrew, hands clasped. The new mother-in-law.

Church bells chimed as the newlyweds, both 26, approached the door, and a huge cheer went up as they emerged from the abbey and waved to the crowds. They mounted an open carriage - Andrew helped his bride gather up her 171/2-foot train and made a triumphal ride through London to Buckingham Palace.

More than an hour later, the newlyweds stepped onto the palace balcony and shared a tender kiss before hundreds of thousands of cheering spectators. During their brief appearance they smiled and waved, flanked by the queen and other members of the royal family and wedding party.

Andrew and Sarah reportedly were to jet to Portugal's Azores islands in the Atlantic later today for their honeymoon.

The London Standard, the only afternoon newspaper here, headlined its story on the wedding with the banner: "Enter Fergie, Duchess of York," a reference to bride's nickname and new title.

Andrew's younger brother Prince Edward was best man, and Prince Charles, his older brother and heir to the throne, read the lesson from Ephesians 3 during the wedding ceremony, which was viewed by an estimated 300 million people worldwide on television.

Queen Elizabeth watched proudly princess smiled broadly to her in a seat just behind the couple. Kilted Scottish nobles, military men in red tunics, lords and ladies in suits and blue dresses, first lady Nancy Reagan, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and pop star Elton John were among some 2,000 invited guests in the abbey.

Four-year-old Prince William, second in line to the throne, fidgeted and fiddled and pushed the bobble on the chinstrap of his sailor hat into his mouth during the proceedings, while his mother Princess Diana looked at him warningly.

After the vows, the choir burst into "Lead us heavenly Father, lead us," voices swelling through the cavernous arched abbey.

The only hitch was when Miss Ferguson tripped over Andrew's full name, Andrew Albert Christian Edward, and had to repeat Christian. Diana stumbled at the same point in her wedding ceremony, transposing two of Charles' names

Crowds massed up to 10 deep along the wedding party's route under overcast, chilly skies. But sunshine broke through well before the nuptials to light up the spectacular pageant. The queen and her husband Prince Philip rode in an open carriage to the strains of "God Save the Queen," the national anthem. The crowds burst into thunderous applause as the Queen Mother Elizabeth, Andrew's 85-year-old grandmother, drove to the abbey in a black limousine.

University receives research grants

K-State established a new record high this year for income received from competitive grants for

Other colleges with increased funding include business administration, graduate school and human ecology. Student Services and the Division of Continuing Education also received funding increases.

The College of Arts and Sciences' $8.35 million is the highest total ever recorded for a single college at K-State, Lowman said. This was a record year for the departments of biochemistry, chemistry and physics, and the Division of Biology.

Although down from last year's awards, the colleges of Education, Engineering and Veterinary Medicine received $2.3 million from competitive grants. Farrell Library received $7,200.

Governor halts train carrying nuclear fuel

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. - A trainload of spent nuclear fuel from the crippled Three Mile Island reactor was stopped Tuesday night in northeastern Kansas after Nebraska officials said they hadn't been given enough time to arrange for safe passage.

Nebraska Gov. Bob Kerrey ordered the Nebraska State Patrol to stop the train from entering the state. He issued an order at 6:15 p.m. CDT to have the train stopped at the Nebraska border, said W.

Don Nelson, Kerrey's chief of staff. Nelson said the train stopped near Marysville, about 10 miles south of the Nebraska border, "to avoid any state border confrontation."

Nelson and Col. Bob Tagg of the Nebraska State Patrol left Lincoln about 10:30 p.m. CDT to fly by helicopter to Marysville to talk with energy officials riding the train "regarding terms of safe passage,"

Kerrey ordered the train stopped because there had been no prior notification about the shipment,

"We negotiated with the federal government so that the state has a role in these shipments," Kerrey said. "It's not like they just sent little love letters. This is a serious breach of faith on the part of the federal government."

The governor said state officials have a right to know about such shipments to ensure public safety and protection.

"Our designated contact person is the Nebraska State Patrol and they weren't notified," he said.

Kerry said he expected negotiations with energy officials would allow the train to enter the state late Tuesday or early Wednesday.

The four-car train, which is carrying spent fuel from the damaged nuclear power plant in Pennsylvania to a repository in Idaho, entered Kansas in Kansas City, Kan., about 5 p.m. after a day-long journey across Missouri.

The train was expected to travel west through Lawrence and Topeka before turning north toward Frankfort, Marysville and Hanover on its way to Nebraska. The cargo is bound for a federal center for nuclear research about 50 miles from Idaho Falls, Idaho.

Col. Bert Cantwell, superintendent of the Kansas Highway Patrol, said earlier Tuesday that his troops would be monitoring the train's progress during its 150-mile journey across the northeast corner of the

"We are very aware of its schedule and we will monitor it more than just any old train," Cantwell said. "But we won't be doing anything anyone will notice. We're not anticipating any problems."

Cantwell said his forces were coordinating their efforts with the emergency preparedness division of the adjutant general's office — the office which is the nerve center

State drinking-age law forces policy changes in residence hall rules

By JENNIFER LINDSEY Collegian Reporter

Campus housing authorities are reinforcing old policies and issuing some new ones in an effort to comply with the state's legal drinking age laws

The legal drinking age in the residence halls has gone up just as the state's did, but many of the old policies will remain the same, said Robert Felde, assistant director of housing.

The current policy states that all functions must be held during the first two weeks of each semester and the guidelines must follow the state law, Felde said.

At these functions, no one may purchase, possess or consume 3.2 percent beer if born on or after July 1, 1966. I.D.s must be checked and alternative beverages must be provided for those under age or who don't want to drink.

During the year, residents of legal drinking age may consume 3.2 beverages in their rooms if living on a floor that permits it. Several dry floors are available for residents who do not want to live in an environment where beer is permitted.

Staff, hall governing board members and other residents are responsible for the enforcement of the alcohol policies, Felde said.

Sororities and fraternities are also making an effort to comply with the new law.

The Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils have adopted new alcohol resolutions that basically follow Kansas laws, said Bill Petrie, president of Interfraternity Council.

The IFC wants to promote responsible consumption for its members and encourage them to develop and implement alcohol awareness programs, Petrie said.

"Greek living groups provide many other activities than consuming alcohol," he said. "Several of the houses have adopted an occasional dry-rush policy which is also promoted by the most recent alcohol resolution." The dry-rush policy allows for rush parties where no alcohol is served.

Ann Jorden of the Greek Affairs office said the new drinking age won't really affect the sororities since members can't drink in the houses

It will only affect the social scene for sororities, not the actual acquisition of members, Jorden said.

Alpha Chi Omega has adopted a new alcohol policy for its social functions, said Michelle Mowry, president for the sorority. Mowry said that a security guard will be hired for every party to help enforce the law.

Stacey Clark, president of Gamma Phi Beta, said security guards have little effect because after somebody gets by the guard, their worries are

"We (residents of Gamma Phi Beta) are trying to include a clause in the new housing contracts that will identify the girls who are under age," Clark said.

Gamma Phi Beta is also trying to get a non-alcoholic initiation.

Although the policies may be in place, they may be difficult for those in authority to enforce them.

"It is virtually impossible for the IFC to even attempt to monitor the activities of the possible 125 rush parties annually," said Petrie.

Therefore, as in the residence halls, greek residents will have to enforce the policies themselves.

The Pacemaker Award is selected by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, a group of professional journalists.

Although the Pacemaker is the highest award a yearbook can receive, a Five-Star All American is one of prestige, said Adams, professor of journalism and mass communications.

"We're very pleased with this award," Adams said. "It is a very good honor in itself."

The Royal Purple has received Five-Star ratings for the past four years, Adams said. In 1980 and 1984, the Royal Purple won Pacemaker awards. In 1984, the Collegian also received a Pacemaker, making K-State the first school ever to win two Pacemaker awards in one year.

Ronda Corle, editor of the 1986 Royal Purple, was pleased to hear of the rating. Corle, senior in journalism and mass communications, is currently interning with Metropolitan Home magazine in New York City.

"The design is going to be Pacemaker material when they start looking at the books," Corle

"I think our staff was very well organized and attempted to put out a quality book for K-State students," Adams said.

"We had a small staff, each with his own creative ability, from diverse backgrounds, with diverse interests. This is what created the diverse result of the book," Corle said. "We tried to do everything as well as possible, in every area, to give the overall effect of what college life is really like."

While handing out the yearbooks, Corle said the staff tried to get a rough idea of what the students thought of it. She said she was pleased with the positive responses to the glossy texture of the cover.

"We hope the students are pleased with the book because they are the most important judges," Adams said. "We try to please

Evaluate ways of studying

Intern suggests students review habits

By JANET TEETER Collegian Reporter

With the end of summer school in sight and the beginning of the fall semester approaching, now is the time for students to evaluate their study habits.

'The problem most students face is difficulty with time management and scheduling," said Ron Smith, psychology intern with the Counseling Center in Holton Hall. "Students feel they don't have enough time to get everything done."

The first study habit students should get into is making out a study schedule they can follow.

Many students resist following a schedule, but schedules help people gain control of their time, Smith said. Working out a schedule that is right for a person's particular needs is important.

When making out a study schedule, students should block off the times when they will be doing everyday things like showering, class and

"These are times when you can't do any other activities," Smith said. "Scheduling allows you to see what times you have available.

"When making the schedule, students should be sure to schedule the most important things first," he said. Students should schedule in review time to study before a test and time right after class to go through the notes just taken.

When studying it's important to for students to reward themselves. If a person plans to study for a long period of time, he should schedule a short break at least every hour, Smith said.

It's important that the schedule fits a person's lifestyle. It should be flexible, not rigid, Smith said. If the schedule is flexible then it will be adjustable and will allow the person to stay in control of his time.

The biggest difficulty is that most students know what they ought to be doing, but the trick is getting them to do it," he said. When a student is studying for a test, especially finals, it's important the student consolidate all notes into a set of study notes, Smith said. Study notes are simply a condensed version of class notes as well as notes taken from the book.

When condensing notes it's best to rewrite the needed portions instead of just highlighting existing notes, Smith said. The process of rewriting forces the student to do more think-

The student must be able to distinguish between what's important and what is not. This can be done by reading cues from the teacher; paying particular attention to what is on the blackboard, writing down all examples the teacher uses and taking good notes.

Thorough preparation for exams takes time.

"Start ahead of time reviewing your set of study notes. Don't just cram the night before the test. Research shows that review periods do help us retain more than just trying to sit down and learn it all right before the test," Smith said.

According to Smith, students can learn to deal with test anxiety, but it won't improve test performance if the student hasn't learned the material well enough in the first

Fifties band to end season art series

By LYNETTE KOLSKY Collegian Reporter

The Arts in the Park 1986 season will come to a close this weekend with performances from a returning act and a group new to the summer series.

Flash Cadillac, making its fifth Arts in the Park appearance, will take the stage at 8 p.m. Saturday in City Park. Flash Cadillac is opular for its rend from the '50s and '60s.

Scartaglen, a Celtic band from Kansas City, will perform at 8 p.m. Friday in the park. The sevenmember band will perform music that originated in the cultures of Scotland and Ireland.

Flash Cadillac is perhaps best known for their music in the movies "American Graffiti" 'Apocalypse Now." The group, based in Colorado Springs, Colo., retains its original members. The old-time rock 'n' roll band has developed a local following in recent years. Lynne Ross, instructor of speech, has attended the Flash Cadillac concerts in City Park for the last three years and plans to go again this year.

"It's like going back to the sock hop every year," Ross said. "Not only do they sing and dress the part, they really entertain you." Ross said she and her husband attend the concert every year because they are '50s and '60s nostalgia buffs. "They sing all kinds of songs that bring back a lot of memories," she said. The Rosses cruise to each summer's Flash Cadillac concert in their 1956 Chevrolet. They get together with friends who also have gieville before the concert. "We use this as an excuse to get together and relive our high school cars from that era and cruise Ag-years," Ross said.

Friday night's performance by Scartaglen will include a blend of songs, jigs and reels using such instruments as the Irish bagpipe, tenor banjo and recorder.

Other instruments that will be used include the concertina, an accordion-like instrument that has buttons instead of a keyboard, and a small organ called a melodeon.

Scartaglen also will perform in the Union Courtyard at noon Fri-

Firefighter program proves successful

By KRISTY EAKIN Collegian Reporter

The student firefighter program sponsored by the Manhattan Fire Department is in its second year and is doing well, said Larry D. Reese, deputy fire chief.

The student firefighters must be enrolled in 12 hours as an undergraduate or six hours as a graduate student at K-State or Manhattan Christian College. To be eligible, a 2.0 grade point average must be maintained for undergraduates and graduates must have a 3.0 GPA. Student firefighters are hired with the understanding they will be in the program until they graduate from college, Reese said.

During the fall and spring semesters, the students work about 15 hours a week. During the summer months, work shifts of about 48 hours a week are assigned, he said. Work shifts include training activities as well as regular firefighter duties.

The training for this program begins in the summer months with 120 hours of instruction by the National Fire Academy. The training covers the basics of the job such as cardio-pulminary resuscitation, first aid, ladder rescue and fire prevention, Reese said. Weekly tests are given and a final must be taken. In January, the students must complete a 40-hour retraining program.

The Manhattan fire station on the corner of Kimball and Denison avenues was opened April 12, 1985. In the basement there is a dormitory where the students live for

"Without this facility, the program wouldn't be possible," Reese

The student firefighters are paid approximately $4,800 a year. Upon graduation, the students will have experience, training and a recommendation from the fire department, Reese said. If the graduate wants to continue in the firefighting field, an entrance examination must be passed.

Reese said he knew of no other program structured like the one in Manhattan. Oklahoma State University in Stillwater has a student firefighter program but most of those students are majoring in fire protection, he said. The Manhattan program has a wide variety of majors who participate.

Currently, the Manhattan Fire Department is budgeted for nine student firefighters. Five will be returning to the program in the fall and four new students will be add-

Regents study ages of system's faculty

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Staff

A concern of the Kansas Board of Regents is the aging of the faculty at state universities.

"The average age of faculty members in the state is 47 years,' said Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Regents. "This indicates that potentially two-thirds of the faculty could be retiring in 25 years."

The concern of the Regents is replacing faculty members with qualified people, he said. There are quality people available, but universities are having to compete with business and industry to attract potential employees.

K-State is aware and concerned about this situation that affects universities statewide as well as nationwide. Although the average age of the faculty at K-State, 43.4 years, is a little lower than the state average, it is still a concern.

"It's a great concern," Provost Owen Koeppe said. "Post World War II faculty that was hired is starting to retire now. In the late '50s and into the '60s, there was a big boom in faculty hiring and those people will be retiring in a decade or a little more."

The concern of Koplik, the Board of Regents and administrators at K-State is replacing retiring faculty members with the best people possi-

"We will be renewing our institutions with new faculties and we want the best faculties we can attract," Koplik said.

In competing for the "best" people, universities fall behind business and industry in offering benefits for potential employees.

"There are some problems in finding faculty for some fields due to competition business and industry provide for us," said Don Hoyt, assistant provost and director of the office for planning and evaluation services.

"The board is concerned about faculty salaries being competitive," Koplik said. "Some competition is from industry and has become more intense in recent years. Their comparative salaries and benefits are more than we can provide."

Koeppe said it's hard to attract students into the master's and doctoral programs when they can go to work in industry with a bachelor's degree and make as much money as they would with a higher degree.

"We must remain competitive and also try to encourage bright young men and women to work for these degrees," Koeppe said. "I don't know what else we can do. The Board (of Regents) is trying to get a substantial increase in salaries for next year."

The fiscal year 1988 budget request for the Regents institutions includes an 8 percent increase in faculty salaries.

"We hope to press our case before the Legislature for Kansas in overall attractiveness. We can't be left behind. If we are, we will be weakened if we cannot make replacements with a good or better faculty," Koplik said.

This concern is greater in certain areas at the university level. Koeppe pointed out agriculture as one of hese areas.

"We have difficulty in engineering, computer science, business administration and fields like that. This is not true in all fields," Hoyt said.

"I don't foresee a crisis situation facing us in 25 years," Hoyt said. "There will be a slight problem in 25 years. But there is no need to be panicked over the idea of a shortage in 25 years.

"Unless the graduate enrollment decreases and the undergraduate enrollment sharply increases, we won't have a panic situation happening. So far, we haven't seen this happen," Hoyt said.

State establishes honors academy

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

The 1986 Kansas Legislature has authorized funding to establish a Kansas Honors Academy, said Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Board of Regents.

The academy is to provide intenhy local school districts academy program will be held on the Fort Hays State University campus next summer. The program will cost approximately $96,000, Koplik said.

The academy will provide an opportunity for outstanding high school students to participate in interdisciplinary learning activities in substantial depth at Kansas universities. They will be working with students of similar abilities and guided by outstanding instructors, he

Marty Hammond, director of academic affairs for the Regents, is chairman of the advisory committee that will be deciding the academy's curriculum, guidelines for student nominations and student selection for the honors academy, Koplik said. Student Body President Steve Johnson is a member of the sevenperson advisory committee.

Up to 150 high school students will sive study for high school juniors in be nominated by their school academic areas typically not offered districts and selected by the advisory point average, scores from a standardized test, an original essay and letters of recommendation from two teachers, Koplik said.

Each high school will be able to nominate one student with larger schools given the option of nominating more depending on student population, he said.

The committee will contact school districts in September and hopes to receive nominations from high principals school and superintendents by Nov. 1. Students selected to participate in the pro-

Preliminary planning indicates the first honors academy will begin June 8, 1987, and last six to eight weeks. said Gene Kasper, director of special projects for the Regents. Some of the topics being considered are computer science, astronomy and foreign languages.

"Depending on the topics the advisory committee decides on, we will ask professors from Fort Hays (State), other Regents schools and from out of state to teach the classes," Kasper said.

Following the initial program at Fort Hays State, the academy will be held in subsequent years on other Regents campuses, Kasper said. The schools will be selected by a proposal format, instead of a rotation, he said.

"We will be asking other Regents schools if they would host the academy, and I'm pretty sure we'll get a response from K-State," Kasper said.

Later graduates increasing

By KATHY CONRADT Collegian Reporter

For many, the graduation ceremonies in May are the culmination of their college experience, the reward for a lot of long hours of work and a visible sign to their relatives that they really did go to school for an education.

However, there are always students who finish their course of study in December, and the number is on the rise.

In December 1983, 743 students received undergraduate degrees. In December 1985, there were 849 undergraduates who received their diplomas, said Gunile DeVault, assistant registrar.

One reason for the increase in the number of winter graduates is students are delaying completion of their degree requirements.

"There are a number of reasons why students are taking longer to graduate," said Donald Foster. registrar.

"Curriculum requirements are almost impossible to complete in four years," he said. There are some majors which assume summer school sessions and there are others, such as architecture degrees, which require more than four years of study.

Another reason is the change in how students look at a college education, Foster said. It is not uncommon to drop out for a semester or two. Many leave because of grades, finances or to study abroad.

There are also many students who change their educational objectives, he said. Deciding on a new major is an important change, but the student has to pay the price by spending a little more time at the University.

There have also been changes in the requirements for teacher education which may keep education students in school longer, he

The number of students seeking dual majors or d really changed, nor has the number of those who graduate early, Foster said. These factors could not account for the increase as much as the other reasons. Because of the increase in the number of December graduates, the University began having graduation exercises in 1984. Before 1984 there was just a reception at the president's residence, but there was a lot of interest in a more formal activity, Foster said.

Absurd lawsuit should be ignored

Occasionally, a lawsuit is filed that goes beyond the realm of reason and enters the surreal.

Such a lawsuit broke through the walls of sanity and came crashing into reality last week in Los Angeles Superior Court.

The widow and two children of the man who killed 21 people and wounded 15 others in a McDonald's restaurant near San Diego two years ago have filed a suit against the fast-food hamburger chain and the killer's employer.

The family claims the monosodium glutamate the restaurant chain added to enhance the flavor of its food and the heavy metals the man came into contact with in his job triggered the appalling destruction of human life. To top it all off, the family is seeking $5 million in damages, saying McDonald's knew of the additive's potential

If there ever existed a lawsuit that needed to be thrown out as frivolous, this is it.

Such a lawsuit serves no positive function. The annihilation of the unassuming restaurant patrons was obviously an unfortunate quirk of society. No one could know of the man's potential danger. But to blame the actions of one deranged man on an additive which nearly 250 million Americans, and many more worldwide, consume every day is absurd.

The suit reeks of greedy, ambulance-chasing lawyers who hope for an out-of-court settlement thinking the publicity of the suit will be too much pressure for the corporation to withstand.

If the restaurant chain can survive the initial blows of pretrial procedures, it will be up to the judge to dismiss the case as unworthy of consideration. A court case will, unjustly, ring up costs at the expense of taxpayers and McDonald's stockholders.

The long-term social benefits of the case are questionable at best. It is highly unlikely the lawsuit will set a precedent for any future restaurant killing sprees. It is highly unlikely people will stop consuming MSG as a result of the

Soviets to publish Russian emigre's works

MOSCOW — Vladimir Nabokov, the late Russian emigre author described by Soviet reference books as a "literary snob" and banned for decades, may be published soon in his homeland, according to an interview that appeared Wednesday in the writers' weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta.

Consultations with the official literary archive indicated Nabokov, author of "Lolita," has never been published in the Soviet Union.

The possibility of Nabokov's debut followed other signs that previously banned writers or works are now to be published as part of a limited relaxation of cultural policy under Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who became Kremlin leader in March 1985. Mikhail Alexeyev, editor of the literary journal Moskva (Moscow), told Literaturnaya Gazeta that Nabokov's novel "Luzhin's Defense" was among several publishing projects under consideration. Standard Soviet reference works describe Nabokov as a modernist influenced by Marcel Proust and Franz Kafka, who is also banned in the Soviet Union. The standard Soviet encyclopedia describes Nabokov as an elitist who distorted socialist heroes and whose works "are characterized by literary snobbishness." Soviet critics called Nabokov's 1958 bestseller "Lolita," the story of a middle-aged European intellectual's infatuation with a 12-year-old American girl, as a poor attempt "to blend erotic, social and moral elements" in a novel.

Goldwater enters hospital for observation

WASHINGTON - Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., was admitted to the Walter Reed Army Medical Center early Wednesday after complaining of abdominal pains, hospital officials said.

But his spokesman, James Ferguson, said the pains were apparently a case of indigestion following a meal of seafood.

An administrator at the admissions office of the Army hospital said Goldwater, 77, was admitted at 6:30 a.m. EDT. "He is here, he is under 24-hour observation," hospital spokesman Jim Stueve said. "He came in suffering atypical abdominal pains."

He said Goldwater, was having "routine blood tests" and would remain in the hospital until at least tomorrow.

Overpopulation trend to continue

The announcement came last week that, according to estimates, a child was born that pushed the global population over the 5 billion mark. In the past week, officials estimate, an additional 2 million babies have been

In the past 35 years, the world population has doubled and the trend will seemingly continue in the next 35 years.

Is it possible for the human race to support the staggering number of people predicted to be born into this world in the next 35 years?

No one can foretell what effect this many people will have on the current quality of life, but one thing is certain. A constantly doubling population, if it is allowed to continue unconsidered, could threaten the quality of life as we know it.

In this country, life expectancy has increased dramatically in the last 100 years, and even Third World countries have experienced an increase in life expectancy due to improvements in medicine, agriculture and living conditions.

One argument against the population explosion is that the number of individuals who are unemployed in the world has skyrocketed so that many people cannot live at even a subsistance

Studies indicate that, on the contrary, population growth does not lead to slower economic growth. More people create a need for additional resources to be made available and this, in turn, creates a form of economic growth.

Density of population cannot be a viable argument. One only has to drive through Hong Kong or Singapore to realize that.

It seems that one reason individuals get so fussy about the population is that it causes us to work hard. It should tax the brightest minds and cause the warmest hearts to overflow with the hope that this world can be a better place for all.

U.S., Soviet peace groups organize cruise

WASHINGTON - Forty-six Russians, including a cosmonaut and other prominent Soviets, will begin a "Mississippi Peace Cruise" through the U.S. heartland this weekend, to see and be seen by Americans and to talk about the dangers of nuclear

The trip down the Mississippi River, which will also include more than 100 Americans, is privately sponsored but is taking place with the cooperation of the Reagan administration, organizers said at a news conference on Wednesday. The cruise follows several years of similar Volga River trips in the Soviet Union that U.S. and Russian peace groups have taken to attract attention to the peace issue to let Americans and Russians get to know each other. One American organizer, Howard Frazier of Promoting Enduring Peace, said that the U.S. government has been very cooperative in processing visas for the visiting Russians and that State Department officials have indicated they were "delighted this was being done.' The Soviet contingent includes legislators, science and foreign affairs experts, an actress, a labor official, several clergy and numerous journalists, he said. Many of the Americans on the trip are identified only as "peace activists" in a trip booklet.

Congress approves Kansas water projects

WASHINGTON - The House approved $3.7 million on Wednesday to start construction work on two flood control projects in Kansas.

Approval came as lawmakers voted 329-82 for a bill providing $15.5 billion for water projects and energy research nationwide in fiscal year 1987, which begins Oct. The legislation must be approved by the Senate. In Kansas, the bill provides:

-$2.6 million for a flood control project at Great Bend. The project, which was authorized by Congress in 1965, calls for building levees along Walnut Creek, Little Walnut Creek and the Arkansas River.

Last year, Congress provided $500,000 for project planning. The total cost of the project, including local matching monies, is $45.5 million.

-$1.1 million for flood control in the city of Halstead. The project includes a levee nd floodwall along the Little Arkansas River as well as deepening and widening of the river channel. The project is estimated to cost $5.8 million, according to the House Appropriations Committee. Other congressional estimates have placed the

Bond would improve local living

This summer between 1,600 and 1,700 players on approximately 125 teams are participating in men's, women's and corecreational city softball leagues. With this many participants, it is clear that softball is a big item for a good-sized chunk of the 35,000 Manhattan residents.

It seems that everyone knows somebody who is playing on a softball team this summer. But what many may not know is that some 500 people, or 40 to 50 teams, were turned away this year because the city does not have enough softball fields.

Some residents have come up with an idea of how to improve and increase the city's recreational facilities. This would include, among other things, increasing the number of softball diamonds in the city to accommodate demand. The idea turned into the "Quality of Life" bond issue that will face voters in the Aug. 5 election.

The big item on the $2.7 million bond issue is a $770,000 outdoor recreation and sports complex that would be located on the edge of the city limits just off Anderson Avenue. If passed, the facility would have four regulation softball fields, seven soccer/football fields, a playground, picnic area, fitness trail and ample parking.

Recreation is taking more and more of people's free time. Parks and Recreation Director Terry DeWeese said the number is increasing of people who want to play softball but must be turned away.

There are 700 Manhattan youths in soccer leagues, and DeWeese said the popularity of the sport is increasing. Also, there is a strong demand for high school and young adult leagues, but no fields to put them on.

And many who do play softball can verify that the city's softball facilities leave something to be desired.

Only Jerry Wilson Field in City Park is the regulation size required to host major men's tournaments, such as a state tournament. The four softball fields in the proposed sports complex would be 300 feet from home plate, the distance required to bring the field up to

On two of the fields, Gorman East and Gorman West (located off Casement Road), only two games a night can be played because there are no lights. The Gorman diamonds are in such bad shape that they only are used out of necessity. If the complex is built, DeWeese said the two diamonds will be used as practice fields.

And many people don't realize the complex, if built, could help bring revenue into city. How many bond issues could do that?

DeWeese said the city already has looked into holding a state softball tournament something that will never happen with the current facilities. The sports com would leave the door open for other tournaments, possibly even a regional tournament.

than one regulation field. And four in the same location would look good in the eyes of state tournament officials.

The money generated would come from gate sales to the tourney and the cost for visiting players to spend the weekend in town. Based on information from cities who have hosted state tournaments, DeWeese said players often spend $100 or more on food and lodging for a weekend tournament.

The proposed Linear Park would also present potential benefits for thousands of area residents who walk, run, jog or bicycle.

The park, which would run around the edge of the city from northeast Manhattan to the southwest part of the city, would provide a safe, scenic trail for both cyclists and pedestrians. Being nearly eight miles long, the park would be easily accessible to most Manhattan citizens.

All this and more could be available for a small price per household. For example, property owners of a $50,000 home would pay $1.12 a month.

Many people will be dead set against spending nearly $3 million for recreational purposes. The deciding factor, though, should be whether the bond issue would benefit enough citizens to make it worth the money.

Two Topeka men face charges in deaths TOPEKA - Two men were charged Wednesday in Shawnee County District Court in the suffocation of two young sisters whose bodies were found in the basement of the men's home. Nolan D. Prewett, 36, and David R. Howard, 32, both of Topeka, each were charged with two counts of first-degree premeditated murder or, in the alternative, firstdegree murder in the commission of a felony. Under the charges, a jury could consider finding them guilty of first-degree murder either through premeditation or through the commission of a felony, said District Attorney Gene Olander. The men also were each charged with two counts of aggravated kidnapping, two counts of aggravated sodomy, two counts of rape and two counts of enticement of a child, Olander said. Prewett and Howard were arrested early Sunday when the bodies of Shannon D.

Mahomes, 6, and Shavon D. Mahomes, 3, were discovered by police in the home of the suspects. The girls, who officials said apparently were smothered Saturday night, lived two houses away from the men.

Olander filed the charges after Shawnee County District Judge E. Newton Vickers granted an extension Tuesday. Olander said he needed more time to prepare the

Lawrence man enters guilty plea in death

LAWRENCE - A Lawrence man pleaded guilty Tuesday to voluntary manslaughter in the drowning death of another man in March. Gary Thomas, 47, pleaded guilty in a plea bargain, said Douglas County Attorney Jim Flory. He had been charged with first-degree murder, but Flory said it would have been difficult to prove pre-meditation, required for a first-degree murder con-

Flory said Frank Barnes, 34, died after a fight with Thomas in February, but his body was not found in the Kansas River until March.

Thomas' sentencing was set for Aug. 8. Barnes' former wife, Terri Barnes, 25, of Lawrence, and Lewis Brockman of Lawrence, have both pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter in the same case.

Town bans skateboards from public streets CLINTON, N.J. - The Town Council has approved an ordinance prohibiting skateboarding on public streets, but the police chief says officers will use discretion in enforcing it. If people riding skateboards operate safely, they won't be subjected to the $50 fine approved under the ordinance, Chief Michael Wolfe said. The ordinance, adopted Tuesday, bars skateboards, skates, sleds, tricycles and scooters from streets. It followed by a month the death of a 15-year-old boy from neighboring Clinton Township after falling from his skateboard. Under the new law, skateboarders will be allowed in parking lots and playgrounds.

White again blasts Royals past Baltimore to win series

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE - Steve Balboni and Willie Wilson drove in two runs each in a four-run Kansas City second inning, while Frank White blasted his second game-decisive home run in three games against the Orioles Wednesday night. The Royals turned three double plays in the first four innings and took a 7-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Baltimore starter Scott McGregor, 6-10, who has failed to go past two innings in his last three starts, walked White to open the inning and then Balboni hit an 0-2 pitch over the center field fence for his 20th homer.

McGregor then walked two batters before giving way to reliever Nate Snell. Wilson promptly hit a two-run double to right.

Kansas City starter Charlie Leibrandt worked the first 41/3 innings, surrendering eight hits and two walks. He also hit one batter.

But he escaped serious trouble because of the double plays. The Orioles have hit into a leagueleading 98

Mark Gubicza, 4-5, got the victory, relieving Leibrandt with one out in the fifth and yielding just one unearned run in the sixth. Steve Farr pitched the ninth.

The only run the Orioles managed off Gubicza came in the sixth when Tom O'Malley reached on a three-base throwing error by White and scored on John Shelby's sacrfice fly.

The Royals added two more runs in the eighth.

Howser recuperating after surgery

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Kansas City Royals Manager Dick Howser, suffering from a cancerous brain tumor that doctors could not completely remove, was listed in fair condition Wednesday at St. Luke's Hospital.

A malignant tumor known as a glioma was discovered during a three-hour operation Tuesday. Doctors said only part of the tumor was removed because of fears that additional surgery would damage other brain tissue.

They were awaiting further pathology reports before making a decision on the best method of treating the tumor, located in the left frontal lobe of the brain, where emotions and personality are centered.

"I imagine by Friday we'll know something," said Dr. Paul Meyer, team physician, who was present during Tuesday's operation by Dr. Charles Clough. "He'll be in recuperation in intensive care today, and quiet."

Dean Vogelaar, Royals spokesman, said the 50-year-old Howser was awake and visiting with his wife, Nancy.

Howser, who guided the Royals to the World Series championship over the St. Louis Cardinals last year, had complained recently of headaches and a stiff neck, and associates said he appeared confused at times.

Doctors involved in the case have not publicly discussed details of treatment alternatives, but Meyer said radiation is a possibility.

Other cancer experts said the standard treatment would be five or six weeks of high levels of radiation to kill off cancerous cells. Dr. Richard Evans, chairman of the department of radiation oncology at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., said the daily treatment takes about 15 minutes and for an adult has little or no side effects other than a slight skin burn near the radiation site.

Dr. William Shapiro, director of the brain tumor research program at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Center for Cancer Research in New York, said the use of chemotherapy to kill cancer cells with drugs is becoming a common partner to radiation.

Another technique sometimes used, Shapiro said, involves implantation of radioactive "seeds" through the skull and into the tumor site.

WASHINGTON - The Senate voted 50-49 Wednesday to confirm President Reagan's controversial nominee Daniel Manion for a federal appellate judgeship.

Vice President George Bush, as president of the Senate, cast the tie-breaking vote.

"On this vote, the ayes are 49, the nays are 49," Bush said in voting. "The Senate being equally divided, the vice president votes nay and the motion to reconsider is not agreed to."

But Bush did not need to vote as the tie had the effect of sustaining the Senate's earlier confirmation of Manion.

On June 26, the Senate voted 48-46 to confirm Manion to a seat on the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. But Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who opposed the nomination, moved then to reconsider the vote at a later date.

Wednesday, the Senate defeated that motion.

Opponents argued that Manion, a conservative Indiana lawyer, was professionally unqualified for the judgeship. But Republicans said he was being attacked only because of his conservative ideology.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.,

Committee, hailed the Senate's refusal to reopen the Manion nomination.

"I am pleased that the Senate has affirmed the confirmation of Daniel Manion to be a judge for the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals," Thurmond said in a statement issued shortly after the vote. "He is a good man, he is qualified and he has the integrity and intelligence that will make him a fine federal judge."

But opponents disagreed.

Manion "falls so clearly short of the mark" of qualifications needed for a federal judge," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., argued during the brief debate before the vote.

"He has had almost no experience in federal courts. His briefs in state courts border on the illiterate."

Manion, son of the late Clarence Manion, a founder of the John Birch Society, has been criticized by liberal groups for his staunchly conservative views. More than 40 law school deans signed a letter stating he is professionally unqualified for a federal judgeship.

Manion received a "qualified" rating from the American Bar Association, the lowest passing grade given by the group's judicial screening panel.

Tropics part of UFM gardens

When University for Man's Lynn Doxon gets the craving for freshly picked kiwi or pineapple, most likely she would be out of luck in Kansas. But she simply gets one out of her

This garden, though, is no ordinary garden. It is the University for Man Greenhouse

The greenhouse, located in the solar building next to the UFM House at 1221 Thurston St., houses plants unique to Manhattan. Besides kiwis and pineapples, lemons are also grown in the greenhouse "The lemon tree and kiwis can stay outside during the summer and the lemon tree is hardy down to zero degrees," said Doxon, who is the operations manager for the UFM division of appropriate technology. "When it gets cold, though, we do insulate the roots of the plant with leaves," she said.

Everything in the greenhouse, which was built in 1980, is done naturally, even the pest control, Dox-

"In the spring and fall, we have trouble with aphids. They breed in the greenhouse," she said of the small insects that suck the juices out of plants. "So we introduced ladybugs into the greenhouse, and they have done a good job taking care of the aphids. The most interesting feature of the UFM greenhouse, Doxon said, is the aquaculture-hydroponic system. There are only two other greenhouses in the United States with that type of system: Winstar in Colorado, financed by John Denver, and one in New Alchemy, Mass.

The system, which has been going for about a year in the UFM greenhouse, raises plants without using soil, Doxon said. The plants get nutrients from fish that are housed in five tubes 18 inches in diameter and 5 feet high.

"The system runs best with anywhere from 24 to 100 fish," she

The tank for the system is selfperpetuating and can almost run without any supervision, she said.

Woman sees old depot as future soup kitchen

By The Collegian Staff

With the pending acquisition of the old railroad depot in southeast Manhattan by the city, many are wondering what to do with the wooden structure. But one resident has an idea she believes would be for the betterment of the community.

Ann Ennis, 1933 Strong Ave., is trying to open up a soup kitchen at the depot. The soup kitchen, to be called the Helping Hand Program, would be beneficial to the older people of Manhattan as well as K-State students, she said.

'There won't be one person who feels like they're getting a handout," Ennis said. "If you don't have rent money, you don't have food money," Ennis said.

"We are the future," she said. "If you can't eat three meals a day, at least you could eat one good hot

She said that if individuals don't want a "helping hand," they could work for a couple of hours and then eat. The Helping Hand Program is strictly non-profit, with no salaried employees, only volunteers.

Ennis said she has already had people calling her and asking when the kitchen was opening up and telling her they were hungry.

Plans for the soup kitchen includes more than just soup, she said. The meals are to consist of meat, potatoes, bread, vegetables and milk or another drink. The kitchen would be open from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m.

She said the depot will have both air conditioning and heat so people will have a cool place to go in the summer and a warm place in the

There will always be different people coming to the depot, she said, as people obtain employment and quit coming, and are replaced by newcomers.

'There is no doubt in my mind that the depot is mine — it's just a matter of time," Ennis said.

Anthea Estergard, participant in the Fox Valley Pledge of Resistance in Crystal Lake, Ill., will present the next lecture for the Manhattan Alliance with Central America at 7:30 p.m. today at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center.

Estergard, a former school teacher and mother of three, is involved in the protest of U.S. policy in Central America. She has engaged in various forms of nonviolent civil disobedience ranging from two arrests at the office of her congressman for refusing to gather humanitarian supplies for the people of Nicaragua.

"It's time the American people woke up," Estergard said. "Our government has made a serious mistake imposing our will on a duly elected government."

Estergard has spoken against the Central American policy because the Contras represent a reversal of progress and a return to the brutality of the former dictators, she said.

She will explain the actions of her group and the various forms their disobedience has taken. The program will take place after a rice and beans dinner at 6:15 p.m. leave the premises, to helping at St. Isidore's.

in the state. Leon Mannell, administrator of radiological systems for the emergency preparedness office, also downplayed the state's oversight of the TMI train. "This shipment is not really any different than the numerous other radioactive shipments that move through Kansas regularly," Mannell said. He said the train is probably more safe than most others because the highly radioactive spent fuel is stored in specially designed lead

Adding to his confidence, Mannell said, is the fact the train had passed inspections of dozens of state and federal officials before it entered St. Louis and again as it reached Kansas

Both Illinois and Missouri officials emmissions and it is expected future shipments of spent nuclear fuel from Three Mile Island will receive similar treatment. Another 35-40 train shipments reportedly are planned in the next 30 months as the TMI plant is prepared for decommissioning.

"We're not doing anything unusual," Mannell said. "We're handling it as a routine shipment. We think it's safe when you consider the structure of those lead casks and the safety features built in the containers.

"And on top of that, it's been inspected so many times before it ever left and again as it is in transit - I don't visualize anthing catastrophic happening in Kansas."

The majority of the grants are given by the federal government, with the remainder coming from the state government, private industry and other private sources.

This new record speaks highly of the faculty and the instruction offered at K-State, Lowman said.

The University total of $19.6 million is only for research and sponsored programs, and doesn't include state or federal appropriated dollars. The noted grant amounts are strictly for research, instruction, continuing education, equipment and extension,

"The University spends $35 million to $40 million a year on research," Lowman said. "The rest of the funmonitored the train for hazardous ding is appropriated from the state and federal governments."

Enrollment ideas important, candidate says

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

The enrollment process is the window to the University, said Edward Boehm, candidate for vice president for institutional advancement, seeking to put a new shine on the glass around K-State with fresh ideas on enrollment

Boehm, assistant vice chancellor for enrollment management and dean of admissions at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, spoke Friday morning at an open forum in Union 212 to an audience of about 35 people.

Boehm said before acting upon a program he would have to spend time listening to what people involved think of the enrollment process at K-State to get the total scope.

"It is better to wait, to listen, to hear, to get the total scope...but when I say listen and wait, I don't mean stall," he said.

A university needs to work with the mentality that exists in the public concerning the image of the university. He said the stereotypes already used by the public to describe the university should be used to form a new and better image of the institu-

"Like Texas, people out there like K-State University. They want it to be successful."

In speaking of his experience at TCU, Boehm said everyone's efforts, including faculty, staff, alumni and students, were needed for a change in the perceived image of the school.

In the recruitment process, Boehm said K-State should attempt to attract quality students and then make sure the things that have been promised are available.

"You want students who will be successful...K-State has students with comparable scores to the school down the road, but you have to let it be known," Boehm said.

"I can't see generating enrollment with students who leave after 10 days because of academic problems. We need to attract students that will be successful," Boehm said.

Boehm cited such things as class rank, number of academic units, standardized tests, personal accomplishments and overall high school performance as criteria for reviewing students who apply at K-State. However, Boehm said the key quality to look for in students is motivation.

A variety of directed mass appeal, small-group appeal, and one-on-one appeal should be used to recruit students, he said.

Boehm suggested having send-off parties in the hometowns of entering K-State freshmen to show local support for the school. Boehm said these gatherings would also reinforce the the alumni active in all facets of the University programs.

students' decision to attend K-State.

Boehm said it is important to keep

"The alumni are dedicated; they want to be involved," he said.

Boehm also stressed the importance of good communication in the recruitment effort. He said he believes the key to good communication is a centralized information of-

Overlapping information is an example of bad communication, he

"The worst that can happen is the student receiving 10 things from the University and then nothing," Boehm said. "Everyone in the recruitment process should know what is going on with everyone else."

Student retention could be strengthened by measuring student satisfaction. He said surveys should be taken of a select group during the admissions process and then later after the students have been on campus for a few months. Focus groups should meet on a regular basis to discuss the retention situation and student satisfaction.

Boehm said he believes freshmen orientation is one of the best times to recommit students to their undergraduate institution choice.

Boehm has been at TCU since 1979. He was with The American University in Washington, D.C., from 1968 to 1979, where he served as soccer coach; a faculty member in health, physical education and recreation; director of freshmen admissions and financial aid programs; dean of student development and acting vice president for student life.

In 1964, he earned a bachelor's degree from Frostburg State College in Frostburg, Md. He earned his master's degree in 1970 and his doctoral degree in 1977, both from The American University.

Boehm was the fourth candidate for the position of vice president for institutional advancement to speak at K-State. There are three other candidates for the position. They are Koy M. Floyd, director of university relations and professor of educational administration at the University of Tulsa; Richard B. Lancaster, vice president for development and college relations at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.; and Robert S. Krause, director of student affairs for the Minnesota State University

Drought-stricken states to receive donated hay

By The Associated Press

Tons of donated hay were loaded aboard trains Sunday to be hauled to the Southeast, where drought and heat have wasted crops, and churchgoers prayed for rain to soak their fields and fill wells and dried-up reservoirs

Scattered thunderstorms dampened parts of the region again during the night, with 0.77 of an inch of rain at Greensboro, N.C., the National Weather Service said. But rainfall over much of the region remains 10 to 20 inches below normal this year. Sunday was declared a day of prayer for rain in Georgia by Gov. Joe Frank Harris. 'This will help us to understand that rain can only come from above," said the Rev. E.J. Chester

Sr., pastor of the First Baptist Church of Atlanta. Every government in the Atlanta metropolitan area, where the rainfall deficit is more than 141/2 inches, has imposed some sort of water restrictions. Flovilla, Ga., turned off its water system from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday to allow its 100,000-gallon tank to refill.

Agricultural losses throughout the Southeast are estimated at up to $1.9 billion and the deaths of 48 people have been blamed on an accompanying heat wave, which is producing highs in the 90s after two weeks at about 100.

Crews in Indianapolis worked Sunday to finish loading a CSX train of more than 70 boxcars with about 2,000 tons of hay donated by Indiana farmers for their counterparts in South Carolina, said spokesman Stephen Carter. It took about 70 trucks from 30 trucking firms and independent truckers to haul the hay from 50 counties last week.

Railroads elsewhere around the country also have donated boxcars.

"This is the least a rancher can do to help another rancher," said George Reynolds, who got up early Saturday with about 40 other people to help load 23 Burlington Northern Railroad boxcars at Tulsa, Okla.

Tons of hay donated by farmers from New England to the Plains already has been moved into the Southeast by trucks and Air Force cargo planes.

But herds in North Carolina alone consume about 7,690 tons of hay a day, and many farmers will need out-of-state hay until next spring, said Jim Oliver, chairman of the state's Drought Task Force.

"The donations are appreciated, but they're largely symbolic," said North Carolina State University

Animal science group boasts largest meeting in University history

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

The largest conference to ever be held on the K-State campus will begin Tuesday, said Chuck Havlicek, assistant director of the University's conference office.

The American Society of Animal Science will be meeting here until Friday.

John Wheat, conference chairman and professor of animal sciences and industry, said he expects animal scientists from all 50 states and 20 foreign countries to attend the annual national convention.

"Since we're centrally located," Wheat said, "the number of ASAS meeting participants could jump as high as 3,000. This includes ASAS members, spouses and children. All activities we've scheduled are geared in preparation for that higher number. But realistically, I think we will have about 2,500 people on campus for the event."

As of June 1. Manhattan motels were booked full for the conference, Havlicek said. Officials from the Division of Continuing Education are encouraging the use of campus residence halls, and are also looking at Junction City motels to house par-

Becky Blake, director of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce's Convention and Visitors Bureau, estimated an economic boom of approximately $65 per person per day of the convention. This could total more than $500,000.

"The $65 figure was compiled by the state for such events," Blake said. "It takes into consideration food, housing, entertainment, transportation and the like."

Wheat said the conference will begin Tuesday evening with a kickoff reception. A general session will be at 10 a.m. Wednesday.

President Jon Wefald will welcome the group. Other speakers at the session include Gov. John Carlin; Duane Acker, past K-State president and current director for Food and Agriculture with the U.S. Agency for International Development; ASAS president Joe Fontenod; and ASAS president-elect Rodney Preston.

Thursday, Elanco, a branch of the Eli Lilly Corp., will sponsor a breakfast in the Union at 6:45 a.m. Following the breakfast, conferees will go to McCain Auditorium for what Wheat calls "the highlight of the conference."

He said Elanco is to bring in a nationally known speaker to deliver a humorous, inspirational talk. The

Veteran diplomat, policy expert

Harriman, 94, dies at N.Y. residence

By The Associated Press

YORKTOWN HEIGHTS, N.Y. -W. Averell Harriman, scion of a wealthy railroad family who served as roving ambassador and statesman for every Democratic president since Franklin D. Roosevelt, died Saturday at the age of 94.

Harriman stood near the center of power for half a century helping to mold U.S. foreign policy, particularly toward the Soviet Union.

He administered New Deal programs during the Depression, served as ambassador to the Soviet Union and to Great Britain, ran the Lend-Lease program in the early stages of World War II and the Marshall Plan for European recovery after the war. He negotiated the 1963 nuclear test ban treaty and helped initiate the Paris peace talks with North Vietnam.

"To his country, and the world, he was one of the outstanding men of the 20th century," his wife, Pamela, said in a statement Saturday. "He was a public servant in the truest sense of the term."

Harriman, who had been in failing health for a month, died at Birchgrove, his home in Westchester County, north of New York City. With him were doctors and nurses, his wife and his two daughters from his first marriage. He also had six American received by the late grandchildren and six greatgrandchildren.

"The United States and the Democratic Party have lost a statesman, a diplomat, a benefactor and a friend," said Paul G. Kirk, Democratic national chairman. "Gov. Harriman was as deft and strong with the superpowers as he was kind and gentle with the common people."

'This is a very sad day for all members of the Roosevelt family," Roosevelt's son James, 78, said in an interview with United Stations Radio Network, formerly RKO Radio. "He was a close friend, trusted adviser and the kind of a person who gave of everything he had in line with that friendship and duty to his country.'

In 1943, Roosevelt sent Harriman to Moscow as U.S. ambassador. There, the heir to a capitalist fortune spent more time dealing with Josef Stalin than any previous American.

Harriman believed the two countries had to learn to live in peace. He sought to broaden Americans' knowledge of the Soviet Union with a $10 million gift to Columbia University in 1982 to establish an institute for advanced Soviet studies.

He last visited Moscow in June

1983, when he was the first

Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov. A three-sentence report Saturday by the Soviet news agency Tass said Harriman "declared for the development of mutual understanding between the Soviet Union and the United States, called for arresting the arms race."

In May 1985, as part of the Soviet celebration of the 40th anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany, Harriman was awarded a top Soviet award for "his profound personal contribution" to the U.S.-Russian wartime alliance.

John F. Kennedy, who named Harriman ambassador-at-large in 1961, once said he had held as many important government posts as anyone in the history of the republic with the possible exception of John Quincy Adams.

"There was no mission President Kennedy would not have given him," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Saturday. "America has lost an extraordinary leader and the Kennedy family has lost a wonderful friend and counselor."

William Averell Harriman was born Nov. 15, 1891, in New York City, the son of Edward Henry Harriman, who controlled a 60,000-mile railroad empire that stretched from Chicago to the Pacific. The elder Harriman, one of the late 19th century railroad and banking magnates who were dubbed "robber barons," left his six children an estimated $100 million.

He was a Republican until 1928, when he voted Democratic out of admiration for presidential nominee Alfred E. Smith. He remained a loyal Democrat for the rest of his life.

In 1952, Harriman sought the Democratic presidential nomination, but withdrew when it was clear Adlai E. Stevenson would be the nominee.

Two years later he was elected governor of New York. He lost a second bid for the presidential nomination in 1956, also to Steven-

Video tape rentals become more convenient

By SANDY BUDELOVICH Collegian Reporter

According to a recent television report, nearly one-third of all homes in the United States has at least one videocassette recorder, with projections for 1990 indicating that VCR ownership may be near 100 percent.

When VCRs were first introduced, many specialty stores opened where one could go to rent pre-recorded tapes. But now, with more and more people purchasing VCRs, the number of video rental establishments is growing proportionally. And according to local store managers, rentals are becoming even more popular to local viewers.

Many Manhattan convenience and grocery stores in the past year have entered the rental market, creating competition in the video business with previously existing video rental stores. In all, there are nearly 25 stores in the Manhattan area for the "at-home movie" viewer.

Dutch Maid supermarkets and Mini Mart convenience stores, divisions of Stan Hayes Enterprises, entered the video market early this

Jim Blacker, general manager of the Mini Mart division, said the two Dutch Maid supermarkets in the Blue Hills Shopping Center and the Poyntz Pantry store have rented video cassettes and VCRs since January. Blacker said he was skeptical at first about having video rentals at the Mini Marts.

"Our supermarkets, Dutch Maids, first started renting videos and had great success with them, and so the idea was presented to me that Mini Marts should also start renting videos," he said. "I drug my feet for a while before I got video rentals, but now I'm glad I did because I couldn't be happier with the way the rental business has been going.

All three Manhattan Mini Marts and a fourth location in Odgen rent video cassettes and VCRs.
While Blacker would not disclose sales figures, he did say that video customers at his stores often come into the store to buy something else and end up also renting a video.

"We get a different type of customer," he said. "The people who are renting from the regular rental places are going there for just that. But this is not the case with convenience and grocery stores.'

Jim Peterson, manager at the Dillon's supermarket in the Westloop Shopping Center expressed the same sentiments about video rentals at stores not specializing in the product.

"A lot of people who come into the store are not planning on getting a video," Peterson said. "But they see one that interests them, and they end up renting it.

"Our rental business is definitely a success," Peterson said.

Although his supermarket is located in the same shopping center as National Video, Peterson said he does not feel his store is competing that much with the specialty store.

"We may get some of their customers who would like to rent a movie after they are closed, but I think basically there is an open market," he said. "So we aren't hurting their business, and they aren't hurting ours.'

Peterson said that because Dillon's is open 24 hours a day, the store gets a lot of business between 10 p.m. and

"People who want to watch a movie later in the evening can have the option of renting from us since we are open 24 hours; whereas, if we weren't here, they wouldn't have that option," Peterson said. Blacker also said having Mini Mart open 24 hours a day is an advantage.

"Business is good later on in the evening when most of the larger (specialty) stores are closed," he said. "With the hours we keep, we can accommodate those individuals who would like to rent movies at all hours of the day or night.'

Sharon Johns, who is co-owner of National Video with her husband, said she believes stores not specializing in videos are really no threat to

"We only sell videos, so we try to keep our customers happy by providing the best service and selection possible," Johns said. "The other (non-specialty) stores usually have added products. So we feel that by specializing in only videos, we have the advantage of specialization."

Johns said the convenience stores may take away some of their "late night" business, but not enough to make a big difference.

'The smaller convenience stores do not have near the selection that we do," she said.

Most people interviewed said the local video market is not currently saturated, but could be in the future. "Right now, I don't think that the market is really over-saturated because video rentals is still kind of a new business," Peterson said. "But in a couple of years down the road, it could be a different story."

Playground addition

Project to improve City Park

By BECKY HOWARD Collegian Reporter

By fall, youngsters in Manhattan will be able to, among other things, run on a shaking clatter bridge, climb on chain ladders, slide down a spiral slide, play on various towers and ride a trolley ride - all on the same playground apparatus.

A large redwood structure complete with all of these features is being constructed as Phase One of a two-phase project to improve the playground at the Manhattan City Park, said Ron Fehr, assistant director of the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

"About two years ago, we started planning the project," Fehr said. "What we wanted to do is design a structure that would require different levels of skill of each child, but children of all ages could utilize it. A design was found and different schematics of that design were developed to serve our needs and fit in the area we had to work with."

New playground equipment has also been added to some of the other parks in Manhattan, Fehr said.

"A lot of the old equipment really needed replaced. The new structure in the City Park should enable more kids to play on it at the same time, whereas on the old equipment, they had to stand in line and wait their turn," he said.

The reconstruction in the City Park playground involves the development of three circular areas.

In the largest circle, a 125-foot circumference, the new large playground apparatus will be constructed. Two smaller 60-foot circumference circular areas will be developed in different ways.

"A smaller scale version of the large structure wll branch off of it into one of the smaller circular areas. This structure will be designed to challenge the skill of toddlers, but not be attractive to the older kids. This area will be the toddler area, and it will also include 'shovel scoops' that the little kids can sit in and scoop sand," Fehr said.

The third circular area will contain some of the old playground equipment, including the swingsets, and will serve as a picnic area, Fehr playground, put in some new benches and plant a dozen additional shade trees around the perimeter of the playground area," he said. Federal funds totaling $30,000 were received for the two-phase project, Fehr said. "This was some of the last kind of this funding available in Manhattan. We were very fortunate to get it," Fehr said. "In the last three years, we've made $50,000 dollars worth of plaground improvements in Manhat-

Fehr said until construction is completed, those who wish to use the playground can use those playground facilities still available in the park. He added that some of the old equipment has been moved to other parks in Manhattan.

But if that is an inconvenience, he said youngsters may try out structures similar to the new one for the city park at Don Harbour Memorial Park on Casement Road, Douglass Park on Yuma Street, and the Sunset

Center focuses on education

By VAL JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Suicide, especially teen-age suicide, is a topic that many people don't like to talk about. Yet, suicide is the second leading cause of death among teen-agers in the United States.

During the past 20 years, teen-age suicide has increased dramatically, said Linda Teener, consultation and education services manager at Pawnee Mental Health Services, 2001 Claflin Road.

Reports vary, but different studies show that teen suicide has increased anywhere from 135 percent to 300 percent since 1960.

Teener said Pawnee doesn't receive many calls from people actually contemplating suicide, but a lot of people who call or come in show suicide symptoms, such as depression and problems eating or sleeping.

Teener said Pawnee focuses on preventive education. If people learn coping skills at a young age, they are more likely to be able to deal with problems that arise during their

"We do a lot of educational sessions, including substance abuse, stress management, communication skills and parenting skills," she said. "We have one person whose job it is to do educational programming in elementary schools up through high schools and community and public groups."

In the first six months of 1986, Pawnee conducted 226 educational sessions, compared to a total of 300 in 1985. Approximately 8,000 to 9,000 people participate each year, Teener said.

"When we are dealing specifically with drug and alcohol use and abuse, we stress teaching the kids how to make good decisions, how to handle peer pressure, how to communicate and how to handle stress," she said.

Teener said the staff at Pawnee is seeing a lot more people with eating disorders. She's not sure if more people are actually developing disorders or if the disorders are just being identified more easily.

"We're having to cover broad areas with the kids, because we've found that kids these days do not have the coping skills they need," Teener said. "They don't learn in school how to handle stress, how to communicate and how to deal with their problems.

Teener said she wants to teach teen-agers to deal with all problems. If they can learn to cope with stress and talk about their problems, they are more likely to be able to handle their problems and go on from there.

She said the sessions dealing specifically with teen suicide are being requested more often. Schools are becoming more sensitive to the issues and symptoms of suicide.

The goal of the educational sessions is to discuss resources available to the students and try to help them think more objectively about what they can do and who they can turn to. She wants the students to understand the reality of what suicide is all about.

Teener said some schools have objected to the suicide prevention workshops because they felt if someone talked about suicide, someone else would run out and commit suicide.

"The reality is, if the inclination is there, it's there," she said. "Talking about or not talking about it does not make the problem go away.

"Generally, if you talk about it, it's more likely to bring some of the real problems out in the open and make it more acceptable to talk about. More often than not, it prevents the pro-

Teener attended a conference in Washington last year where a study done in California determined that 11 percent of all high school students there had either contemplated or attempted suicide.

Because this figure seemed so high, Teener said the study was replicated in eight other cities across the country, including Topeka. These results supported the original 11 percent finding.

said approximately 2 million teenagers each year consider or actually attempt suicide each year. About 6,000 apparent teen-age suicides are reported in the United States each

In addition to the services Pawnee provides, local schools have psychiatrists, social workers and counselors available to the students, Teener said.

Speaker relates group's purposes

By KATHY CONRADT Collegian Reporter

A few years ago, all Anthea Estergard knew about Central America was that it was south of Mexico. But today, she is an active member of the Fox Valley Pledge of Resistance in Crystal Lake, Ill., she told the Manhattan Alliance on Central America Thursday night at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Estergard, a former school teacher and mother of three, shared her experiences as a member of a group in opposition to the U.S. policy on Central America.

She was chosen as the peace and justice contact person for her church, she said. This involved choosing a part of the world she was interested in and educating the congregation.

After narrowing her choices to Central America, she had to decide the specific country and the issues on which to concentrate. Nicaragua was her final choice.

Estergard then began studying the issues and hearing reports from people who had been there.

"I developed a sense of outrage about the situation," she said. "I was pushed over the edge by it and joined the group.'

The purpose of her group is to educate as many people as possible by bringing the issue out in a non-violent way, she said. Some of the ways the group does this is to hold vigils in towns near and in Chicago, and sit-ins at the offices of politicians.

Twice the sit-ins have led to her arrest, she said. Group members sit in the offices and read the names of civilians who have been killed by Contra soldiers. They refuse to leave until the police come to escort them to jail, she

They also help gather humanitarian aid for school and hospital items to send to Nicaragua. The humanitarian aid is sent to the Quijote Center in Virgina which is trying to match the military aid Congress sends with supplies that save lives, she said.

The Fox Valley Pledge of Resistance is comprised of people from college age to those more than 70 years old, she said. Most come from several small towns near Chicago.

"At first, I was uncomfortable joining a group that seemed radical, but you have to do what you think is right," Estergard said.

According to this finding, Teener Professor, Shultz honor Pakistani

By The Collegian Staff

William Richter, professor and head of the department of political science, recently attended a luncheon hosted by Secretary of State George Shultz to honor Mohammad Khan Junejo, prime minister of Pakistan.

The guests included state department officials, former ambassadors to Pakistan and about two dozen authorities from the academic world, Richter said.

Richter was invited because he is considered an expert on Pakistan, a country that has been the subject of Richter's study since 1977. He has written extensively on Pakistani politics and on international and. security issues in Southern Asia. In 1981, he addressed a congressional hearing on military assistance to Pakistan, and met with President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq last summer.

June jo is visiting the United States at the invitation of President Reagan. The purpose of the prime minister's visit is to gain a greater understanding of each nation's position on many important issues, including the border country of Afghanistan, military aid and drug control.

"We share a joint commitment with Pakistan to end the hostilities in Afghanistan by means of a Soviet withdrawal," Richter said.

Afghanistan is located on the northwest border of Pakistan.

The United States has acted as an ally to the country of more than 90 million people. During the last five years alone the United States has given Pakistan $5 billion in financial assistance, Richter said.

About a half of that assistance has been in the form of military aid.

A total of 100 possible points could be awarded for the program. The points were broken down with 30 possible points for program design, 50 possible points for program development and 20 possible points for resources and support.

The Kansas State Board of Education said the program "is a process by which schools and school districts can be recognized by the community and the state for providing a program worthy of the designation 'excellent.'

The board also said a school should participate "in order to make a better educational environment for students, present and future. Personnel of those schools who can and will make identification of existing program of excellence may well play an important part in the future of our schooling process."

Programs designated as excellent will be made available to other agencies searching for such programs. This plan will involve diffusion. visitations, informational brochures, and assistance in the adoption and adaption process.

Bus service may abandon clients

Those wanting to travel between Wichita and Lincoln, Neb., in the near future but don't have a car, had better get their thumbs in shape.

Trailways Lines Inc. recently announced that it plans to end twice-daily bus routes between Lincoln and Wichita. The proposal would leave 10 Kansas towns without any bus service: Marysville, Blue Rapids, Waterville, Belleville, Concordia, Minneapolis, Lindsborg, McPherson, Moundridge and Hesston.

The Kansas Corporation Commission stepped in and ordered the bus company to publish a notice on or before Aug. 11 that would allow residents of these communities to protest, according to Steve Menaugh, commission director of information, in a recent article in the Wichita Eagle-Beacon. A decision by the KCC is expected by Oct. 28.

While the KCC has jurisdiction over the portion of the routes in Kansas, Trailways could appeal the decision through the federal Interstate Commerce Commission. Menaugh said that history has shown the ICC to side with bus companies.

If Trailways is allowed to end the north-south routes by the April 1 proposed date, it will not be in the public's best interest. Not only would it affect passengers, it would hinder people and companies that use the bus service for shipping freight.

The bus service may be a private company, but it is supposed to provide public transportation .

Athletic fee choice

Editor,

A proposal is afoot to assess each student $15 or $20 per semester as an athletic support

Two issues seem to gather the majority of the controversy associated with this proposal. The first asks how appropriate it is to gather an additional fee from students given the current status of student numbers and educational finances. The second concerns the concept of fairness when students with little or no interest in the products of the intercollegiate athletic department are forced to support same.

I do not think it is obvious that collection of an additional fee is appropriate, but if it is decided that such a small fee is inconsequential in the overall costs of an education or that students should welcome the chance to further support their future alma mater then I have a "modest proposal" in answer to the fairness issue.

I suggest that each student, during registration, be asked to select, on a prepared form, where his or her "extra" fee should be spent. The choices should be limited to three, or perhaps four, to ensure a chance for a significant amount of money to go to any individual choice. The three or four choices could be chosen by referendum on an annual basis. Obviously, the intercollegiate atletic department would be listed first.

hoices could be a fund to support in creased handicapped access to campus buildings, a fund to enhance the salaries of teaching faculty, or perhaps a fund to support club sports. In the case of students who fail to indicate an allocation, there are two

First, the unallocated fees could be distributed equally to all options. Second, the unallocated fees could be given to the University general fund with the proviso that they not be spent on any of the listed choices.

If we are to extract an additional fee from students I think it would be most interesting to see how they allocate it. The results might give the University a better idea of what students consider important in addition to pulling in extra funding.

Reagan stands idle

When I picked up the paper and read the story of President Reagan's speech regarding South Africa, I was immediately sickened. How can the leader of a nation that stands for freedom and democracy stand idly by while a minority government controls the majority of its people by the power of the Reagan showed off his remarkable ability to talk out of both sides of his mouth when he called South Africa's apartheid system "morally wrong and politically unacceptable," but still managed to praise the Botha government for its reforms. Reforms? What reforms?

Maybe the reforms our chief executive had in mind were the restriction of the press, or maybe the progressive reforms of the Pretoria government which allow it to keep some black children out of school without giving any explanation. Or maybe our president was praising the ability of this government to charge into a church and order the minister to stop his sermon.

President Reagan's stand on South Africa is a moral outrage, and I hope the people of the United States will rise up against Reagan's hypocritical support of the oppressive regime in South Africa. The United States of America is the world leader for freedom and democracy and it is high time our policy toward South Africa began to reflect this.

Tax exemptions may be expensive

On Aug. 5, voters in Kansas will be asked to decide the fate of two amendments to the Kansas Constitution.

Perhaps ironically, one proposal, intended to improve the atmosphere for industries wanting to locate in the state, and in turn aid in economic development, is being attacked for doing the opposite.

The amendment, H.R.C. 5047, "proposes to amend the Kansas Constitution to permit counties or cities to exempt, for up to 10 years, all or any part of buildings and tangible personal property used exclusively by a new business for manufacturing, for research and development, or for the storing of goods sold or traded in interstate commerce. An exemption could also be granted for new buildings or for expansions of existing buildings and associated equipment."

That wording is from "Highlights, 1986 Kansas Legislature," published by the Kansas Legislative Research Department.

Basically, the proposal asks voters to decide whether to amend the state constitution to give both cities and counties the power to grant property tax exemptions of up to 10 years to new businesses.

But that is where the balancing act begins, especially in light of budget cutting on the federal level, and the state's recurring fiscal difficulties.

The intention of the proposal is similar to past widespread use of industrial (or tax) revenue bonds, which were designed to be used to create jobs and attract new industries. But the IRBs were often used by existing businesses for relocation purposes, or resulted in new businesses having an edge over competition due to lower operating costs.

But as the saying goes, there's no such thing as a free ride.

Many communities, faced with reduced federal and state aid, especially if predictions concerning the fate of revenue sharing funds prove true, have to depend primarily on property taxes for income. And when some parties are not obligated to share in that load, while still using the community, the load becomes greater on existing property and business owners.

Fred Weaver, chairman of the Kansas Board of Tax Appeals, along with Commissioner Keith Farrar, have issued warnings about the proposal, saying it would increase personal property taxes, hurt school districts and threaten the survival of small towns and

Although few communities would take adverse steps concerning economic development for the community, existing businesses must also be considered when granting tax

But the proposal's author, House Speaker Mike Hayden, disagrees with the gentlemen from the tax appeals board. Hayden is also a candidate for the Republican Party's gubernatorial nomination.

Hayden is reported as acknowledging that some shifts in the system would occur, but feels they will be balanced by proposed revitalization of the community's economy through new businesses and subsequent increased levels of employment.

But there is no guarantee that the state, overall, would see those increases. Intrastate rivalries between communities. with bidding wars as to which community would give the most away, could increase conflicts within the state. Yet still after the relocation - and bidding - is over, no new industry would have entered the state. But tax revenues would have already been reduc-

At one time, the plan would have probably been more realistic, but, as reported in the July 28 issue of U.S. News & World Report, the "tactic of offering grants and tax breaks if losing its edge because everybody's doing Incentives by Riley County and the city in an attempt to keep businesses displaced by construction of the Town Center Mall from moving to Pottawatomie County is just one example of competition between communities and counties.

Weaver is quoted by The Associated Press as saying, "When you start fooling around with tax exemptions and your valuation goes down, the effect is to draw money away from the other districts in the state. What happens in one corner of the state impacts on the rest of the state. Economic incentives have long been granted to draw new business and industry, but extreme caution must be used to avoid unduly punishing existing sources of revenue, even if not done intentionally. Kansans must ask themselves what price they can afford, both in tangibles and intangibles in the quest of economic revitalization.

Rescuers herd whales, investigate beaching

MARCO ISLAND, Fla. - Rescue teams herded 39 whales back into the Gulf of Mexico on Thursday, while experts investigating a mass beaching of the animals found that there was no food inside seven animals that had died.

Some of the pilot whales swam away under their own power, and rescuers towed stragglers in nets to deeper water.

"They are still checking around the area to see if they can find any more," said Glenn Young, curator of mammals at Sea World near Orlando, which sent a team of animal care specialists after the animals were spotted Wednesday

'It appears that most of the animals were devoid of food. They had not eaten in awhile, and they had some parasites and stomach ulcers."

The findings were the same in the victims of another mass beaching in early June by 27 false killer whales at Fort Myers Beach about 35 miles north of Marco Island. They were herded back to sea but beached themselves again three days later, and only one survived. It remained in guarded condition Thursday at Sea World.

Young noted both species generally feed on squid in deep water. If they spent much time in shallow water, he said their main food source would be missing. Scientists don't know what makes whales drive themselves ashore.

Pilot walks off job, takes early retirement

TAMPA, Fla. - A pilot who told passengers he was "sick and tired of delays" and abandoned his flight as it waited to take off has decided to take early retirement, Eastern Airlines said.

The pilot, who has 20 years' experience, told passengers on the flight Tuesday night from Atlanta to Tampa that he was "hanging it up." and brought the DC-9 back to the gate from the taxiway. He then walked off the plane.

The flight had been delayed earlier, and the pilot had just informed passengers of a 15- to 20-minute wait for takeoff from Atlanta-Hartsfield International Airport. The pilot, who was not identified, requested early retirement and it was approved, Eastern spokesman Glenn Parsons said Thursday.

"He had some 20 years of commercial aviation, and an excellent record," Parsons said. "He feels relieved that the decision was made and the request was granted to-Eastern ticketholders worried about boarding a flight with the same pilot had been calling, said Parsons. "Some passengers obviously were concerned about the pilot's condition, shall we say.

The flight took off two hours later with another pilot, officials said.

Contest offers relief for 'hot joke' winner

ATHENS, Ala. - Dave Hamlin says it's so hot his pigs melted and the grease ran into the fields. Now he's growing french fries.

That tall tale won Hamlin 1,000 pounds of ice in a radio station contest for the the best "How Hot Is It?" joke.

Susan Lauderdale of WZYP-FM said the station encouraged listeners to call in their "How Hot" jokes for an hour Thursday. A panel of judges at the station rated the quips, and Hamlin's was selected as the best.

'We're trying to turn a little bad into some fun and have a good time with it," said Lauderdale That means 1,000 pounds of ice for Hamlin, courtesy of the radio station and the Shaw Ice Co.

Some of the runners-up:

"It's so hot I saw two trees fight over a dog."

"It's so hot birds are using potholders to take worms out of the ground."

"It's so hot even stray animals get a hot meal. The National Weather Service reported a high of 95 degrees Thursday in Athens.

GE awards $25,000 for money-saving idea

WINFIELD - One good idea was worth a year's pay to Allen Young, a Winfield man awarded $25,000 for coming up with a way to save the Air Force $140,000 a Young, 44, is a test mechanic at General Electric's Aircraft Engine Maintenance Center at Strother Field near Winfield. He received a $25,000 check - minus taxes for an idea that is now saving the Air Force money. The award is part of GE's Suggestion Plan, which began 80 years ago

Young suggested that a sensor in the main fuel control of the J-85 jet engine didn't have to be replaced during overhaul, as indicated in a technical manual. He started thinking about the sensor because of a backlog of work on new sensors.

We had so many fuel controls waiting," he said. "I put one on and tested it, and it went right through. The sensor is used in engines on the Air Force's F-5 fighter-trainer and on F-5s flown by several other countries, including Switzerland, Singapore and Indonesia. The J-85 accounts for about 35 percent of the business at GE's Strother plant, said plant manager E.M. Bonvillain. Young, a 20-year veteran of the Strother plant, submitted his idea in November 1983. The suggestion had to wind its way through GE's corporate structure and through the Air Force before finally earning approval.

Women protest society's taboos — topless COLUMBIA, Mo. - Women bared their breasts at Peace Park on the University of Missouri campus Saturday, staging a demonstration against convention. Between 20 and 25 topless women took part, joined by several men. They sat in a circle, sang songs and held a picnic. A crowd of about 100, mostly men, watched the demonstration, some of them taking pictures.

After plans for the action were announced earlier in the week, Boone County Prosecutor Joe Moseley said there were no laws in the state of Missouri or any city ordinance in Columbia prohibiting women from going bare-breasted in public. The women said it is more comfortable to go without shirts in hot summer

'For years I've seen men doing the same thing," said one of them, Debbie Crites. 'When they got hot, they shuck their shirt off. I've been wanting to shuck my shirt off, but every time I want to, I can't."

She said she thought it would be against the law, but after learning that it wasn't, "I found a lot of other women who felt the same way I did, and it just gave me incentive and support to go ahead and do what I wanted when I wanted to. 'I think clothes come in handy, but I don't think they're a necessity," Crites said.

The women said they were not members of any particular group. A leaflet distributed earlier bore the names of the Women's Freedom Front in Iowa City, Iowa, the Cross Your Heart Support Network in Santa Cruz, Calif., and Citizens for Media Responsibility Without Law in Oshkosh, Wis.

"For women to appear top-free under environmental conditions that render clothes unnecessary except as a body taboo is a valid expression of human rights," the statement said.

DETROIT - Steve Balboni singled in Willie Wilson with two outs in the top of the ninth inning Sunday as the Kansas City Royals posted a 5-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers as Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen won in his first relief appearance since 1984.

Willie Hernandez, 6-5, walked Wilson with one out. George Brett flied out, but Jorge Orta singled Wilson to second and Balboni followed with a bloop to center field, which Chet Lemon dived for, but couldn't catch.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - With the Southeast in the grip of the worst drought in a century, even skeptics have been calling on modern-day dowsers to witch up a well with their Y-shaped branches.

"People who don't normally believe in dowsing are resorting to it," said George Glenn, 55, president of the Georgia chapter of the American Society of Dowsers. "I'd say dowsers around here are working about 10 times more than normal."

Dowsers across the Southeast are reporting an increase in calls for help, said Paul Sevigny, 66, former national president of the Danville, Vt.-based dowsers society, which claims 3,500 members nationwide.

'Oh man, it's driving me nuts. I'm getting more business than I can handle," said dowser Les Tenold, 66. of Atlanta, a retired Air Force colonel who says he gets up to five calls a day and claims a 95 percent success rate.

Garry and Wanda Denton of Hohenwald said they contacted dowser Leon Lawson because they did not want to waste time and money poking holes in their land in search of water

"My husband was afraid of drilling at this time, especially as dry as it's been, so we called Mr. Lawson," said Wanda Denton, 32.

Lawson spent more than an hour walking across the Denton's property with his Y-shaped hickory branch pointed away from him. Suddenly the stick arched down: Water! Drilling will begin this week.

minute the well will produce. Others, such as Nashville well driller Gene Purdue, say dowsing is

"I drill more wells dry behind a water witch than I do anything." Purdue said.

Scientists also argue dowsing is a hoax.

"There's little to disguise the fact that it's hocus-pocus," said Don Rima, a geologist in the division of ground water protection with the Tennessee Department of Health and Environment.

'No explanation has any merit as to how water witching works," Rima said. "The matters of where you drill and how deep are important if you're after maximum yield. But the water table is everywhere. It doesn't matter where you drill.

Lawson does his dowsing with a hickory stick. Tenold uses a stainless steel Y-rod covered with plastic, and Walter Dale, 81, of Hendersonville, N.C., president of his state's chapter. uses nylon rods.

Delton Anglin, 53, has been witching around Franklin, Tenn., for 15 years and recommends a dowsing rod made of apple or peach tree

"I've tried to switch off of other trees and they all pull, but fruitbearing trees seem to pull more.'

Some dowsers charge for their help. Tenold said he asks $40 a visit. But others say asking for a fee might cause them to lose their powers.

Library to undergo changes help decrease the number of

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

Several changes are in store for Farrell Library in an effort to not only update its image, but also improve its operations.

Primary among these changes is the restructuring of the secondfloor periodicals reading room. Preliminary expansion began last year, and tables in the room were removed to make space for 1,000 new titles, said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

"As we have gotten additional funding, we have been able to purchase additional materials," Hobrock said. "Consequently, we have run out of space. A plan has been developed which expands shelving space. One of the requirements to do this is to remove the study carrels.

In addition to adding shelf space. removal of the carrels should also periodicals that are damaged by library patrons.

"The carrels provide private space and make it easier for people to mutilate or cut or rip out things in the periodicals," Hobrock said. "We spent $7,000 to replace or repair damages we identified this year." Unless a damaged periodical is brought to the attention of the library staff, it is not repaired.

An electronic entrance/exit system similar to the library entrance/exit system on the first floor will also be added to the periodicals reading room.

When we set the room up in 1983, we had to have two entrances. This requires guards at both places 15 hours per day. Manpower and cost to do this is high." Hobrock said. It will cost the library 8 cents per periodical to have a metal target inserted into it, allowing detection of

'We feel it is worth the investment," he said. "In the long run, it's going to pay off." The new entrance/exit will be located in the center of the room. Hobrock said funds for the renovation project will come from the library's operating budget, and the project should begin sometime next year.

The library's policy for borrowing bound periodicals has also been changed.

"For four years, the policy has been that bound periodicals newer than 1960 could circulate for seven days and could be renewed indefinitely." Hobrock said. This policy. effective during the past four years, greatly inconvenienced undergraduates

"When they (undergraduates) get assignments, someone in the class is going to get the book first. Everyone else is out of luck." he

Hobrock said the new policy will allow post-1960 bound periodicals to be checked out for three days, nonrenewable. He said this policy is 'not ideal, but better.'

Hobrock also said several computer terminals, similar to those in the circulation area, will be installed on the first floor. They will enable students to search for a periodical by keying in the author, title or subject. The terminal will tell if the periodical is on the shelf, if it is checked out, the last date it was used and the call number.

Hobrock said this will be beneficial for students because, unlike the card catalog, the terminal "can tell you if it's on the shelf or not.

This is only a preview of the future, and that eventually, a complete, on-line computerized card catalog will be implemented in the library, he said.

Gubernatorial candidates debate issues

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - In their last public debate before the Aug. 5 primary. seven candidates seeking the Republican nomination for governor gathered this weekend to debate the tuture of Kansas

All pledged to work to restore the health of the state's economy, which has been hurt by low prices on oil and farm products and a slump in the aviation industry. Each had a different approach to solving the state's depressed economy, but all agreed there were no quick fixes.

It will take two to three years to feel the positive impact of economic development," said Larry Jones, a Wichita businessman

The candidates appeared Saturday night before about 150 people at a forum titled "Conference on the Future of Kansas." which was sponsored by the Wichita Pachyderm

The winner of the GOP primary will face Democratic Lt. Gov. Tom Docking in the general election. Docking is not opposed in the primary

The Republican candidates are: Jones: Barbara Pomeroy of Whitewater. Secretary of State Jack Brier: House Speaker Mike Hayden. Gene Bicknell of Pittsburg: Richard Peckham of Andover: and Bill McDonald of Meriden.

All candidates pledged an austere budget policy, with Peckham and McDonald promising to cut taxes and trim the size of state govern-

Brier said he was the only candidate calling for a freeze on state hiring

Bicknell said he would help the state's oil industry by removing the severance tax on oil production. He promised to lead a coalition of farmstate governors in trying to convince officials at boards of trades to raise commodity prices

Other candidates said changes at the federal level would have a greater impact on the farm crisis than anything state government could do

'The Kansas wheat farmer needs $4 a bushel for his wheat or more." Jones said. "Governors can do little to create that Hayden said he supported a partial moratorium and retraining programs. He said farmers also needed state help in handling large interest payments on their mortgages.

Brier said he lavored a system of bartering food with other nations

To aid the state's oil industry, all seven said they would sign a bill raising the severance tax exemption from the current production minimum of three barrels to five barrels a day. Bicknell, McDonald, Peckham and Pomeroy said they supported removal of the tax.

Lemond's second-place finish last year and his third place in 1984 made him one of the favorites for this year's event

The last leg, over a 158-mile course from Cosne to Paris, was won by Guido Bontempi of Italy at the head of a large pack of riders. Josef Liekens of Belguim finished second and Eric Vanderaerden, also of Belgium, was third.

Lemond finished Sunday's leg in 44th place, in the middle of a large pack of cyclists, all of whom were given the same time as Bontempi 6 hours, 51 minutes and 55 seconds

In cycling, when a group finishes together all the cyclists get the same time, even though time elapses before they all have crossed the finish line. On Sunday, all 132 cyclists still in the race finished officially in the same time.

Scarcely a week ago, a bitter rivalry seemed to be developing between Lemond and Hinault, both members of the team sponsored by La Vie Claire, but the problems were resolved. Working together, Lemond and Hinault finished one-two in one of the most difficult Alpine legs, leav ing all competition far behind

Hinault said he was "a man of his word," and would not try to overtake Lemond in the final stages of the race, which began July 4 and traced a counterclockwise circuit around the country

Lemond admitted in a French television interview Sunday night that there was "tension" on the team because of the rivalry with Hinault. 'I think he wanted to win his sixth

32 die in Beirut car bombing

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A car packed with a quarter-ton of explosives blew up in a Christian residential district during morning rush hour Monday, killing 32 people, wounding 140 and wrecking dozens of buildings, police reported.

The blast tore balconies off highrise apartment houses and set seven of them ablaze. Rescuers using metal ladders and forklifts saved more than 50 people trapped on rooftops and the remaining balconies.

Ambulances raced in and out of the stricken area. Radio stations broadcast urgent apppeals for blood dona-

It was the worst of seven car bombings this year in Lebanon, whose 11-year-old sectarian civil war has taken more than 100,000 lives.

No one has claimed responsibility for any of the attacks, six of them in Christian east Beirut and one in the southern port city of Sidon, a Moslem stronghold. A total of 98 people have been killed and 580 wounded.

"My brothers! My two brothers!" Josiane Azar screamed. She fainted when firefighters pulled two bodies from the rubble of a clothing store owned by her brothers Joseph and Wadih.

Many victims were burned beyond identification. The explosion of the white Mercedes gouged a crater more than six feet deep in Wadih Naim street near the Star cinema in the Ein Rummaneh district of Christian east Beirut.

Firefighters and civil defense squads spent eight hours in rescue

Police said up to 550 pounds of TNT

ploded at 8:28 a.m. when Ein Rummaneh's Snoubra neighborhood was jammed with traffic.

Shattered power cables dangled into the streets from gaping windows in the smoke-blackened apartment buildings. The streets were awash with water from fire hoses.

A thick pall of smoke rose from the burning buildings and more than 50 smoldering cars. The force of the explosion hurled the engine of one car more than 100 yards.

Authorities declared about 30 buildings uninhabitable, and 20 shops were destroyed.

"I was ironing.... I felt as if my eardrums were split. Window glass shards fell all around me," said Nawal Chattas, a housewife. "It was a mad scene afterwards. People screamed. Motorists raced away, honking their horns, and the wail of ambulance sirens was deafening." Public Health Minister Joseph Hashem, a Christian, was in tears as he toured the neighborhood. "Words are too weak a vehicle to express the adequate condemnation of such a barbaric crime." he said.

The worst of the previous car bombings killed 30 people and wounded 133 on Jan. 21 in the Furn el-Shubbak residential area of east Beirut.

Christian militiamen in combat fatigues and Lebanese army military police cordoned off the area around Monday's blast.

Spokesmen for Christian factions have claimed the car bombings in east Beirut were the work of the Syrian secret service as part of a campaign to force President Amin Gemayel from office. Syria denies the charge.

Shuttle crew tapes indicate knowledge of craft's explosion

By The Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston -Space shuttle Challenger Pilot Michael J. Smith exclaimed "Uh-oh!" at the moment the spacecraft exploded, and some of the crew apparently lived long enough to turn on emergency air packs, NASA said Monday.

Smith's remark, heard on a tape of the shuttle's intercom system, was the first indication that any of the seven astronauts killed may have been aware of the Jan. 28 disaster, the worst in the history of space exploration.

The astronauts probably survived the explosion and breakup of the shuttle orbiter and could have had 6 to 15 seconds of "useful consciousness" inside the crew compartment after the blast, said Dr. Joseph Kerwin, an astronautphysician who investigated the cause of death for the crew

The force of the crew compartment hitting the ocean was so destructive, however, that the precise cause of death for the crew could not be determined, he said.

The intercom tapes were recovered from the wreckage of the Challenger and analyzed by National Aeronautics and Space Administration and IBM engineers.

The tape, a transcript of which was released by NASA on Monday, offered no verbal evidence that any crew members other than Smith knew anything was abnormal prior to his single exclamation 73 seconds after launch - the very second that ground controllers lost all communication with the craft. Previously, the last known words from the Challenger were those heard from Commander Dick Scobee to ground controllers, when he responded "Roger, go at throttle up," confirming that the shuttle's main engines had been raised to full School teacher Christa McAuliffe and mission specialists Ronald McNair and Gregory B. Jarvis are not heard on the recording.

NASA said the three "could monitor all voice activity but did not make any...comments.

As recently as July 17, NASA said its reviews of the voice tape indicated that the crew was unaware of the events preceding the breakup of the orbiter.

NASA said Monday, however, that further analysis showed that Smith's final comment offered the first potential indication of crew awareness of the accident.

Smith's exclamation could in dicate "there was a moment of awareness," said Admiral Richard H. Truly, associate administrator for space flight.

Four of the air packs were recovered and three had been turned on, with an analysis of gauges on two of the air packs showing threefourths to seven-eighths of the air had been breathed, Kerwin said.

One of the air packs that had been turned on belonged to Smith, Truly said. It was not known who the other two activated air packs belonged to, and the recovered air pack that was not turned on belonged to Scobee, NASA said.

Smith and Scobee could not easily have turned on their air packs without getting out of their launch couches, Truly said Astronauts Judy Resnick and Ellison Onizuka were riding just behind Smith and Scobee, and they may have assisted Smith, he said.

"The most plausible explanation is that one of the two reached over and turned on Mike's air pack," Truly

Kerwin said that it was possible the crew members lost consciousness due to a loss of pressure inside the crew compartment. The loss of pressure could be deadly even if the crew members were breathing from the air packs, he

The packs, designed to be used for a shuttle emergency on the ground, normally hold about five minutes worth of air, NASA said.

Investigators say the accident occurred when a joint in a solid rocket booster failed and caused superheated gases to burn through the external fuel tank containing liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen, triggering the explosion.

The crew cabin tore loose at 45,000 feet, arced upward to about 65,000 feet, and then began a 2-minute, 45-second plunge to the Atlantic Ocean, Kerwin said.

Acceleration forces at the time of the breakup were estimated at 12 to 20 Gs for about 2 seconds, the report

"Medical analysis indicates that these accelerations are survivable, and that the probability of major injury to crew members is low," it

An analysis showed that if the crew members lost consciousness due to a loss of pressure, they would not have had time to revive as the crew compartment fell into denser air at lower altitudes, Kerwin said.

Bosco switches offices to work for new V.P.

By The Collegian Staff

Student Financial Assistance, New Student Programs and Career Planning and Placement as well as the offices of Admissions and Registrar are all under new leadership. Pat Bosco became the assistant vice president for institutional advancement on Thursday, said Cy Wainscott, University Relations news editor.

Bosco's new position is part of President Jon Wefald's administrative reorganization.

Before the reorganization, the University had two vice presidents: William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services; and George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, Wainscott said.

Now, K-State will have three vice presidents. A search for the new vice president for institutional advancement is being conducted. The position is expected to be filled by Aug.

New admissions representatives, which are currently being selected, will report directly to Bosco.

"The reorganization is part of the new recruitment and retention efforts by the administration," Wainscott said.

Bosco left his position as assistant vice president for educational and student services, where he was responsible for the All-University Open House, commencement programs, and the K-State student leadership development program. He was also the Blue Key Honor Society adviser for Homecoming.

Bosco was elected student body president during the 1970 academic year. During his tenure, he recommended that Student Senate establish a committee to look into the possibility of a recreation complex. Bosco graduated in 1971 with a bachelor's degree in education. He received a master's degree in education in 1973, also from K-State. Bosco earned his doctorate in adult and higher education from the University of Nebraska in Lincoln in 1982.

Bosco joined the K-State administration in 1971. He has been director of student activities, assistant dean of students and assistant to the vice president for student affairs.

Mother, baby doing fine

Chimp delivers 'floppy-eared' infant

By KEVIN CHESTNUT Collegian Reporter

For 90 days, the Sunset Zoo staff and more than a hundred volunteers took turns staring into a cage at Sunset Zoo. The volunteers watched intently for anything out of the ordinary.

Then last Wednesday, after months of intense observation and anticipation, the long anticipated event happened - a baby chimpanzee was born at the Sunset Zoo. The "ball of brown hair" that has caused so much excitement is E.J., the baby chimp named after E.J. Frick, one of the zoo's founders. "He (Frick) has a soft spot in his heart for monkeys and apes, and we thought it would be appropriate to name one of the chimpanzees after him," said Don Wixom, the zoo's curator of education.

"He weighed four pounds when he was born. The average is 2½ to 3½ pounds," Wixom said. "He has brown hair covering his arms, shoulders and head. His face and the bottom of his feet are pink. If I of neurotic sometimes." had to say, I'd say he looks a lot like his mom. He's going to have big floppy ears."

E.J.'s parents are Big Mac, a male who was given to the zoo by McDonald's Restaurants, and Rachel, who is on loan from the Portland, Ore., Zoo. Zoo officials were concerned how Rachel would react to her first baby, E.J. seemed to show some difficulty nursing, but the situation has improved within the last day, Wixom said Monday afternoon.

"Chimp Watch" was the program in which trained volunteers watched the occupants of the E.J. Frick Primate House. The volunteers are usually zoo docents who are familiar with the zoo and conduct tours and animal demonstrations. Many of the docents are University students, Wixom said. "We never expected Rachel to claim a baby," Zoo Curator Caroline Meek said. "She has a lot of bad habits. Actually, she's kind

Another reason Rachel was being watched so closely is because there is a 25 percent to 50 percent mortality rate in infant chimps, Meek

While zoo officials are anxious to show off E.J., the public won't have a chance to see the baby for a while. Meek said the E.J. Frick Primate House will remain closed until E.J. is able to see visitors.

"It's kind of like when a human has a baby," Wixom said. "It's just better to keep them calm for as long as possible to avoid any pro-pneumonia, the measles, mumps or chicken pox very easily," she said. Very few zoos even try to raise baby chimpanzees, Wixom said. Only 15 zoos in the nation have breeding programs.

"In the U.S., there are about 1,200 chimps, 900 of which are used in research labs," he said. "The remaining 300 are in zoos. Of those 300 zoos, only 60 will display the chimps."

Wixom said they plan to continue breeding Big Mac and Rachel, but don't expect another birth for at least four years.

Through gifts and purchases, 12 pieces of artwork have been added to the K-State permanent art collection. The collection was founded by John Helm in 1929.

Helm, a professor of architecture, started the collection with just two oil paintings. The collection has since grown to well over 1,000 items, said Jessica Reichman, curator of art for the Department of Art.

Of the 12 new acquisitions, three were gifts. The first was "Landscape," a 1930 oil painting by Birger Sandzen. It was a gift from the estate of James Farrell, son of former K-State president Francis Farrell.

The second gift was a 1963 untitled ceramic plate by Henry Varnum

Poor. It was a gift from Mary Helm of Manhattan, John Helm's widow. The third gift was a 1976 woodcut on paper titled "Flowing," by Japanese artist Hideo Muranka. It was a gift from Drs. Roy Leeper and Gaylord Hall, both of San Francisco.

Funds from the Friends of Art organization, a support group founded by John Helm in the 1930s to support the art department, aided the purchase of the nine other art pieces. All of the pieces were done by reknowned regional artists, Reichman said.

The collection began with two oil paintings by Lindsborg artist Birger Sandzen. One of these is currently on display in President Jon Wefald's reception area. It is called "Autumn Gold" and was completed in 1926. The second oil by Sandzen,

"Stillwater," is on display in the Union's Bluemont Room. It was completed in 1927. "Since 1929 we have continued to collect artwork, as gifts. Some were willed to the University, or we were able to purchase them from artists,' Reichman said. Most of the gifts are from people who have some affiliation with the University, usually K-State graduates or former pro-

Helm began the collection on the premise that it should contain notable art by regional artists, Reichman said. The backbone of the collection is made up of paintings by Thomas Hart Benton from Missouri, Kansas native John Stewart Curry and Grant Wood of Iowa.

These three make up a trio of Midwest artists working in the 1930s

"Mr. Helm had the foresight to collect art by these three artists. We hope we will have the same foresight when collecting contemporary art," Reichman said.

Various pieces of the collection are loaned to other institutions and museums throughout the country.

"In the last three years we have loaned pieces of our collection to the Wichita Art Museum, The Kansas Museum of History in Topeka, University of Oklahoma Art Museum, University of Nebraska in Lincoln and the Riley County Historical Museum, just to name a few," Reichman said.

On campus, a large portion of the collection is on display in the Union, mainly on the first and second floors. There are also paintings on display in the administrative offices in Anderson, Fairchild and Eisenhower halls and other campus buildings.

Charles Stroh, head of the art department, recently returned from a six-month tour of India. He brought back 53 pieces of graphic artwork created by contemporary East Indian artists.

"I think it's unusual for a University to have such dimension in its collection," Reichman said. "Within the next year, we hope to establish an exhibition of these 53 pieces to send to other campuses and universities to share it with a wider audience."

"We also have a collection of 125 photographs by Gordon Parks. A native of Fort Scott, Parks was a photographer for Life magazine," Reichman said. "We have created a traveling exhibit of 53 of Parks' photographs."

Friends of Art was establised as a support group to promote collecting of fine art at K-State. When Stroh came to K-State in 1980 he revived this group. With his leadership, Friends of Art has become an active organization again, Reichman said.

'The executive committee of the Friends of Art help Professor Stroh and myself decide the direction the art collection will follow. It also helps us make policy decisions concerning the Friends of Art organization,' Reichman said.

People who give Friend of Art gifts usually understand the direction the group is taking the art collection. They usually try to give the group artwork that will help round out a certain part of the collection, Reichman said

Center offers free programs

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

Although everyone in Manhattan pays for the Douglass Center, not many people use its facilities.

The center, located at 901 Yuma St., is used for a variety of purposes. Terry Jones, recreation program technician, said, "University for Man uses it for volleyball, karate, ballet and piano classes. But we also have a basketball court and facilities for weight training. "The thing that makes us different, from say the Rec Complex, is (that) we may not have the equipment they do, but we can provide almost everything they do. And we don't charge anything because it's already paid for by taxpayers," Jones said. "So it would be like charging someone for something they already paid for.

Although the bulk of the activity is geared toward athletics, the center also provides some educational programs. Jones said the center trys to help people help themselves somewhat like Frederick Douglass did.

The center provides tutoring for children, sponsors talks on birth control and invites political speakers to discuss various issues.

The center also sponsors dances and talent shows for younger people in the community, and plans s to Worlds of Fun and Kansas City Royals games. They provide the transportation and the participants have to pay admission.

'We go out and see what the public would like to do. And we use their feedback," Jones said. The center can handle anything from a small party to a big event, Jones said. "If someone calls and wants to use the center, then we try to provide the space and time for them."

The center is a division of the Parks and Recreation Department which allocates funding after they submit a budget.

The center also publishes a newsletter which tells about upcoming activities, past activities, general Douglass Center news and asks for suggestions for programs or ideas that could improve the center. Anyone can receive the newsletter upon request.

Jones says the quality of their service is more important to him than just the quantity.

"It has become more important to me than just saying we have 40 or 50 people here everyday," Jones said. "That would be great, but I think the goal that the staff and myself is trying to achieve is not so much worry about how many people are walking in and out that door, but how many people walking in and out that door have got something by coming in the Douglass Center."

Jones said the center may have had a bad reputation in the past, but he believes that the image is

"Most people have the idea that the center is a bad place because it's on the south side of town. And maybe that was true at one time," he said. "I don't know - I wasn't here. I can't justify what was here in the past. I know about now. And I know the people I work with," he said.

"Sometimes we are here 45 to 50 hours a week and a lot of that is volunteer work...because if we have a program, we're going to do everything humanly possible to make that program go over to serve the community the best we

Jones said he has been trying to gear his programs toward benefiting the entire community and not just specific groups.

"We go out and we plan things and our goal is to serve the community the best we can," he said. "We don't try to cover the blacks or the whites; we are colorblind.

"Once people come here and understand what we're about, they enjoy themselves," he said. "You would be surprised how many people don't realize the center exists, yet their tax dollars are keeping the center open."

The center is open from 3 to 5 p.m. and from 7 to 10 p.m. Monday through Saturday. The center will open earlier for special activities.

The Douglass Community Center was originally a school for black children. The school was eventually closed and then was reopened by the military as a building for black officers, who were segregated from white officers at that time. Then the city of Manhattan bought the center and property surrounding it for recreational use for the community.

The center is named in honor of Frederick Douglass, a former slave who escaped in 1838, with his freedom later bought by the Quakers. After having taught himself to read and write, he later started a newspaper, The

Sponsors, groups host Kickoff '86 to help students in meeting others

By The Collegian Staff

When students arrive on campus for the fall semester, one of the first all-campus activities awaiting them will be Kickoff '86.

Kickoff '86, scheduled for Aug. 23, is an effort to unite students and provide them with an opportunity to renew relationships, said Student Senate Chairwoman Sally Traeger, senior in marketing.

"Kickoff '86 enables freshmen to get together and make new acquaintances since 80 percent of the incoming freshmen are unable to go to the bars in Aggieville," Traeger said. "Kickoff is designed for the students of K-State only, allowing them enough time to become acquainted with as many people as possible."

Members of the football team, K-State cheerleaders, Willie the Wildcat, and the "Pride of Wildcat Land" Marching Band will be par-ticipating in Kickoff '86, said Bill Ar-ck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services, which is coordinating the event. Traeger said organizations such as Greek Affairs and Student Governing Association volunteered their services to provide footwork for raising money for the event. Most of the funding will come from area mer-the event for $75. "We hope to have 25 merchant sponsors for 'Kickoff' this year, as opposed to last year where we had chants who may purchase a table at around 10," Arck said. "The merchants, in turn, can set up a table at the event, getting some exposure with the students.'

The gates will open at 7 p.m. at the south end of the stadium with entertainment to follow.

University President Jon Wefald and Stan Parrish, new head football coach, are both scheduled to to attend the event, Arck said.

"Kickoff '86 will give President Jon Wefald and the student body a chance to get acquainted," he said.

A dance will be from 9 to 11 p.m., ending the evening's festivities.

In case of rain, "Kickoff '86" will be held in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

High temperatures threaten elderly

By LYNETTE KOLSKY Collegian Reporter

Exposure to high temperatures and humidity during the summer months can be a serious health threat to the elderly and disabled.

In Manhattan there are several organizations that are helping these people get relief from the heat.

The Riley County Retired Seniors Volunteer Program has been loaning out fans to people who need them. Jose de la Torre of RSVP said people over the age of 60 are given priority for the fans, but if someone calls and needs a fan, program volunteers will take one to them.

De la Torre said the program hasn't had many calls this summer, but he attributes that to the relatively cool weather.

Fans are delivered by a representative of RSVP, but the volunteers do more than just drop the fan off at the doorstep. They also check houses to ensure the safety of the elderly.

"We don't want to aggravate the situation," de la Torre said. When delivering a fan to one home, volunteers found the windows had been covered with plastic. This didn't allow air to circulate and would have made the fan ineffective, so they removed the plastic from a couple of the windows and opened them to solve the problem.

Sometimes when checking the residence they find other problems, such as individuals having no food in the house. Problems such as this are brought to the attention of other service agencies.

De la Torre said RSVP will take donations of fans, but added that they will only be accepted if they are in good working order.

The Social and Rehabilitation Services offers the Low Income Energy Assistance Program. This program helps to pay the cooling bills of the disabled or those 65 and older.

Rhonda Goerke, program technician for LEIAP, said the program also has a separate program for those who need a fan or air conditioner due to a medical emergency. To qualify, the person must have a signed statement from a doctor or registered nurse. Applicants also must have had their utilities cut off or be in danger of having them shut

"It's kind of hard to find people that fit into this category, but there are a few," Goerke said.

This program will pay up to $300 in delinquent utility bills. It also provides up to $50 on the purchase or rental of a fan and up to $300 for an air conditioner.

The Red Cross is also providing fans for the elderly and disabled or those with low incomes.

The emergency medical technicians are sitting in their ambulance down on the track as they are alerted of a possible heart attack victim in Section 10, Row 19.

Up to now, the unusual October heat hasn't caused many problems for the fans watching the football game between K-State and the University of Nebraska. As the EMTs near the victim, they see that someone has begun administering cardiopulmonary resuscitation. They know that the victim desperately needs medication to regulate heart rhythm. They also know that the patient may need to be defibrillated, but sometimes knowing these things adds to the frustration of being an EMT.

Currently, EMTs staff the Riley County Ambulance Service, and therefore, the service is classified as a type two service.

An EMT is not the same as a paramedic. Paramedics have more training and are able to provide advanced life support that EMTs are neither trained for, nor allowed by law to provide. A service which staffs paramedics is classified as a type one service.

Recently, Richard Kinsman, director of the Riley County Ambulance Service announced his resignation effective Aug. 1. This could mean that within the next few months changes are in store for the service.

The medical community in Manhattan and the Riley County Commission are responsible for making decisions concerning the ambulance service in this county. Two questions facing those parties are: Will the changes make the service more cost effective, and will the service provide the county adequate emergency medical care?

Considering the population of Manhattan, the geographical size of Riley County, and the fact that about 30 percent of all patients in need of emergency medical care in this county require advanced emergency care, some in the community are deliberating a change from type two service to a type one service.

County Commissioner Marjorie Morse said she believes that before a higher level of care can be considered, the service must be stabilized in order to operate within its present budget.

"Right now, we're just trying to reorganize and then take a good, hard look at what the budget is going to do," she said.

Morse said the budget needs to be stabilized once a new director is named. "One way to do it is to make the operation more efficient, and we've got to get it effective at its current level before we can consider advancing the level of service," she said. What we need to know, if we went to a higher level, is what this would do to the budget," Morse said. The 1986 budget for the service was about $450,000 and consisted of three main parts.

One mill levy made up about $120,000; user fees provided about $110,000; and $200,000 was made available through federal revenue sharing funds, Morse said.

She said that because of cuts in the federal budget, it is only a matter of time before the revenue sharing "It appears that federal revenue sharing money is going to be stop-ped," she said. Doug Hinkin, who serves as liaison between the medical community and the ambulance service, agrees with Morse that the service must be cost effective. But he also thinks that the level of care must be a major concern to the commissioners.

"The bottom line is, you've got to get first-line quality care," he said. Hinkin said that in order to provide quality care, the county needs to hire someone who can adequately direct the service through these times of "The county is wasting its money if it doesn't get someone who really knows what they're doing to run the thing (ambulance service)," Hinkin said. "Especially with the idea that the ambulance service is going through changes, they need to get somebody who can implement some "Mr. Kinsman has brought that ambulance service a long way from where it used to be. There have been marked improvements, but it's also time to move on from here," he said. Hinkin said the medical community, in general, has not made a decision whether or not the present service should be replaced with a type

He said that a study of the Riley County Ambulance Service, done by Emergency Medical Design, found that 25 percent to 30 percent of all patients who need emergency care need type one care. Hinkin said that because of this, some in the medical community aren't sure that a type one service is necessary.

"If the medical community would support it, I think Manhattan's ready to do a project and do a study and look at upgrading to a type one level," Little said. Little said Medevac, a private service, has been in Shawnee County since Dec. 31, 1983, and the county has been supportive of the company. "They've decided here that it's very important to have an (type one) ambulance service, and they've determined how much money they

She also noted that another concern with leasing is that tax dollars are used to subsidize a private operation.

"We're a little apprehensive about leasing and then subsidizing, because what you are doing, in effect, is using tax dollars to subsidize private enterprise," Morse said.

Tom Little disagrees. "Our incentive to do an excellent job is to make money. We're just like any other part of the health care community," he said. "But we don't walk away with handfuls of money.

"The government doesn't have any incentive to be efficient. They don't make a profit and, consequently, nobody's watching them to conserve; they're watching the bottom line - to just stay within the budget," Little said.

He said several Kansas cities similar in size to Manhattan have recently changed their ambulance service from type two to type one.

Shultz wears sweater from University visit

By The Collegian Staff

Along with the trimmings and trappings of an official visit briefcases, secret service agents in three piece suits - Secretary of State George Shultz carries around a small reminder of his recent visit to K-State.

Shultz delivered the 72nd Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues April 15. The lecture series honors Alf Landon, the former govenor of Kansas and the Republican party's 1936 nominee for president.

According to Jerry Anderson, one of the secretary's aides, Shultz always wears a sweater instead of a suit coat while on the airplane. Anderson said that in the heat of the preparations before Shultz boarded the airplane to Manhattan he forgot to pack his travel sweater.

Secretary Schultz had one of his aides go to the (Union) Bookstore and buy a sweater,"

"The Secretary still occasionally wears his sweater, and he said tell you that he enjoyed his visit to K-State very much," Anderson

Campus pest list include ants, squirrels

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

Some people shrink at the sight of them, some people eat them and others make a living exterminating

Pests can come in many different shapes and sizes, some of which live and die, at K-State.

There are basically two areas on campus the bugs inhabit: inside campus buildings and outside them.

The most prevalent outside pest is the grub worm which eats the roots of grass, said Tom Lee, head of grounds maintanence. Grub worms attract moles which can be a big problem, but because the grounds crew keeps the grub worm population down they are not a problem at

Although the grub worm is the most numerous, he said the pests that cause the most problems for humans on campus are wasps.

"They love the ivy on the buildings," Lee said. To eradicate the pests, maintenance workers use regular household insect spray which is applied to the nests or directly on the insects.

Another pest that causes problems on campus is the squirrel.

"They damage trees by chewing off the bark. We've even lost some trees because of squirrel damage, mainly hackberrys and maple trees," Lee said. "We took the problem to some department specialists on campus and they said it has something to do with the sugar content in the bark."

But the grounds crew doesn't try to solve the problem by getting rid of any squirrels; instead, they actually care for them.

"During the winter we try to supply corn to the squirrels by throwing it out on the ground where there is known to be a high population of them," Lee said.

But squirrels aren't the only ones that cause damage. Although they prefer evergreens, bagworms can damage many of the trees on cam-The biggest defense against these pests is chemicals. Lee said that a number of measures are used to ensure safety to individuals on campus. "We use the mildest chemical possible. We also spray before classes or on weekends when there aren't that many people around. And while applying chemicals the workers are always alert and watching for people walking on campus," he said.

Including labor, the University spends between $15,000 to $20,000 a year to eradicate pests from the campus grounds.

To control pests inside buildings on campus, the University has a contract with a local pest control company which costs $875 a month. John Lambert, campus safety director. said the contract is for five years with an option to renew or cancel every year.

Avtar Sachdeva, president of the contracted company, said he inspects all buildings every month and treats them as needed for roaches, spiders, crickets, ants, silverfish, fleas and a few other bugs.

Heredity, allergic reaction may lead to migraine headaches

By AMY TAYLOR Collegian Reporter

A headache, is a headache, is a headache. Or is it?

According to Dr. Paula Davis, staff physician at Lafene Student Health Center, there are many types of headaches, with numerous causes and cures.

"A headache can be caused by just about anything. What triggers a headache in one person, may not in another. It depends on the individual," Davis said.

It is estimated that 80 percent of the population suffers from a headache at one time or another, Davis said.

"These headaches can be caused by anything - tension, stress, the onset of menstruation, allergies, chocolate or any number of other things. Another portion of the population, 4 percent to 15 percent, suffer from vascular headaches, or migraines," Davis said.

'Migraines are called vascular headaches because the pain is due to the dilation or stretching of the blood vessels in the scalp or the meninges, the membraneous lining of the brain and spinal cord," Davis said.

The typical migraine is a throbbing pain occurring in one half of the head; usually more severe in the temporal region. The "classical" migraine is characterized by spots in the vision or loss of vision, a numbness or tingling in the body, and extreme mood changes, she said.

"Most people who suffer from migraines have a variety of symptoms, and they are not all the same in every person," Davis said. "Many people with migraines go to a dark, quiet place to try and rest in order to get rid of the headache."

The biological cause of the migraine has not been determined, Davis said.

"It's not known what actually causes a migraine headache. There are many theories, but none of them have proven to be very accurate,"

The unpredictability of the migraine is another reason why the cause can't be determined.

"Migraines can be so unpredictable; one time a sufferer may have a migraine from a certain cause, and the next time they won't. The headaches just don't seem to follow a pattern that can be predicted," Davis said. "Of course, there are ways to prevent a migraine's frequency, by special diets or a medication, but it cannot be pinpointed ex-

Studies have shown that migraines may be familial, affecting members of the same family, but the headaches do not have a provable genetic cause

"Since this is the case, if someone suffers from migraines, it's likely that someone else in his or her family also suffers from migraine headaches," Davis said. But it is known that the migraine headache occurs more often in females than in "The ratio between females and males is 3 to 1," she said. "This is caused mainly from the hormonal changes of estrogen in the menstruational cycle, menopause and the use of birth control pills."

Like the normal tension or stress headache, the migraine can be caused by any number of things, ranging from eating certain foods like aged cheeses and chocolate, to sleeping late, she said.

"Often, the cause of a migraine is a certain food or beverage, as in the case of red wines. Red wines contain a substance that acts as a dilator of severe headache," Davis said. The person who suffers from migraine headaches, usually begins having them in the teen-age years, and will often suffer from them throughout his or her life. Over a period of time, a person who is having migraines can figure out, to some extent, what causes one of his headaches. Eventually, the things that cause it can be avoided, Davis

The treatment of a migraine can be any of three things depending upon the person and the headache.

'The first way to treat a migraine, is to treat the pain, not the cause. This is done with general analgesics anything from aspirin to prescription drugs being used.

"Another way to treat the migraine is the abortive approach, which tries to prevent the headache. from reaching its peak pain level. To do this, medication containing an ergot is given to the headache sufferer. Drugs which contain an ergot constrict the blood vessels and relieve the pain of the headache. This method is used at the first onset of the headache for best results," Davis

"The last method of treatment, involves prevention in the form of taking a daily medication to keep from having the headache or altering the diet to exclude the things that trigger the migraine. This method is used for those people who get migraines very frequently," Davis said.

How does a person who suffers from migraines cope with the pain and inconvenience?

"It helps if the person can be adaptive to a lot of stressful situations. The migraine causes many situations which can be stressful: loss of valuable time at work or school, relationships with people, and dealing with the pain. If the person can adapt to these stresses, they will be more likely to cope with their headaches better than the person who cannot," Davis said.

Another type of vascular headache is the cluster headache, which occurs in less than 1 percent of the population, Davis said.

This headache occurs in groups or 'clusters," which means the headaches come in groups which can last anywhere from a few hours to a few weeks

"The cluster headache is characterized by a paticularly severe and excruciating pain that occurs in the eye area. Often the person with a cluster headache will suffer from an abnormal constriction of the pupil of the eye, and it will become teary and droopy," Davis said.

This headache seems to occur more in men than in women, and the treatment for a cluster headache can be difficult.

"The cluster headache does not respond well to treatment, especially during a 'cluster' of headaches. Most of the time the headache sufferers will have to wait until the current bout of headaches is over to treat it,' Davis said.

After a cluster of headaches is over, the headache sufferer should go to a neurologist who can set up a program of medication or a diet that cuts out "trigger" foods, Davis said.

"The reason why these cluster headaches are more severe than other migraines is because the headaches involve a different area of the blood vessels, and can occur very irregularly. A person may go months or even years without having one, and then all of a sudden they will get a series of headaches, progressing from bad to worse," Davis said.

Free general catalogs sent out to freshmen

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

The new K-State General Catalog lasts for two years and, unlike past years, is free for freshmen, transfer students and full-time faculty and staff.

Undergraduates will receive a catalog when they first enroll on campus, said Sharon Morrow, publications editor of University Relations. New graduate students can get a catalog when they pick up an enrollment permit in the graduate office.

Publishing a two-year catalog instead of an annual catalog is expected to reduce costs by onethird, said Charles Hein, former director of communications for the University. In May 1985, Hein prepared a plan for distributing free general catalogs and line schedules.

Printing costs for 19,000 new 1986-1988 catalogs were approximately $67,000, Morrow said. The cost will be paid over a two-year period from the catalog reserve account and general operating funds. Catalog sales make up the reserve account, she said.

"Catalog production time is six months. With a one-year catalog, you're constantly in production. You finish with one and start right in on the next one," Morrow said.

Students have paid for the catalogs since 1971, Hein said. 1971 was a severe budget year and the catalog purchasing policy was established to offset production costs. The policy simply continued until this year, he said.

Previously, only catalogs sent to other educational institutions were distributed free of charge. About 2,500 catalogs were given away in 1984, Hein said.

The catalog price would have been $5.55 if K-State continued to pay for production costs through sale of the catalogs, according to Hein's proposal. Increased production costs and lower demand for the catalogs would have made the price increase necessary.

He noted several reasons for the appropriation of this money for construction projects at Fort Riley, including improvement of the quality of life and modernization of the base, replacement of World War II buildings, and the upgrading of Fort Riley's aviation battalion to a brigade.

A brigade is a military unit comprised of two or more battalions with service and administrative units. A battalion is a tactical unit made up of three or more companies, batteries, for analogous units. It is the basic building unit of a division. "Compared to other posts, Fort Riley received a large appropriation of money for construction," Shipp said. "However, it was not the largest amount appropriated

Further construction projects at Fort Riley are to include a dental clinic, electrical line upgrade, additional aircraft hangars and tactical equipment shops, Shipp said.

The Department of Defense recently awarded the construction contract to Plano Bridge and Culvert Co. of Fort Worth, Texas. The Texas firm was the lowest bidder on the project, which the Army considered on an "invitation for bid" basis. Under those guidelines, the contract was awarded to the lowest bidder.

Construction on the structures began during the last few months. The project is expected to be completed in October 1988.

Manhattan youths ask for alcohol-free center

By The Collegian Staff

The Manhattan City Commission is considering a plan that would allocate funds for a non-alcoholic alternative place of entertainment for high school and college students.

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood said, "No specific proposal has been made yet.' The commission was approached by a group of Manhattan teen-agers who have expressed interest in the non-alcoholic alternative. The Parks and Recreation Department set up a committee of high school student leaders to represent the student body and address the city commission on the issue. "The students want a place where they can meet with their friends and dance," said Russ Disberger, junior in business administration. "With the drinking age going up, there is really nothing for high school students to do.

"The students want the city commission to realize that there is a need for a non-alcoholic alternative," Disberger said.

damood said. "We thought (the youth center) would be a good place to put it. We think the funds will do more good if they are used to educate the youths on lifestyle, to teach them to have fun without alcohol.'

If approved through formal action taken by the commissioners, money for the project will come out of special alcohol and drug program funds which are generated by state taxes on alcoholic beverages. The funds are to be used by the city for alcohol and drug education, intervention and treatment programs.

"Although we haven't drawn up a specific proposal, we have made a commitment that we want to do something in this area," Lindamood said. "I think we will get our best results through the education of youths.'

Children welcome Wefald; president late in arriving

By The Collegian Staff

Sitting cross-legged on the floor of the Union Courtyard on Monday. President Jon Wefald was welcomed to K-State by the children participating in Summer Adventure '86, but not before they began chanting, "We want the president," when he failed to arrive at the scheduled time.

Wefald was presented with a book especially made for him by the children in the art class. The book, made of heavy cardboard, opens accordian-fashion and contains drawings of the children's impressions of campus buildings. The drawings were completed in the art class of the third session and all of the participants in the third and fourth sessions signed the back cover, said Linda Olsen, intern in leisure studies.

The pictures also contain words

"Best wishes to running the campus," wrote Mike Zilkmund, beneath his picture. The other artists also wished Wefald luck in his new position.

The book will be "a treasure for us in the months and years ahead," Wefald said.

The book took approximately three days to make and more than 70 children had a hand in its mak-

Presenting the book to the president was Katie Willhite, 6, of Manhattan. The children also sang two songs for the president after the presentation.

Ethics help business productivity

Regardless of whether we work in the public sector or the private sector, some of us will have to deal with tough ethical questions concerning public safety, fraud and other improprieties.

People in business have realized for some time that a corporation must be accountable to the public and act responsibly if it is to succeed in the long run. Of the 279 companies that responded last year to a survey on ethics, 208 had written codes of conduct for their employees, the Wall Street Journal recently reported.

The infighting of employees in direct competition to get the prized promotion or additional benefits is beginning to hurt the productivity of many firms. Employees sometimes spend hours contemplating how to trip up the progress of their colleagues. The end result often is that plotters are discovered and

But discoveries such as these many people. The subjects of the plottings often sustain scarred reputations. The victims may even be unjustly demoted or fired. The corporations also sustain some damage.

But corruption is not only interwoven among work relationships. The possiblity for corruption by businesses and government runs deep. It can involve bilking the government out of millions of dollars and/or breaking the law.

While it is commendable to discourage unethical behavior, it also is naive to expect all individuals will lead exemplary lives. There will always be those who think they can beat the system or promote their work division by trading inside information, leaking false information or overbilling customers.

Their attempts usually have short-term payoffs, but even these could be cut short if co-workers would develop a strong sense of ethics and stick by them.

The problem isn't that the employees can't distinguish right from wrong. It's that the coworkers are afraid of retaliation by superiors. They are so afraid that they allow wrong-doings to continue as their consciences crumble.

Driesell ignores players' problems

The wife of one Washingtonagency whistleblower said, "A corrupt system can happen only if the individuals who make up that system are corrupt. You are either going to be part of the corruption or part of the forces working against it. There isn't a third choice. Someone, someday, has to take a stand; if you don't, maybe no one will. And that is wrong."

Almost everyone has witnessed or will see some form of ethical wrongdoing or some degree of backstabbing. Most of us will look the other way. But it is essential that we all consider which circumstances demand we no longer avert our eyes. We must decide which circumstances we would resist to the point of being prepared for extreme harassment or firing.

We must also begin to consider whistleblowing a respectable act. Some companies have installed hotlines for employees who want to identify improprieties but are justly afraid to take complaints through normal channels. The reporting of wrongdoing is important to preserving the values and laws this country was built on.

Doctors treat Fitzgerald for heart problems

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. - Doctors performed tests on singer Ella Fitzgerald Monday to determine if she suffered a mild heart attack, a hospital official said. The 68-year-old performer was in fair condition at Niagara Falls Memorial Medical Center, where she was taken Sunday morning after a Saturday night concert in nearby Lewiston.

More than 150 calls from around the country had come in since Fitzgerald was hospitalized, said hospital spokesman Ray Smith. The White House and singer Mel Torme were among the callers, he said. Smith said he didn't know who phoned from

"Dr. Melvin D. Dyster indicated they're doing tests to determine the extent of or existence of coronary problems and until all tests are completed, we can't make a further comment on her condition or prognosis," Smith said.

When taken by ambulance from her hotel Sunday, Fitzgerald was diagnosed as having congestive heart failure. Smith said that means the heart has been weakened, but has not stopped working. 'Dr. Dyster said she's resting comfortably and is in good spirits," Smith said. "The nursing staff says she's a delightful patient. They're just delighted they have the opportunity to take care of her." Fitzgerald's manager, Pete Cavello, said the singer had suffered from a respiratory problem. "Her breathing is not what it should be," he said.

Fitzgerald is known for her improvisational "scat" singing. She was treated for a fluid buildup in her lungs last August in Washington, D.C.

Lincoln home closing in fall for restoration

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. - Abraham Lincoln's house will be closed to tourists for 15 months beginning this fall so workers can install a comfort the 16th president never enjoyed - air-conditioning and humidity control.

The 20th-century addition is part of a renovation aimed at helping the 146-year-old house and its antique furnishings withstand prairie summers and the tread of an estimated 500,000 tourists each year.

Restorers also will reinforce or replace sagging beams and deteriorated fabric. Workers intend to leave the house looking as it did in 1860, the year Lincoln was

Record number of visitors see Lady Liberty

NEW YORK - The renovated Statue of Liberty entertained a record number of visitors Sunday, capping three weeks of big crowds and long lines the National Park Service says will continue all summer.

The service will keep the statue open 12 hours a day, rather than the normal nine, said spokesman Manny Strumpf. A record 18,760 people showed up Sunday.

Crowds had been averaging 12,000 people per day since the newly renovated statue reopened July 5. That is the same number as in past years, but visitors are now apparently staying three or four hours instead of one or two, Strumpf said.

As a result, Strumpf said, there's a two-hour wait for the 15-minute ferry ride from Manhattan to Liberty Island. Once on the island, the wait to reach the statue's crown is another two hours or so.

Kidnap victim found walking along road

TOPEKA - A 73-year-old woman apparently kidnapped from her rural southwest Shawnee County home Sunday was found Monday in Chase County, authorities said. Fern Harris was found walking along a Chase County road. Shawnee County authorities brought her home this morning.

The woman was last seen about midnight Saturday. Authorities set up a command post in her home and began a search about 3 p.m. Sunday after a relative reported her missing.

Two men apparently broke into the woman's house early Sunday morning, assaulted her drove away with her in the trunk of her car, authorities said. Authorities were searching for the two suspects who were believed to be driving

LAWRENCE - Authorities searched Monday for the husband of a Topeka woman who apparently drowned in Lake Perry.

The body of the woman was recovered Sunday night from seven to 10 feet of water in the Longview area of the lake near Ozawkie. The name of the woman and of the missing man were not released, pending notification of relatives.

A boater discovered the woman's body about 7:30 p.m. An autopsy was scheduled, said Jefferson County Sheriff Roy Dunnaway. A campsite with two chairs was found near the lake, Dunnaway said.

smoked) enough pleasure-seeking cocaine to force his heart and brain to quit functioning properly and collapsed within minutes.

Even if Blas was clean all season, which is seriously doubtful because of his documented classroom performance and night-time social activities, Driesell made a grave mistake by allowing drug users to infiltrate the next National Basketball Association superstar's life, and later, be at his side when he collapsed and died.

Driesell also presided over four, count'em four, players who flunked completely out of school during the '86 spring semester. Bias, a general studies major who was 21 hours short of graduation, didn't pass a single class his last semester, and he dropped two of his original five which included Dance 104.

Three other players, Jeff Baxter, Tom 'Speedy" Jones and one underclassman, whom authorities would not identify, all flunked out of school last spring. Plus, Terry Long, who lived with Bias and was present when he collapsed, is being studied by a faculty review committee on whether or not he should be readmitted to school. Long was academically dismissed also.

To add to Driesell's long list of controversies, on the morning of Bias' death he summoned team players and those present when Bias took his fatal dose of cocaine to his house to counsel them on how to respond to media and police questioning and not to cooperate with investigators.

Driesell said he gathered the players together to "pray and comfort each other over their loss." Somehow I find Driesell's concern hard to believe if he is not even caring enough about his players' lives off the court to probe positive drug-test scores and failing academic progress, how is he going to suddenly change and ask the good Lord to take his former All-American into his hands?

Maybe it stems from the fact of calling a 50-year-old man Lefty. It just seems hard for me to trust an middle-aged adult named Lef-

People question if it is Driesell's job to make sure his athletes make it to class. After all, he's just the basketball coach. You bet it is his job to check and enforce that his highly esteemed hardwood wizards satisfactorily progress in the classroom.

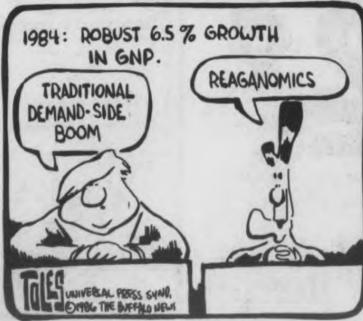

Driesell, in his 17-year coaching career at Maryland, never has learned that these players are not commodities, but studentathletes. He owes it to himself, the University and more importantly the players themselves to make sure they get an education and be as successful after their college careers as they were when they played under his tuteledge.

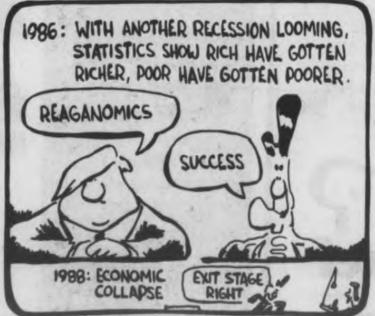

If Driesell really cared enough about the lives of his saintly crew of players, instead of only when they have brush-ins with the law, he would see to it they excelled in other places that don't affect his pocketbook and job security.

I think former college-coaching legend turned basketball analyst Al McGuire said it best when he said "athletes (kids) deserve a second chance, coaches (adults) only get one

KC falls to Blue Jays; hitting woes continue

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Jim Clancy pitched a four-hitter, and Tony Fernandez drove in four runs with a triple and a homer, helping the Toronto Blue Jays break out of an offensive slump and beat the Kansas City Royals 6-0 Monday night.

Clancy, 12-5, notched consecutive victory No. 6 and career victory No. 100 with three strikeouts and one walk.

Fernandez, the leadoff hitter; hit a two-run triple in the fifth as the Blue Jays snapped a streak of 30 straight scoreless innings. He hit a two-run home run, his fifth, off starter Charlie Leibrandt, 9-7, in the seventh.

The Blue Jays had not scored since last Friday until Willie Upshaw crossed the plate on Buck Martinez's double in the fifth.

The scoreless inning streak was only three innings shy of the team record of 33.

Upshaw began the rally with a leadoff single and went to third when Cecil Fielder singled into Martinez, on an 0-2 count, slapped a Leibrandt pitch into medium left field, bringing Upshaw home and putting Fielder at third. Fernandez then tripled off the left field wall over Lonnie Smith's head to score Fielder and Martinez, and Damaso Garcia made it 4-0 with a sacrifice fly.

With two out in the seventh, Martinez singled and came home on Fernandez's home run as the Blue Jays snapped a three-game losing streak.

Kaw Valley Rodeo launches three-day affair at Cico Park

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

It's time to grab your hat and pull on your boots. The Kaw Valley Rodeo started last night at the Riley County Fairgrounds in Cico Park and runs through Wednesday. The events begin each night at 8 p.m.

Many top names on the rodeo circuit will be competing in the threeday event, said Shirley McGill, Kaw Valley Rodeo Association board member.

"This year 327 cowboys are entered. This is an all time record and represents an increase of about 24 (entrants) over last year," she

The rodeo is sanctioned by the Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association. Competition categories are bareback, saddle bronc and bull riding, calf roping, steer wrestling and girl's barrel racing. A specialty act called "The Old Gray Mare" and rodeo clowns will also entertain the audience, said Mike Christian, Riley County agriculture agent.

The evening performances will last until 10 or 10:30 each night, McGill said. There will also be 'slack" rounds on Monday and Tuesday after the regular performances.

"The slack rounds are necessary this year because of the record number of entrants. Cowboys who weren't drawn for the regular performances will compete in the 'slack,"" she said. "The public is welcome to stay for the slack rounds too."

One professional cowboy from the area is entered in the rodeo. Steve Flinn, 24, is a resident of St. George. Flinn will compete in the calf roping and steer wrestling events on Wednesday.

Flinn attended Fort Scott Community College where he competed on the rodeo team there for two years. He then went on to Northwest State College in Okla., and rode on the intercollegiate rodeo team there also. He turned professional after his collegiate rodeo stint.

Discount tickets can be purchased in advance. Reserved seats cost $5. General admission tickets cost $4 and may be used for anyone of three performances. Advance ticket outlets in Manhattan are Dillon's (Westloop), Kansas State Bank, S Bar J Western Clothiers, Lee's Western Wear, Sears Roebuck and Co., Rockin' K Bar and The Ranch Saloon, Christian said.

Tickets purchased at the gate will cost $6 for reserved seating and $5 for general admission. Tickets for junior high school and younger cost $2, either in advance or at the gate, Christian said.

Political leaders urge amendment passage

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Key legislative leaders of both political parties Monday urged Kansas voters to approve two proposed amendments to the Kansas Constitution, which the lawmakers contend are vital to the state's future economic health.

The first of the proposed amendments that will appear on the Aug. 5 primary ballot would remove the prohibition against state involvement with works of internal improvement. The second would allow cities and counties to grant property tax exemptions to certain businesses that create new jobs.

"Passage of these two amendments is essential to the successful implementation of the package of economic development initiatives that the Legislature passed this year," said House Majority Leader James Braden, R-Clay Center.

Braden, Sen. Wint Winter Jr., R-Lawrence, Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston, D-Parsons, and House Minority Marvin Barkis, Leader D-Louisburg, appeared at a news conference in the Senate Chambers to demonstrate what they said is bipartisan support for the amend-

All four men are members of the Legislative Commission on Economic Development, which the Legislature formed this year.

"Without removing these two prohibitions, economic development initiatives will be restricted and the state will suffer," Braden said.

Barkis acknowledged that the average voter may not understand the proposals but he said officials of both parties have joined together to help educate the public.

The so-called internal improvements amendment, which will appear as "Constitutional Question No. 1" on the primary election ballot, would end a restriction that originally was aimed at preventing the state from investing in projects such as canals and railroads.

It was drafted with the rest of the constitution in 1859, when some states had run up excessive debts to build transportation facilities. Since that time, the internal improvements prohibition has been amended to allow the state to build highways and take part in water

Removal of the prohibition would allow the state to invest $10 million into a statewide risk capital system. called Kansas Venture Capital Inc. The quasi-public corporation would lend money for business projects for which traditional financing would be unavailable but still have potential to be very profitable and create

Private companies and individuals investing in Kansas Venture Capital also would be granted a 25 percent credit against their state income tax liability, under a bill the Legislature passed this year.

Johnston called the internal improvements prohibition "a relic of the 19th century" and said Kansas is one of three states that maintains the restriction.

"Being one of only three states with this prohibition puts Kansas at a great disadvantage in attracting industry to our state," Johnston said. "We have the opportunity to remove this disadvantage by voting yes on Constitutional Question No.

No group has campaigned against the internal improvements amendment but Gov. John Carlin last week made a series of appearances across the state to support the pro-

However, two members of the State Board of Tax Appeals have said they oppose the so-called tax abatement amendment, which will appear on the ballot as Constitutional Question No. 2.

At issue is whether the cities and counties should be given the constitutional power to grant property tax exemptions of up to 10 years to new and expanding businesses.

Fred Weaver, chairman of the tax appeals board, and Keith Farrar, a member of the board, have said they fear adoption of the amendment will endanger the stability of small Kansas communities and older, established businesses which will be put at a competitive disadvantage against new businesses operating free of taxes.

But lawmakers at Monday's news conference said 24 other states currently offer a similar economic development incentive. The proposed abatements would cover only businesses engaged in manufacturing, research and development, or warehousing of goods for interstate commerce.

Winter said those restrictions would prevent local governments from offering tax abatements to businesses such as fast food restaurants because retail and service companies are not covered by the amendment.

"It is important to give local governments freedom to direct their own economic development strategies, Winter said. "This amendment will provide them with an additional tool to promote economic growth."

The lawmakers added that Congress is expected to pass legislation soon that will further restrict the use of industrial revenue bonds, which offer a similar tax abatement feature and now are among the only incentives Kansas cities have to lure new businesses.

Barkis said he hopes voters won't reject the questions "out of fear or ignorance" and added that "a vote yes is a vote for Kansas."

Braden said he is optimistic both questions will pass.

"We are just concerned that sometimes when people haven't heard about them (questions on the ballot) they have a tendency to vote no," Braden said. "We're here to show there's bipartisan support for these questions."

Board members wary of tax exemptions

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A proposed constitutional amendment on tax abatement will drive individual property taxes up, hurt school districts and threatens the survival of small towns and businesses, according warnings issued by to two members of the Kansas Board of Tax Ap-

However, the author of the controversial proposal, House Speaker Mike Hayden, says the change is needed to allow Kansas cities to compete with other states for new jobs. He says any negatives associated with the change will be far outweighed by the good it will

From their seats on the tax appeal board, Chairman Fred Weaver and Commissioner Keith Farrar are urging the electorate to reject the amendment.

Basically, the proposal asks voters in the Aug. 5 primary election to decide whether to amend the Kansas Constitution to give cities and counties the power to grant property tax exemptions of up to 10 years to new businesses.

Weaver and Farrar, both former legislators, fear adoption of the amendment will endanger the stability of small Kansas communitie and older, established businesses which will be put at a competitive disadvantage against new businesses operating free of

"This is bad public policy, but unless you're in a position like we are, you don't get the full picture," Weaver said recently in an interview. "When you start down this road of tax exemptions and start dropping the value on competitive property, it has a real dominoe ef-

"Someone else has to pick up that lost tax revenue.'

Hayden doesn't deny some shifts might take place, but he says they will be balanced by the economic revitalization that accompanies creation of jobs.

"The smaller towns will be able to compete because their tax rates are so much lower than big cities," said Hayden, who is among seven candidates for the Republican nomination for governor. "This is a really good economic development tool. Any shifts that occur will be very small."

The two appeals board members say the power to exempt businesses from taxes will be abused by wellmeaning city fathers at the expense of farmers, homeowners and energy producers who will be forced to pick up the tab for the exemptions in the form of higher property

And they say it's liable to cause internal strife in the state as cities and counties start competing with each other for business - perhaps leading to one city luring an established business away from another Kansas town with the promise of a decade of tax breaks.

"I have a real concern at the potential for this to create a competitive atmosphere with one county drawing business away from another county," Weaver said. "If it creates that kind of situation, it will really be bad. The state is not going to profit from that sort of thing."

Again, Hayden disagrees and notes that his own hometown of Atwood would welcome such authori-

"The secret to free enterprise is competition," Hayden said. "I believe that competition is healthy and this will help attract industry to Kansas. It's good when Kansas cities compete for business and industry.'

Farrar pointed to the problems which developed over the use of industrial revenue bonds, which were designed to be used to create jobs and attract new industries but often were abused and used for retail businesses simply wanting to

"This amendment has more potential for abuse than IRBs," Farrar said. "Smaller communities which depend solely on property taxes won't be able to compete with larger communities which have sales taxes and other revenues to fall back on. The smaller towns just can't afford a lot of property tax exemptions and they just won't be able to compete."

Weaver and Farrar say their concerns stem from recent experiences on the Board of Tax Appeals. They already are seeing cases involving counties which abuse property tax laws by unlawfully granting businesses exemptions and reductions in their tax liabilities.

Granting tax exemptions also affects the valuation of land which the state uses in its formula for determining the amount of state aid each school districts receives.

"When you start fooling around with tax exemptions and your valuation goes down, the effect is to draw money away from the other districts in the state," Weaver said. 'What happens in one corner of the state impacts on the entire rest of the state."

The prospect of businesses already located in Kansas shopping around for a county which will cut its taxes also disturbs the tax ex-

"It looks to me like what's happening is that it's going to be make it more and more difficult for the smaller communities to survive," Weaver said. "Small communities just can't afford to grant exemptions to get businesses because it shifts that tax burden and puts a lot more pressure on city services.

"And it will hurt small businesses, which are the backbone of this state. Established small businesses are going to suffer by competing against new businesses that are paying no taxes. Eventually, they'll run the other older, established family-type business out of town and out of business."

Anderson Hall to open up to disabled

By The Collegian Staff

Unlike the stereotype prevalent on many college campuses, the administration offices of Anderson Hall are going to open up to more students.

While a number of buildings on K-State remain inaccessible to the handicapped, Anderson is becoming an exception. Last year, Student Governing Association allocated funds for making Anderson accessible; however, no plan was ever ap-

Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning, said that in early July a plan had been approved. It will consist of building an outside ramp on the south side of Anderson that will lead into the basement. An elevator will be constructed so handicapped people can get upstairs.

"Student government allocated $150,000 in funds, but our initial estimate of the project is $169,000," Garvin said. "As of yet we do not know where the rest of the money will come from." The University will have an engineer come in to inspect the ground where the elevator shaft will be, and as long as he doesn't find any problems construction can begin,

The plan had been in the works for a while but had not yet been approved by President Jon Wefald.

"Wefald approved the plan in the first few days he was here, so now we are ready for construction," Garvin said. "We don't have any candidates for construction as of yet, but we should start taking bids around mid-September."

He said there are no laws that a building on a university campus has to be accessible to handicapped students, but instead, the "programs" must be accessible. "If we can't get the student into the building where they need to take a course then the course is moved to them." Garvin said. A lot of the buildings at K-State are old so they were not built to accommodate handicapped students, but through restoration this is gradually being

"We try to make students feel as much a part of the University as we can," Garvin said. "So we try to work with students who cannot gain entrance to some of the buildings on campus."

The completion date for the project is late February 1987.

uncertain one.

The former co-ed residence hall has stood empty since it was taken off the housing roster in the fall of 1985, and no definite plans have been made its future use, said Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning. The University was given possession of the state-owned building for academic or administrative use. Currently, the University merely heats the building and administers any needed maintainence until the decision of what to do with the building is made. The University has several alternatives in deciding the future of Van Zile, Garvin said. Three options are being considered, but he stressed that any mention of future plans would be speculation. "There are many departments on campus that still need a home, and if it is appropriate, housing them in Van Zile will be proposed," Garvin said.

Tom Frith, director of housing, explained the dilemma that arose when Van Zile came into University possession.

"Everybody thought Van Zile would be a perfect location for their department. They all looked eyes," Frith said. That is why the decision of Van Zile's future has The future of Van Zile Hall is an been such a tough one, he said.

When the building served as a residence hall, it housed approximately 160 people.

Helen Cooper, University space analyst, said the size of the building and its central location make it attractive to many departments.

Garvin said all the requests for space in Van Zile must be reviewed in order to be fair to everyone, but noted the process of collecting and considering every request for space in the building is a lengthy

Van Zile was built in 1926 as a women's residence hall, and mostly has been used for campus housing since its construction, Frith said.

"The hall was used as quarters for a Army cadet corps once during the '40s, but went back to being a residence hall, and in '67 went co-ed," Frith said.

He said that because of the building's age, Van Zile eventually became less suitable as a residence hall, adding that costs to renovate the 60-year-old building were too great considering declining enrollment and decrease in students requesting it for housing.

Activist groups join forces

Rehnquist's nomination hits opposition

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Leading civil rights and women's rights groups joined forces Monday to oppose the nomination of chief justice-designate William H. Rehnquist, calling him an extremist whose legal writings support discrimination. On the eve of today's confirmation hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee, the organizations attacked Rehnquist as "a right wing ideologue...dedicated to rendering asunder...what it took the Supreme Court, the Congress and the nation three decades to put together." Benjamin L. Hooks and Ralph G. Neas, chairman and executive director respectively of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, told a news conference that Rehnquist's opinions as an associate justice have supported school segregation and tax exemptions for schools which discriminate. "For 30 years, the Supreme Court, the Congress, and the nation have repeatedly and emphatically repudiated the extremist views of William Rehnquist on civil rights issues," the statement said, urging senators to do the same.

Eleanor Cutri Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, said Rehnquist's opinions show he believes "the state can do anything it wants in the area of sex discrimination."

The critics said that Rehnquist was 'frozen in a 1950s mindset," and that he views women as "second-class citizens." He has "the most extreme view on the court on women's rights and civil rights," Smeal said. The Leadership Conference, an umbrella organization representing some 185 civil rights groups, and its liberal Democratic allies in the Senate, are refusing to concede Rehnquist's confirmation, although they acknowledge that it will be hard

But Joseph L. Rauh, counsel to the Leadership Conference, said the news media predicted incorrectly that Nixon court nominees G. Harrold Carswell and Clement F. Haynsworth would be confirmed. Both nominations were defeated by votes of the full Senate.

"Don't make the same mistake a third time," Rauh told reporters. The 61-year-old Rehnquist, who would succeed Warren E. Burger, has 14 years of experience on the high court.

Rehnquist has refused to comment on criticism against him, but will testify and answer questions today. The hearings will continue Wednesday and Thursday, if necessary.

President Reagan has chosen Rehnquist as the nation's 16th chief justice to replace the retiring Burger, and has nominated Antonin Scalia, a federal appellate judge, to take Rehnquist's associate justice

Meanwhile, the FBI has begun interviewing witnesses who have contradicted Rehnquist's 1971 statements about his role in a Republican Party elections monitoring program in the 1960s in Phoenix, Ariz. Under the program, some GOP figures challenged the literacy and credentials of voters waiting in line in Democratic districts with large numbers of minorities.

Mark Goodin, spokesman for Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said the FBI interviews were requested by committee Democrats and characterized the interviews "as routine as a summer thunderstorm."

"There's no full-scale investigation." Goodin said.

In 1971, when Rehnquist was nominated by then-President Richard M. Nixon and confirmed to the Supreme Court by the Senate, he said he directed ballot security programs for Republicans in Phoenix from 1958 through 1964. But Rehnquist denied taking part in challenging any minority voters.

A Senate Republican source, speaking only on condition he not be named, said of the allegation, "Democrats, almost without exception, could not be found when this issue first surfaced (in 1971). The big question remains, where were they when this matter was thoroughly investigated by the FBI, and why are they only now coming forth the day before the hearing?

"The answer is obvious. It's more empty political gamesmanship by liberals who want to slow down, and if at all possible, stop this nomination of a conservative as chief justice," the source added.

General fund level lowest in 20 years

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The balance in the state's general fund bank account last month at the end of fiscal year 1986 was $19.7 million, the lowest ending balance in two decades, the Legislative Budget Committee was told Tuesday.

Moreover, the amount the state received in revenue fell $89.8 million short of original estimates, the worst performance by the consensus estimating group since 1983, according to a report prepared by Richard Ryan, director of the Legislative Research Department.

The report was the first breakdown for lawmakers of what actually happened with the state's large pool of general tax dollars during the last fiscal year since the books were closed June 30. The six-member panel of state financial experts and university economists slashed its original predictions by $64.7 million as the economic woes of Kansas' agricultural and petroleum industries worsened throughout the

However, actual receipts during the last budget year fell $25 million short of the $1.666 billion the consensus estimators had predicted during its final session in March, according to the report. Nearly all of that shortfall was attributable to an unexpected decline in individual income tax receipts.

The consensus group had estimated an ending balance of slightly more than $37 million but the actual figure was $17.4 million less than that amount.

The $582.2 million the state collected from individual income taxes during the last fiscal year was 3.5 percent below the $603.5 million collected in fiscal year 1985, according to the report. Individual income tax receipts were $25.8 million short of the original estimate.

In addition, sales tax receipts last year were $2.4 million below the final estimate, but the $489.6 million which actually came in was 2.3 percent above the sales tax receipts in FY 1985, the report said.

The lowest previous ending balance was $31.5 million at the conclusion of fiscal year 1971, the report said. However, a member of the research staff told the committee that the ending balance in 1971 represented 8.4 percent of the year's receipts, compared to only 1.1 percent of the receipts last year.

Styrofoam loses out; cafeteria goes plastic

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

Look for a change in the Union. The traditional plastic foam beverage cup is about to fall prey to progress.

Some may have already noticed the 16-ounce, cold-beverage cups have been replaced with a waxedpaper product, but this is only the

The plastic foam cups, with the Union logo, used for cold beverages will be replaced with clear plastic cups by Thursday, said Malley Sisson, Union food service director. Planned renovation of the beverage counter will reduce working and storage space, she

"We're changing so we can in-crease the payload in the storage area because we're going to have a smaller area to work out of, and we must try and compress the items as much as possible,' Sisson said.

The foam plastic cups being used can only be stacked 25 to a cone because of their large, one-inch lip. Twice as many of the new plastic cups can be stacked in place of the old ones.

'We can increase the payload by 100 percent by stacking 50 cups in the space of 25 cups," she said. The new plastic cups will be set out in the cold-beverage area today or Thursday in 12-, 16- and 24-ounce sizes.

Some students and faculty were resistant to the change.

"They're (the new plastic cups) bogus," said Steve Bowden, senior in business management. "The Styrofoam cups help keep your drink cold, and besides that, the new ones will probably sweat more. I'd rather not get my Collegian wet in class."

Malley said although students were attached to the foam plastic cups, they were going to have to give them up as "part of the price of progress."

"It's all in the name of progress, but usually progress is not as much fun as the old," said Richard P. Coleman, professor of marketing, "That's because I've always liked the past instead of the present."

Plastic foam cups will still be available in 8-, 12- and 16-ounce sizes in the hot-beverage area.

At first the 16-ounce foam cups were to be eliminated altogether, but protests from student and faculty coffee drinkers who enjoyed the large size convinced Union food services to bring them

K-State will have nine more weapons in its recruiting arsenal this fall. The new admissions representative positions were added on advice of President Jon Wefald in an effort to intensify and stabilize University recruitment.

All are graduates, or will have graduated from K-State when beginning their positions.

The new representatives, their hometowns and area of study are:

- Tim Balfour, Abilene, fashion marketing. - Tami Barham, St. George, psychology. - Sara Doornbos, Scott City, marketing.

psychology.

- Maribeth Gottschalk, Hutchinson, journalism and mass communications Becky Klingler, Manhattan, marketing.

- Alesia Martin, Hoisington, secondary education. - Amy Jo Reinhardt, Erie, agricultural economics. - Julie Schuler, Chapman, animal sciences and industry.

The nine were chosen for their "strong, demonstrated commitment to Kansas State University, both in and out of the classroom," said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement and director of enrollment management.

"We all have purple blood,"

- Dana Fincher, Gardner, Barham said. "We're all excited and willing to put in a lot of work with the alumni, faculty and students. We can take the message (about K-State) across the state.

> The representatives are expected to add an additional one-on-one, personalized approach to ongoing K-State recruitment, Bosco said.

These include the efforts of individual colleges and departments and college-based recruiters, volunteer alumni coordinators and the Student Ambassadors.

Beginning Aug. 4, all nine will undergo three weeks of what William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, described as "intensive" training. Part of the training program will be classroom instruction from a variety of people including Wefald, Bosco and a member of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The new representatives will also spend time in each of the colleges to learn the different curricula and program outlines, he said.

Each of the representatives will then be assigned to one of nine geographic regions within the state and the Midwest to begin visiting high schools and junior colleges.

Some of the representatives will live in their specified geographic regions; however, all will maintain office space in Manhattan and be considered an integral part of what Bosco called a "total" recruitment program.

Senate debates Rehnquist nomination

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Senate confirmation hearings for William H. Rehnquist as chief justice of the United States opened Tuesday on a partisan note with key Democrats charging he harbors views too extremist for the job and Republicans extolling his virtues.

Rehnquist himself indicated he's ready for a barrage of questions, telling the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing, "I'm at the committee's disposal now."

Reagan for naming him as the nation's 16th chief justice, calling the nomination "a great honor."

By then, Rehnquist, one of eight associate justices, had listened to nearly three hours of senators' opening statements - with Democrats castigating his record, and Republicans praising him.

Rehnquist, 61, who introduced his wife, Nan, his daughter and his sonin-law before leaving, returns Wednesday for what promises to be a long day of grueling questions. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy,

Rehnquist thanked President D-Mass., one of the liberal senators expected to attack every phase of Rehnquist's career, said the issue is whether the jurist is in the mainstream of the law or too ex-

Kennedy said Rehnquist "does not measure up" to the job because of his "virtually unblemished record of opposition to individual rights in cases involving minorities, women, children, and the poor." He noted that in 54 cases decided on the merits rather than procedural issues, Rehnquist was a lone dissenter.

"By his own record of massive isolated dissent, Justice Rehnquist answers that question - he is too extreme on race, too extreme on women's rights, too extreme on freedom of speech, too extreme on separation of church and state, too extreme to be chief justice," said Kennedy

But Rehnquist supporter Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., advised the jurist to "hang on tight," because he will face "hearsay, nastiness, and maybe even a little bit of hysteria. The niceties of the law are not always found in these surroundings," he said, recalling Democrats' attacks on other Reagan nominees.

NFL guilty in antitrust case, to pay $3 fine

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The National Football League was ordered to pay just $3 in token damages Tuesday after being found nominally liable for one antitrust violation against the rival United States Football League. The decision seemed certain to doom the eight-team USFL, which had sought $1.69 billion in its struggle to stay in business. "We're lost now. We're dead," said Rudy Shiffer, vice president of marketing and public relations for the USFL Memphis Showboats.

USFL Commissioner Harry Usher said the four-year-old league's owners, who abandoned their spring-summer format after the 1985 season, would meet Aug. 6 in New York to decide whether to compete as planned against this NFL this fall. Other USFL officials had said earlier that they needed at least $300 million in damages trebled to $900 million in antitrust cases — to survive one more season.

The U.S. District Court jury of five women and one man, who deliberated for 31 hours over four days after an emotional 11-week trial, said the NFL used its monopoly power to damage the USFL and to gain control of the pro football market but that the USFL had damaged itself. It awarded actual damages of only $1, trebled to $3.

The NFL was cleared of monopolizing television, the key accusation in the case, and eight other

"Justice is wonderful," crowed NFL lawyer Frank Rothman, who was sometimes criticized for his quiet demeanor in the face of the flamboyant tactics of his opponent, Harvey Myerson.

"One dollar. I just paid the buck," Rothman said. "There was no case. The jury was very, very astute. They saw through a case built on nothing but smoke, and not very good smoke at that. The $1 is an insult to the USFL. It's what the jury thought about the lawsuit."

One of the jurors, Margaret Lilienfeld, said the jury agreed that while the NFL was a monopoly, the USFL was primarily responsible for the estimated $150 million in losses it sustained during three years of spring play.

"It was very difficult," she said. "We decided that there was a monopoly and that the NFL had tried to maintain it, but the USFL had damaged themselves."

"The USFL shot themselves in the foot," said NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who also was found personally not liable in the case. "I tried to explain during the trial that I viewed the NFL as a natural monopoly, and if I understand the attorneys, they just viewed it that way, too.

Rozelle said the NFL had worried that "there was innuendo and circumstances that may lead people to feel we injured the USFL.

"We knew we hadn't," he said. "For three years, even before the suit was filed, I told our owners in league meetings, 'Don't do anything.' There will be litigation because there always is with two

There was no immediate indication whether the USFL would appeal, and Usher said it was too soon to say what would happen to the league or its players, including such stars as former Heisman Trophy winners Herschel Walker and Doug

Flutie, running back Kelvin Bryant and quarterback Jim Kelley. The USFL season is scheduled to start Sept. 13, with the Arizona Outlaws at the Tampa Bay Bandits.

"Officially, the Baltimore Stars are planning to play football in 1986," said Joel Finglass, the USFL team's director of sales.

Steve Ehrhart, general manager of the Memphis Showboats, said the outlook was not good. "It looks shaky right now," he said. "It's difficult to reconcile its finding that the NFL acted in a monopolistic, predatory fashion but that we weren't damaged except to the extent of $1," Usher said.

That the NFL would be the winner was evident early when the jury announced that it had expanded its definition of the TV market for football to include cable. The USFL, which had complained that the NFL had kept it from getting a contract for fall play with any of the three major networks, has a one-year, $8 million cable contract with ESPN for this fall, starting with the New Generals-Memphis Showboats game Sept. 14.

Treadmill helps equine study

By MORGAN CHILSON Collegian Reporter

Sports medicine has become a popular field of study, but at K-State, the interest developed an unusual twist. The subjects are horses, not humans.

Evaluating a performing horse is normally a difficult task, said veterinarian Howard Erickson. Erickson heads the basic science area of the research and teaches anatomy and physiology in veterinary medicine. While some study is done as the horses workout on the track, K-State has acquired a horse treadmill to facilitate the research.

The researchers are studying the basic physiology of the athletic horse and evaluating the performing horse to assess if the animal is overexerting or if there is some disease process present.

The treadmill is one of three in the United States. The other two are located at Washington State University in Pullman and Tufts University

The cost of the treadmill is bet ween $25,000 and $36,000. The price and the relative newness of equine sports medicine accounts for the small number of treadmills in the United States, Erickson said.

The treadmill works much as a human treadmill works. The main, difference is the size, which is accommodated to a horse. There is also a safety harness which straps around the horse in case it should stumble or fall while galloping. The researchers can control the elevation of the treadmill to simulate an incline, Erickson

The treadmill measures the heart rate of the horse as it increases speed.

"The heart rate is a good indication of the excitatory state of the animal," said Kipp Erickson, graduate student working on his doctorate in exercise physiology. The horse's resting heart rate is 30 beats per minute, but can increase to as much as 250 beats per minute.

The horse starts on the treadmill at speed to a full gallop. The researchers try to re-create the effect of an actual horse race to aid their studies. Kipp Erickson said. Though it is difficult to start the horse off as quickly as it would at a race, the horse will run at speeds of 20 to 30 mph.

After running the horse on the treadmill, the horse's lungs are checked to see if there is any

"Exercise-induced pulmonary hemorrhage is evident in 70 percent of thoroughbreds after racing, so we are interested in pinpointing the cause of the bleeding," Howard Erickson said.

"We think it may be caused by high pressure in the pulmonary artery," Kipp Erickson said.

Another phenomenon associated with horse racing is sudden death. Howard Erickson said. Sudden death is just that. Highly trained horses die from no apparent reason. This does not happen as often as the exercise-induced bleeding, but it occurs often enough to be a cause for a walk, and gradually increases concern. Researchers are attempting to discover the reason for the sudden collapses.

"We use the same sort of techniques as a human athlete. The racing industry is a big one," Howard Erickson said. "We want to prevent injury and improve performance."

The training methods used in horse racing have not changed much over the years. There has been little progress in speed records. Humans, for instance, have increased their times in the mile run over the years. With the research being conducted at K-State, horse racing may now become a more progressive industry

The program was developed three years ago under the direction of Howard Erickson. Jerry Gillespie, professor of surgery and medicine in veterinary science, works with the clinical area of the research.

"It's a team effort, though. We all work together," Howard Erickson said, noting that there are several other veterinarians and graduate students associated with the study.

Program illuminates patterns of marriage

By MARY TOMELLERI Collegian Reporter

Marriage is the key to social life in many cultures, said Martin Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology.

Ottenheimer has designed a computer program that illustrates marriage and kinship patterns called "Modeling Systems of Kinship and Marriage." Its purpose is to illustrate principles and systems of marriage regulations, he said.

Using a systematic approach, the program shows the way people organize and manipulate marital relationships, he said. The program can be applied to many different cultures and was essentially designed to illustrate to students the patterns of nonwestern marriages, he said.

"It is a research tool to understand what marriage is all about," he said.

The program uses graphics in a general framework for analyzing the very complex marital relationships around the world, Ottenheimer said.

A lot of writing has been done on marriage, mostly concerned with sexual aspects or interpersonal relationships, Ottenheimer said.

This program looks at marriage as a system of human relationships: why there is marriage and what it does, he said. This is a different approach to marriage, much broader and more formal.

In anthropology, the researcher deals with the human relationships of many different cultures around the world, Ottenheimer said. The assumptions of one culture do not stand up in another culture.

Many of the assumptions people have about marriage are from their own culture, and they view relationships in terms of their own culture, he said.

"People do things very differently around the world," Ottenheimer said. "They laugh at what we do, and we laugh at what they do." As barriers to world travel and communication are understand other cultures, he

There are differences in cultural traditions, and anthropologists want to understand what these rules try to do and what effect they have on a society, he said.

An example of a culture different from that of the United States is an African society in which the men are allowed to have more than one wife, Ottenheimer said. At the same time, the rules of that culture say a man must live in his wife's house, and he must also treat each wife as an equal.

As a result, he said, the husband must spend equal amounts of time with each wife, such as by the day, week or month.

The program has a main menu from which the user can choose to work with systems of first-cousin marriage, systems of secondcousin marriage, crossgenerational systems and siblingmarriage systems, Ottenheimer

The graphics form of the program allows the user to analyze quickly different systems and to see the links within the systems. It also enables him to see things that wouldn't normally be seen, he said.

An advanced systems analysis option also allows the user the possibility of considering as many as 12 couples over 12 generations, Ottenheimer said. It offers "what if..." choices and the ability to see the what impact of the choices

The program examines what happens in a society given certain marriage rules; what the impact is on residential groups; and what the descent patterns will be, Ottenheimer said. Descent patterns refer to the groups children will belong to when they are born such as what group a child of a Roman Catholic father and Protestant mother would belong to, he said.

"We want to know what the nature of the family and the overcome, humans need to nature of marriage is," he said.

Ag College enrollment remains stable

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

Despite the current farm crisis and discouragement people are seeing in agriculture, the number of students enrolling in the College of Agriculture has remained essentially the same, said John Riley, assistant director of resident instruction in agriculture economics This spring, we had 1,742 students in the College of Agriculture compared to 1,584 last fall. The increase was in people taking off-campus courses," Riley said.

Since the fall of 1984, the number of students enrolled in agriculture majors has been fairly constant.

"Right now, for fall enrollment, we have only 30 fewer students than last fall. I consider this to be encouraging because of the declining population we have from which to draw students," Riley said referring to the substantial loss of numbers of family farms in Kansas.

Although the number of students in the college has stayed about the same, their perspectives about careers in agriculture have changed.

"The jobs are still out there, but not on farms. I see the future role of the family farm as minimal," said Todd Jaax, senior in grain science

Jaax grew up on a farm in Garden Plain near Wichita, but does not intend to go back to the farm after graduating, he said.

"Before the farm crisis, the family farm could support two or three kids going back after college to work. Now, they can support one at the most." Jaax said.

Jaax said he chose grain science as a major because he grew up on a farm, but has been discouraged from going back into farming.

"I'm also getting a degree in business to give myself some leeway in finding a career," Jaax said.

Geoff Andersen, graduate in agricultural economics, shares Jaax's view about future income opportunities upon returning to the family farm. Andersen was raised in Overland Park and became interested in an agriculture career while working for a local agriculturerelated business in high school.

"After getting my master's, I would like to work for a large agriculture processing firm. These firms are well established and should experience growth in the future," Andersen said.

Such firms will need to continually develop new food products and procedures to satisfy the growing population, he said.

"Unless the consumer stops eating, there will always be jobs in agribusiness," Andersen said.

The college could have placed more spring gradutes in jobs, Riley

These opinions are supported by a recent USDA publication "Employment Opportunities for College Graduates in the Food and Agriculture Sciences." It stated that 'more than 48,000 employment openings are projected annually in the United States for new college graduates with expertise in agriculture, natural resources, veterinary medicine and closely allied fields. Fewer than 44,000 qualified college graduates are anticipated each year, resulting in a residual shortfall of about 10 percent.'

Campus policy goal of study

Parking usage under review

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

An ad-hoc committee is currently studying parking utilization on campus to identify problems associated with campus parking, said Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning and chairman of the committee.

A Sept. 11 meeting date has been tentatively set for a review of the committee's findings, Garvin said. After that, the committee intends to hold hearings to elicit opinions and suggestions from the public, he said.

"I hope that we will end up with a policy and supporting regulations that diminish the level of dissatisfaction as experienced by the parking users," Garvin said.

Part of the parking problem is that past parking fees are based on the ability to pay and not on actual use of the parking facilities, Garvin said. Currently, faculty and staff who earn $10,000 or less, and students must pay $22 a year for a parking permit. Faculty and staff who earn more than $10,000 must pay $44 for a per-

"Initial studies suggest that the real cost of creating and maintaining a parking space is between $90 and $140 per year," he said. This cost includes periodic restoration of the lot, enforcement and snow removal, he

According to the 1985-1986 traffic and parking regulations, a 10-hour reserved stall costs $110 per year, and a 24-hour stall costs $165 per

Garvin observed that people with reserved parking spaces are thus must be designed to provide spaces 'paying their way," while other

Another problem is that there are only a few preferred parking lots on campus, Garvin said. Everyone goes first to those lots - such as the lots south of the Union and the lots east of McCain Auditorium - and then goes to less desirable parking areas, he

"A lot of the frustration (with campus parking) stems from this hunting process," he said. An option which may alleviate this frustration is the possibility of raising the cost of reserved spaces and allowing any faculty/staff to purchase reserved parking, he said.

Other options being studied by the committee include restructuring of parking fees; alternative distribution of parking spaces among user groups; assigning parking permits for particular lots, such as in a zone system; having all parking reserved on campus; construction of a multilevel parking structure in the vicinity of the Union; a shuttle system based at the KSU stadium parking lot; a transit system that would serve areas surrounding the campus; requiring parking permits to be purchased for state vehicles parked on campus and charging a parking fee to visitors and conference people.

The maximum population density on campus is estimated to occur at 10 a.m. on Wednesdays because the highest number of classes meet at that hour, Garvin said. If minimizing user dissatisfaction is the main consideration, then campus parking for everyone at that hour, he said.

"But there aren't that many spaces available," he said.

Another problem is that parking records and accounts have not been kept in ways which facilitate the management of the parking problem, Garvin said. For example, there are no records of present parking space utilization or of the number of parking permits in force at any one time, he said.

Garvin said there are two sets of contradictory attitudes that compound the parking problem. One set involves the conflict between parking facilities and the environment.

"There are those who say we should pave everything out to the sidewalk, if that's what's needed," he said. Another group wants to protect the environment and thinks that the number of parking lots on campus are disfiguring and should be decreased, he said.

The other set concerns who should pay for campus parking, he said.

"The range of opinion varies from those willing to pay for the convenience of parking to those who think the state should pay for that benefit," Garvin said.

"In terms of the resources of the state, it's clear that the Legislature will not meet this need. Even if the state were willing, there are many more pressing academic needs, and it is unlikely that this kind of expense would take priority over academic programs," he said.

Many students suffer from loneliness despite activities and crowds

By The Collegian Staff

It doesn't seem like loneliness would be something a college student on a campus with thousands of others would suffer from, but many Loneliness is most likely to affect those who are new to a situation, such as incoming freshmen or transfer students.

Dori Lambert, a counselor at the Counseling Center in Holton Hall, said people who don't feel as if they belong are most likely to suffer from loneliness.

Others may feel lonely because they miss home and being part of a family. Lambert said that when a person goes to college he needs to define his role as a student. Students must shift their focus from their home and family to the campus.

For most people, time will help them change their focus, but for others this doesn't happen. Some people may unconciously draw back and isolate themselves from others. Lambert said loneliness can often be a sign that a change needs to be made in a person's lifestyle. To make themselves feel as if they fit in, some people will do what others want them to do and not what they need for themselves. But, Lambert said, a positive self-image is important and people should look at their own interests. It is a person's own responsibility to make the first move towards getting help, she said. If a person lives a residence hall, a resident assistant would be a good person to turn to. Other resources include the Counseling Center at Holton Hall and Lafene Mental Health, she said.

People will often seek help when their lifestyle becomes uncomfortable, Lambert said, adding that occasional loneliness is not bad, but if it goes on for too long it can become an

Joanna Wade is familiar with military helicopters. In fact, she would not be participating in Summer Adventure '86 if one hadn't rescued her when she was 18 months old. However, she was saved and was on hand Tuesday when a MAST helicopter landed in Memorial Stadium for the Continuing Education program.

Wade, 7, a resident of Wamego. presented medals of thanks to the crew members who were involved in a rescue at Rocky Ford July 5. The awards were made in art class and contained messages to "the helicopter heroes." They were signed by the children. Wade also gave a letter of thanks from her mother for saving Joanna's life.

Two of the crew members who were involved in the rescue were present for the demonstration. Specialist Fourth Class Walters and Sgt. Jack Hastings received the awards. The other members of the crew were Chief Warrant Officer T.

C. Wheatley and Lt. William Parr. The men from the 82nd Medical Detachment explained how the helicopter worked and some of the jobs they did.

They told the children they did not carry guns but served in the evacuation of patients, made blood runs and helped the civilian community.

The men also described the rescue at Rocky Ford and told how injured victims were transferred to

The children were then allowed to ask questions which included whether the helicopter had air conditioning. It does not, but the crew can open the windows.

After questions, the children lined up to go through the helicopter, and some just rested in the shade of the

Brier discusses problems in education

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

If one looks at the resources available, and examines new alternatives for these resources, improvements can be gained in the Kansas educational system, said Kansas Secretary of State Jack Brier met with the school finance class Tuesday afternoon to discuss current problems in the educational system.

Most students taking the class are teachers aspiring to gain master's and doctoral degrees in education.

"One of the most amazing things on the campaign trail I have witnessed," he said, "is it's hard to believe we can find candidates who are in favor of God, mother, apple pie and education.

Brier is currently campaigning for the Republican Party nomination for the gubernatorial election Nov. 4.

"They don't mind paying for apple pie, but no one seems willing to pay for education," Brier said.

"It really doesn't matter what level it is we are talking about. We seem to have a clear indication that no more money is what they want to pay. We have a clear indication from the government and the economy that we have some pretty serious problems concerning education," Brier said.

"No one has had the foresight to come up with the answer or the courage to do it. That is really why I wanted to meet with you. I am interested in your thoughts about what we can do in education, and in a non-political sense, think about what kinds of opportunities there

Brier compared the school districts in areas of declining economy to those in areas of a growing economy. He pointed out that in one area of Kansas, the lowest starting salary was $11,000 compared to $22,700 in another area of the state.

When you talk about equalization, it wouldn't bother me if they were a little apart," he said. "You would expect that; but a difference of 100 percent is more than a little apart.

Brier said he did not have any ideas on new sources of money. He said new sources of money could be equated with raising taxes.

'We have to look at what kind of solutions there are, particulary at this level in terms of funding," Brier said. "What can we do differently that will give us a better equalization of our dollar?"

Brier explained that he believes one should look at the resources that exist and examine what can be done differently to improve the utilization of those resources.

Indian relics sought

Students search for artifacts

By JENNIFER LINDSEY Collegian Reporter

Six credit hours did not come easy to seven students from K-State and the University of Kansas this sum-

The students spent six weeks in Potter, a small town near Leavenworth, digging in the dirt in search of an Indian complex dating back to 1000 A.D.

The class, Field and Lab Techniques in Archeology, is the result of a joint effort by the two universities. Both of the universities contributed $4,250 for the class, said Patricia J.

O'Brien, professor of anthropology. "This is one of the few times when Regents universities cooperate in curriculum," O'Brien said.

Although the field class has been offered off and on since 1968, it has only been revived in recent years due to the efforts of O'Brien; Alfred Johnson, director of anthropology at KU and other faculty members from both universities. The class was taught by Brad

Logan, professor of anthropology at KU, and his assistant, Tim Weston.

Although O'Brien has led the digs in the past, she went to Potter only a few times this year to give lectures.

In the beginning, the students were looking for evidence of a Plains Woodland complex, dating between 500 and 900 A.D., O'Brien said. What was found, however, was a Steed-Kisker culture complex dating between 1000 and 1250 A.D.

Although the diggers do not know what type of Indians they were, O'Brien said the complex represents a migration from Cahokia, a large complex near St. Louis.

"The Indians probably migrated out of St. Louis down the Missouri River to the Kansas City area," O'Brien said.

Since the river was an easy trade route, it is likely that the Indians were traveling down it for trading purposes and then just stayed, she

The students spent their days in the heat of the Kansas sun working one square meter of earth at a time.

Each layer of soil was then sifted through a boxed screen in the hopes that some evidence from the past would remain.

At the end of the day, the arrowheads, stone tools and pieces of pottery were brought back to "camp" to be sorted, washed and

In her physical anthropology class, O'Brien teaches that there are several ways the finds can be dated. A commonly used dating technique is to find the age of the stratification the artifact was found in. Another way is to date by style. If two arrowheads are similar in style, it is assumed they are contemporaneous.

The origin of artifacts can be found by comparing them to the tools of modern Indians and to artifacts from other finds. All culture groups have distinctive ways of making tools and pottery; therefore, it is easy to sort

The cost of the class included tuition plus $300 for room and board, with the students staying in an old grade school in Potter.

Farmer aid available for a price

In a gesture showing the true heart of the American farmer, tons of hay have been donated in the past several days to mid-Atlantic and Southern states suffering from a drought predicted to cause more than $2 billion in livestock and crop losses.

The donations from these farmers, many of whom are on the brink of bankruptcy themselves, is an indication that the spirit of the farming community has not perished along with the agircultural economy. It also demonstrates an age-old tradition of pulling together during times of crisis.

On the part of the government, however, tradition takes a different twist. Government agencies, predictably, squabbling over who among them should be the farmers' salvation. The U.S. government has shown signs of attempting to help the droughtstricken farmers, but it is a feeble effort at best.

The Farmers Home Administration is loaning emergency funds to farmers in the drought states. But the catch is that many of these farmers, located in areas of periodic drought and low commodity prices, have such high debts they don't qualify for the assistance. Federal agencies are not going to get caught loaning money to farmers they perceive can't possibly pay it back - with Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng vows he is doing everything possible to lessen the economic effects of the drought. But it is clear that politics have become too important a factor in helping these farmers. Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said a shipment to South Carolina arranged by the Democrats was refused by the White House.

The government obviously feels it is giving enough to aid to the farmers. But the greatest help is coming from other American farmers.

Shirt-free women express rights

Last weekend, more than 20 women in Columbia, Mo., opened their shirts in an effort to open some minds.

The women were trying to illustrate the puzzling way women's bodies are perceived. There are no state laws in Missouri that prohibit shirt-free living by women, nor are there any similar ordinances in Columbia. Yet, society has taught women they cannot do what they want with their own bodies.

While the protest or its objectives may not be supported by all, it does deserve a deeper look.

On a hot and humid day, at some point in their lives, most women have envied the men who could just peel of their shirts and not feel embarrassed. But why should women feel embarrassed by their bodies?

Society has ingrained in women the idea they should hide what they were given. Such modesty serves no function.

"For women to appear top-free under environmental conditions that render clothes unnecessary except as a body taboo is a valid expression of human rights," said a statement released by the barebreasted protestors.

At one point in time, it was wrong for men to expose their chests in public, even when the environmental conditions would accommodate such a display. All of that has changed.

People now see the idiocy and discomfort associated with requiring clothing in public at all times. But women are an exception. Such restrictive thoughts perpetuate the idea that women should not be able to control their own bodies.

Despite faults amendment needed

The question of whether of not the state of Kansas should invest in private industry will be put to the voters on Aug. 5 when they cast ballots for S.C.R. 1635. But one catch is that the same investments could also assist other states directly - and legally.

The constitutional amendment, according to Highlights of the 1986 Kansas Legislature, published by the Kansas Legislative Research Department, if approved, "would allow the state to participate in works of internal improvement; first, in the development of a capital formation system and in the investment of state funds for the purpose of stimulating economic development and creating jobs in all areas of the state; and second, for purposes not otherwise specifically authorized by the Constitution, whenever such participation is authorized by a law passed by not less than two-thirds of all the members of each house of the Legislature."

David Barclay, deputy secretary of the Kansas Department of Economic Development, said passage of the proposed amendment would be necessary for the implementation of two Kansas Senate bills.

Barclay noted that only three states, including Kansas, are currently prohibited from investing in the private sector. "Or you could say 47 states can invest," he said.

S.B. 756 establishes a statewide risk capital system implemented by Kansas Venture Capital Inc.

Risk, or venture capital, is defined in Money's Complete Guide to Personal Finance and Investment Terms as an "important source of financing for start-up companies or others embarking on new or turnaround ventures that entail some investment risk but offer the potential for above average future profits."

If enacted, the secretary of the Department of Commerce would be authorized to invest $10 million in KVCI, but only after that for-profit corporation would raise an equal amount through the the sales of new, voting common stock. The sales would be to banks, savings and loans associations, individuals, corporations and other entities.

Barclay noted the state's $10 million would be an investment, with the state being protected by its classification as the senior party. This would allow the state to withdraw its investment, and receive a complete payback before the junior parties, the other investors, could draw profits.

The second bill that could be enacted with the amendment's passage in August is S.B.

This would allow the creation of the Kansas Technology Enterprise Corp., a nonprofit entity designed to foster innovation in existing businesses and the development of new businesses in the state. According to the Highlights publication, this would "absorb and expand the activities of the existing Office of Advanced Technology and the Advanced Technology Commission."

The publication further states that innovation will be fostered by "supporting the creation of centers of excellence for basic research, applied research and development, and technology transfer at Kansas educational institutions; awarding competitive research grants to develop commercial applications; engaging in seed capital financing and providing for the transfer of technology between Kansas educational institutions and Kansas small business."

But an article in The Wichita Eagle-Beacon Friday disclosed that "only 60 percent of an anticipated $40 million pool must be invested in Kansas businesses. The remaining 40 percent could be funneled to businesses without Kansas ties.'

Legislators contacted by the Eagle-Beacon said that was not the intention of the proposed amendment, adding that the bills were originally drafted by Beldon Daniels, "a Massachusetts consultant hired by the Legislature to develop a plan to help revitalize the Kansas economy," according to the newspaper article.

Daniels was reportedly unavailable for comment, but Sonia Toledo, an associate in Daniels' firm, said the 60 percent provision... was "a judgment call...based on experience in other states." She also told the Eagle-Beacon that the reason for the percentage split was to diversify the investments of KVCI to "prevent losses and preserve profits in case Kansas' economy were to decline."

The percentage split may not be strictly in conformance with the Legislature's intentions, but it was passed, and now faces approval from the state's voters. But the reasoning for the wording makes sense in pure economic reasoning, and legislators can change it later if necessary.

Senate votes for permanent TV coverage

WASHINGTON - The Senate voted 78-21 Tuesday to continue television and radio coverage of its proceedings, making permanent an experiment that one supporter said "built an electronic bridge to the American people."

"We have finally caught up with the technology that for 30 years has allowed the American people to share their successes and their failures," said Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

"People are entitled to know. That is the essence of our representative democracy," he said. "Televising of Senate debates and deliberations strengthens that representative form of democracy.'

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., praised the Senate's experiment with television that began June 2, saying: "We sort of built an electronic bridge to the American people.

AIDS focus of research, treatment facility

HOUSTON - The nation's first hospital dedicated solely to research and treatment of AIDS was created Tuesday and officials said it should advance the search for a drug to combat the dreaded disease.

Officials of American Medical International Inc. signed an agreement Tuesday with the University of Texas to set up the hospital, to be known as the Institute for Immunological Disorders.

"What we're embarking on here is an exciting journey into the unknown," said Roger Bulger, president of the University of Texas Health Science Center at

Under the agreement, American Medical International is providing the hospital, management and staff of 100 to 150 people, while the University of Texas System supplies faculty staffing and direction.

The 150-bed Citizens General Hospital is being converted from a general care facility to a research and treatment center for acquired immune deficiency syndrome. The first AIDS patients will be accepted Sept. 2.

Earthquakes continue to shake California

California residents still jittery from a series of earthquakes were jolted by a moderate quake in San Diego and Orange counties early Tuesday, and instruments also recorded temblors in San Jose and east of the Sierra Nevada.

The biggest quake registered 4.4 on the Richter scale and was centered on the ocean floor 12 miles southwest of Oceanside, said Dennis Meredith, spokesman for the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

He said the temblor, which struck at 1:18 a.m., was one of many aftershocks of a quake of magnitude 5.3 that caused an estimated $500,000 damage in San Diego County on July 13. Authorities at first blamed that quake for one heart attack death, but later said it was not responsible.

Police and sheriff's offices in Orange, San Diego and Riverside counties, site of numerous quakes in the last three weeks, reported getting few calls and no damage

Storm pushes chemical train from bridge

BOONE, Iowa - Chemicals spilled Tuesday after 16 cars of a freight train blew off a bridge during a fierce storm and plunged 185 feet into a river valley, and officials sought to learn what chemicals were present.

"It's very evident there are chemicals leaking out. You can see the green tinge in the water," Gov. Terry Branstad said after flying over the site. He wanted to land near the site, but his National Guard helicopter pilot refused because of safety con-

Six people - a state trooper, three fishermen and two railroad workers - were treated at a hospital for nausea and other symptoms that state officials said may have resulted from exposure to materials leaking from truck trailers riding piggyback on the railroad cars.

No one on the train was injured in the derailment late Monday. Two crew members were in a caboose that was left standing on the bridge.

Officials evacuated a one-mile area around the crash scene, including a Bible camp attended by 200 high school and college students.

Appeals court orders Hyatt insurers to pay

companies who wrote policies on the Hyatt Regency hotel to help pay for damages from the skywalks collapse.

The insurance companies had argued that clauses in the contracts with the hotel excused them from all or part of their responsibility for paying of claims in the July 17, 1981 tragedy, which killed 114 people and injured more than 200 others.

The Missouri Court of Appeals upheld a ruling by Jackson County Judge Timothy O'Leary, who threw out clauses in the contracts that voided coverage if coverage was provided by another carrier.

The appeals court was critical of insurance companies for drawing up contracts in which they attempt to escape responsibility for damages that may occur.

Officials identify Topeka drowning victims

OSKALOOSA - Two bodies recovered today from Lake Perry have been identified as those of a Topeka couple.

Authorities said the body of Clifford W. Dickerson, 32, was recovered during a search that started after the body of his wife, Nancy, 30, was found by a boater Sunday night. The bodies were found near a swimming area on the northeast Kansas

The Jefferson County Sheriff's Department said it was continuing an investigation into the apparent drownings.

At a height of 96 feet, with a trunk circumference of 120 inches and a crown spread of 76 feet, it is a record-setting tree.

Kansas State University recently certified Mark Piper's shellbark hickory, more formally known as carya laciniosa, as the largest of its kind in the state.

Piper's tree dwarfed the old record, set in 1982 by a shellbark hickory on the property of Cloyd Heim of Leavenworth. Piper's hickory had a circumference that was 26 inches larger than the old record. It was also 16 feet taller, and its crown — the reach of its leaves and branches - measured 33 feet larger.

Royals' offense is no-show again in loss to Blue Jays

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Dave Stieb, flashing the form that won him the American League earned run average title last season, pitched a four-hitter through 6% innings Tuesday night to lead the Toronto Blue Jays to a 5-2 victory over Kansas City

Stieb, 3-10, had three walks and two strikeouts. Tom Henke got the final out for his 15th save.

The Blue Jays, who snapped a 30-inning scoreless stretch the night before, scratched out one run in the second and two in the fourth. George Bell singled to lead off the second and moved up a base on Jesse Barfield's single. Bell went to third on a fly ball and came home on Ernie Whitt's infield out.

Lloyd Moseby walked leading off the fourth and went to second on Bell's single. Two outs later, Whitt doubled into right-field off Scott Bankhead, 4-5. Moseby scored easily and Bell came home when right fielder Mike Kingery made a bad throw back to the infield.

Cecil Fielder hit a pinch-single off reliever Bud Black in the seventh and scored on Damaso Garcia's fourth home run.

The Royals scored with two outs in the seventh on pinch-hitter Hal

Kingery tripled in the ninth and scored on Jamie Quirk's single off Mark Eichhorn before Henke took

The Royals continue to have offensive problems. They have now scored only two runs in the last two games against Toronto, a team that came into town having not scored a single run in the previous 30 innings, just three shy of a club record.

The loss drops the Royals to nine games under the .500 mark, 46-55. The two teams square-off again tonight in the final game of the series at 7:35.

Washburn aide joins Lady Cat staff

By The Collegian Staff

K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman has filled the assistant coaching vacancy left by Margaret Thomas, who left for personal reasons. Washburn University assistant Terri Lasswell will join the Lady Cat program next season.

Lasswell served in the Washburn women's basketball program for the past two years in the same capacity. Her responsibilities with the Ichabods included recruiting, public relations, travel arrangements, and tournament scheduling and organization.

Prior to her stint at Washburn, Lasswell was the women's basketball coach at Washburn Rural High School in Topeka from 1979-84. Her teams advanced to four consecutive 5A state tournaments since the 1980-81 season.

After being nominated for the city coach of the year in 1981, she captured the honor in '82 and again in '84. That same season she was named Centennial League Coach of the Year and the Kansas Basketball Coaches Association Coach of the

"I'm really excited to be on board here," Lasswell said. "When I completed my master's degree, I looked to get into the collegiate coaching ranks. Kansas State has provided me with that break and step upward. I am very impressed with Coach Mossman and her top-notch program at K-State. I am looking forward to working with the players and the athletic staff," she said.

Lasswell played varsity basketball for the Lady Cats during the 1973-74 season, before transferring to Washburn where she completed her eligibility. She was named to the Lasswell received her bachelor's degree in education from Washburn in 1978. She then earned her master's degree in administration and kinesiology from the University of Kansas in 1983.

"I'm fired up about Terri joining our staff," Mossman said. "She's an exceptional teacher and has great knowledge of the game. I know that the players will benefit from her expertise. The fact that she's from Kansas, and knows people, players and coaches doesn't hurt us at all.

"We're very fortunate to have someone of her ability here at K-State. I feel that she complements both Eddie (Vaughn) and myself well."

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

Area citizens braved the heat, humidity and bugs to meet and listen to six of the seven Republican gubernatorial candidates Tuesday evening at a reception and public forum in Long's Park, 17th and Yuma streets.

More than 300 people attended the forum, making it one of the larger turnouts in the state, said Lana Oleen, chairman of the Riley County Republican Central Committee.

Candidates shook hands and gave away pamphlets, buttons, ballons, flags, stickers, bumperstickers and even paper fans to the audience during the reception.

Kansas Secretary of State Jack Brier, House Speaker Mike Hayden, Larry Jones, Bill McDonald, Richard Peckham, and Barbara Pomeroy spoke to the crowd in prevented gubernatorial candidate Gene Bicknell from attending.

Other Republican candidates running for federal, state and county offices were at the forum sponsored by the Republican committee and the Riley County Republican Women.

Hayden was brief in his remarks and answers. He stressed his leadership experience, mentioned his days at K-State and Aggieville, and 14 years as a legislator.

He pointed out that he was the only candidate in the race, Republican or Democrat, who had voted, on the record, on a public policy issue.

"I have voted, on your behalf, 12,000 times. On the record. On everything from severance tax to sales tax, from reappraisal to classification, to liquor-by-the-drink and pari-mutuel," Hayden said.

Jack Brier criticized Democratic spending policies and tax increases. He said funding for education should be increased and economic development should focus on attracting small businesses to Kansas

McDonald said he wanted to open the lines of communication between Kansans and the state's chief executive officer. Industries are suffering because of too much government intervention and a "hands-off" policy toward private industry should be adopted, he said.

The government should stay out of private industry, McDonald said.

Larry Jones said he would have no general tax increase in his administration. Kansas should have a marketing plan for agricultural products to help farmers, he said.

Richard Peckham praised President Reagan and his economic policies. The voters must realize that government has its limitations, he said. He contrasted Kansas to Illinois several times. Although Illinois has a massive economic development program, high taxes and a lottery, it has not seen economic growth in 15 years, he said.

Other Republican candidates at the forum were Attorney General Bob Stephan; Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell; three candidates for secretary of state; and two Congressional candidates for the

Seven to contend for GOP

Compiled from reports by The Associated Press

Editor's Note: On Aug. 5, Kansas Republicans will nominate a candidate to oppose Democrat Tom Docking for governor in the Nov. 4 general election. Below, listed in alphabetical order, are short summaries and biographies of the seven Republican candidates for the GOP nomination.

Gene Bicknell, 53, Pittsburg, received a degree in business from Pittsburg State University in 1953, and has earned his millions in the pizza franchising business

Bicknell, the son of a miner, was born in Pitcher, Okla., but moved to Baxter Springs at the age of 5. The candidate, along with his running mate Eric Yost, is emphasizing two issues: problems in the farm economy, and general economic development for the state. Bicknell has said his plan is to focus on industries which should come to Kansas because of its central location. Bicknell has served as mayor of Pittsburg.

Jack Brier, 40, Topeka, first entered governmental service at the age of 21, serving as an office boy in the secretary of state's office, headed then by Elwill Shanahan. In 1978, he became head of that office due to the illness of Shanahan.

Brier selected former Kansas Agriculture Secretary Harlan Priddle as his running mate.

"I've got a very good grassroots organization with thousands of volunteers. I've got the only campaign with zero paid staff members. We have no political power brokers and no paid consultants in my campaign," Brier said. The Brier-Priddle ticket is also running a campaign featuring personal appearances, but will step up media advertising as election day ap-

Mike Hayden, 41, Atwood, is hoping that voters will continue a trend in electing legislative leaders to the governor's post.

in receiving the party's nomination. Hayden has proposed expanded, voluntary drug testing to be developed by the Kansas Board of Regents and universities. He also supports mandatory legislation if re-

Hayden's running mate is Sen. Jack Walker, former mayor of Overland Park. Larry Jones, 54, Wichita, has served as chairman of the executive committee of the Coleman Co. in Wichita, former chairman of Wichita State University's business department and former chairman of the Kansas Board of Regents.

With those credentials, Jones is emphasizing his business and education background.

Also basically unknown politically, he selected veteran legislator Bud Burke, current state Senate majority leader, believing he will help him win Johnson County, a Republican stronghold.

'I believe it's going to be a pocketbook election, with taxes very important. I believe that's the issue and I want to be the first one to define it," Jones said.

Jones also has stated he expects to spend approximately $750,000 in the primary race.

Bill McDonald, 41, Meriden, needed publicity for name recognition, but didn't plan on negative publicity.

McDonald, running on a shoestring budget, was convicted on a charge of passing a worthless check July 10 in Shawnee County District Court. The check was to pay for campaign equipment.

But McDonald, a former K-State

McDonald has billed himself and Laidler as "ordinary citizens who share the same concerns about the state of Kansas as other ordinary citizens.'

McDonald cites state tax policy, government spending, economic development and highways as the main issues in his campaign.

Richard Peckham, 40, Andover, is the candidate advocating the most sweeping changes in government for the state.

Peckham, although a newcomer to Kansas politics, has governmental experience through working with the federal Social Security Administration and the Department of Health and Human Services.

He advocates cutbacks in government operations, and opposes liquorby-the-drink, pari-mutuel and lottery amendments on the November ballot. Peckham also promotes 'pro-life" platform for Kansas.

Peckham won a favorable rating from Right to Life of Kansas, although he did not receive a full endorsement. He has received the endorsement of Kansans for Life, an anti-abortion group.

Although Peckham is running a low-budget campaign, he has said, "Money doesn't win. People do. I think we can reach enough people.

woman in Kansas to achieve that goal since 1950. But the lack of a constituency base, poor name recognition and a lack of money has not deterred her.

Perhaps one bit of inspiration is the fact that Kansas' neighbor to the north, Nebraska, has women running for governor on both the Republican and Democratic party tickets.

In fact, Pomeroy's running mate is a woman - Wichita businesswoman Barbara Hale. But if elected, Hale would not have the job long, due to Pomeroy's stated intention of abolishing the post of lieutenant

She calls it a worthless relic of an earlier time which taxpayers can ill afford today.

Pomeroy also advocated the abolishment of the 55 mph speed limit, calling it a "blackmail" threat from Washington.

The winner of the Aug. 5 primary will go against current Kansas Lt. Gov. Tom Docking, who received no opposition in his bid for the Democratic nomination. Docking, if successful in the Nov. 4 general election, would be the third member of his family to reside in Cedar Crest, following his grandfather, George Docking, and more recently, his father, Robert Docking. Docking's running mate is Junction City publisher John G. Montgomery.

Kansas' only friary introduces novices to life of Capuchins

By The Associated Press

VICTORIA - The sweet melody of "Send Us Your Spirit" wafted hauntingly down the halls of St. Fidelis Friary.

Brother Joel, in brown habit with peaked hood, a knotted rope about his waist, and sandals, blew softly on a medieval recorder.

Brother Dan, in jeans and purple T-shirt advertising an Atlanta health-food restaurant, played an upright piano in the music room of the stone friary built in 1902. He earned a history degree with an emphasis in religious studies from K-State in 1983. More often than not, he prefers street clothes to the traditional Capuchin garb. At St. Fidelis, 16th-century traditions meet 20th-century ideals in a mix of religious faith and a curious pragmatism. Here, young men learning to become Capuchin friars search their souls to find whether they will follow the order's vows of poverty, celibacy and obedience. Six such novices are taking part in a year of training at Kansas' only friary, located since 1878 next to St. Fidelis Catholic Church in this northwest Kansas community of 1,328 people. "The reasons for doing this are various," said Brother Charles, 40, guardian of the fraternity and director of novices.

"Some are here because they want to do something meaningful with their lives. Some want to do service work. Some want to develop their spiritual side. Some are interested in social justice. Some like the way of life of the friars."

But the life of a friar today is not what outsiders might expect of the Capuchins, begun in Italy as an offshoot of the Franciscan movement and recognized by the pope in 1528.

Brother Dan and the others want to make themselves part of a breed of men concerned with helping the poor and oppressed. Many Capuchins do not share his political views, but they respect rest of my life."

his right to take such stands.

Some friars become priests. Others are social workers, psychologists, run shelters for the homeless, or teach or write about their religion.

The current friary was built in 1902 and over the years has been a two-year philosophy college for Capuchins, a high school seminary, and a a residence for priests and friars. Since 1978 it has been used for training

The six novices were aware of Capuchin life before beginning their novitiate training. Most had spent years thinking about devoting their life to a religious calling, attending seminary schools or studying under Capuchins, and all had completed a yearlong postulancy in which they lived and worked with Capuchins elsewhere.

If they complete their novice training, on Aug. 5 they will take their simple vows, and live as Capuchins for three more years. They may then take their final solemn vows.

"It is a very intense year. They live together in community, study together, pray together," Brother Charles said. "They take classes in the history of the Franciscans, religious life, their vows, Capuchin history.

It isn't all work at the friary, which resembles a rambling, oldfashioned rural school house albeit one abounding with dozens of religious statues and paintings.

The novices spend their free time relaxing in their college dorm-style rooms, socializing with area friars and priests, taking walks, lifting weights, playing music, biking, playing tennis, watching television and shopping in Victoria and Hays.

"Sometimes I think it's bizarre. But it's really just a different way of life," Brother Dan said.

"Overall, there's been a real feeling of being at peace. I'm feeling now that it's something that I'd like to continue to do for the

Department member resigns; joint investigation continues

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

An investigation into the unauthorized use of equipment within the K-State Department of Forestry has led to the resignation of a member of the department, Jay Shultz, head of the forestry department, confirmed.

Shultz refused to name the person or tell what type of position this person held.

Authorities from K-State Police and Kansas Bureau of Investigation have been conducting the investigation which concerns the unauthorized use of government-surplus equipment. The investigation was initiated June 10 as an on-going administrative project review of the forestry department.

Cy Wainscott, managing editor for the Office of University Relations, also refused to name the person who resigned, however he said the resignation probably came about because "the person who resigned was responsible for the area requiring federal funds and also the administrative program.'

Wainscott confirmed that no charges have been filed in the investigation.

Superintendent of the K-State one concern was that individuals Police Charles Beckom said, "We are investigating the complaint that is filed. When we complete a report, we will consult with the county attorney and the other prosecutors involved to see if there are any clearcut offenses.

Beckom said after the county attorney reviews the report, it will be decided whether the report needs further investigation or evaluation by the attorney general and other state officials

'We are not even sure if crimes have taken place, but we are assuming they have because of the complaint," Beckom said.

The complaint was filed by the Department of Forestry, Beckom

Wainscott explained that because of the legal problems involved, University officials are not giving more information on the investiga-

Wainscott said he could not freely dicuss the investigation because it is still going on and added that it is hard to determine the results of the investigation because of the amount of paperwork involved.

'Everyone is anxious to get to the bottom of it," Wainscott said.

Earlier this month, Wainscott said were using this equipment for personal use.

Wainscott also said authorities believe a substantial amount of equipment is involved.

The equipment involved in the complaint is used to assist rural fire districts throughout the state. Because the K-State forestry department serves as the state forestry agency and the state forestry extension department, it issues the government-surplus equipment to the districts and takes the equipment back when it is no longer needed.

The forestry department has 329 cooperative agreements with more than 500 separate fire protection districts.

Wainscott said he believed much of the investigation involved checking old records and verifying that equipment and funds were reaching intended destinations.

'There is something positive that can be seen in all this," Wainscott said. "The system of checks and balances in the University works. Schultz himself was able to spot that something was wrong in the department and started the investigation

"From my point of view this fact is very encouraging," Wainscott said.

Bids to determine bond planning

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

In the Aug. 5 primary election, Manhattan voters will be asked to decide the fate of the $2.8 million 'Quality of Life" bond issue.

Backers of the proposal have said it will lead to the renovation and construction of six parks and recreation projects. However, if the bond issue passes, the questions of when work will actually begin and how much of it will actually be completed are still uncertain.

Terry DeWeese, director of parks and recreation and a member of "Citizens for Quality of Life," said they hope to start on the projects as soon as possible.

Architects and engineers will be hired to draft designs for five of the projects and construction bids will have to be let out, DeWeese said.

Final results of all of the projects will be determined by the outcome of the construction bids.

"I think they're (the estimates) pretty close to what we have down to build the facilities," DeWeese said, describing the cost breakdown of the

The projects themselves will all be amount of additional funds provided carried out in some form, he said.

'There is always the possibility of shaving a little off. If we're over budget we'll build what we can," he

Any work on the proposed Linear Park will have to wait until the land for the project is purchased, DeWeese said.

"We're still doing research to see who owns the land," he said, adding that he did not know when - or if the land would be available. Also, although the bond issue calls for $125,000 to fund construction of a new animal shelter, a suitable site has yet to be chosen. "It will have to be somewhere away from the general community," DeWeese said, explaining most people do not want this type of facility in their neighborhood.

Exact details about the structure remain unknown, even to the planners. The reason is that his department will be looking for a commitment from Riley County to help pay for the shelter if the bond issue is passed, DeWeese said.

The size and construction of the building will be dependant on the by the county, he said.

"Completion dates on the projects are difficult to say," he said.

DeWeese did say renovation of the Community House, located at Fourth and Humboldt streets, will be completed by next summer. He said this is a "must" due to programs involving the elderly and youths planned for the structure.

The establishment of the outdoor recreation/sports complex south of Anderson and Wreath avenues seems to be relatively secure if the bond issue is passed, he said.

Funds for the first phase of the project, $600,000 obtained through revenue sharing and park development, have already been secured,

DeWeese said. The bond issue will allot $200,000 for renovation of the Community

House and $350,000 for renovation of the Northview swimming pool. It also calls for $700,000 for the outdoor recreation/sports complex; $695,000 for construction of a pool in CiCo Park; $125,000 for an animal shelter and $451,000 for development of the levee railroad trail.

Bicknell heads spending list

Financial reports reveal campaign expenses

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Campaign finance reports turned into the secretary of state's office Wednesday showed Gene Bicknell, a Pittsburg millionaire, used $924,000 of his personal wealth to try and win the Republican nomination for gover-

Bicknell, who made his fortune investing in Pizza Hut franchises, reported contributions of $962,586 during the reporting period ending July 25. He spent $928,438 during that time and had $34,147 in cash on hand. Of his total contributions, $924,000 came in the form of 27 loans he made his campaign starting May

Lt. Gov. Tom Docking, the Democratic nominee for governor, raised $765,000 in his bid for governor and spent $595,000 in the reporting period.

Docking's financial disclosure report, which came just six days before the Aug. 5 primary election, listed nearly 5,000 individuals who had donated to his campaign and prepayments of $54,000 for expenditures expected during the general election race.

House Speaker Mike Hayden, one of seven candidates for the Republican nomination as governor, said that as of July 25, the cutoff time for reporting contributions and expenditures, his campaign had raised $317,658 in cash and spent $270,477, leaving a balance of $47,181. In addition, Hayden said, his campaign has received $34,000 in in-kind contributions, such as donations of time and materials or paying expenses associated with fundraising

In the five days since that report was compiled, Hayden said, his contributions have risen to more than $325,000, and have been coming in at the rate of about $5,000 a day. Other reports on file Wednesday were two other Republicans seeking the nomination for governor: Barbara Pomeroy, a former Wichita pomeroy's report showed she has raised just $48,776 to fuel her campaign for the Republican nomination for governor. Of that total, Democratic nomination for $43,955 was money she loaned the campaign.

State University professor from

peckham has collected $23,353 and spent $20,000 on his campaign and still has $3,353 on hand. His inkind contributions amounted to $6,630 - of which the candidate accounted for $3,600.

Dennis Moore, prosecutor in Johnson County who is the Democratic nominee for attorney general, had raised $194,382 and spent $188,244 already as he prepares to take on Republican Attorney General Robert T. Stephan in the Nov. 4 general election.

All five of the candidates in the secretary of state race had their reports on file, including Bill Graves, assistant secretary of state, who collected $79,680 in support of his bid for the Republican Whitewater, and Richard J. nomination. Of that amount, $38,000 contributions of $28,640 and expen-Peckham, a Wichita attorney from came from loans he secured and another $13,000 were donations from Graves and family members.

Karen Carlin, ex-wife of Gov. John Carlin and a candidate for the secretary of state, took out a $10,000 loan to finance her campaign and received $5,895 in other contributions. Carlin, who now lives in Wichita, had spent all but $2,063.

Another Democratic contender, Rep. Judy Runnels of Topeka, reported receipts of $41,124. Runnels had $3,979 in her campaign coffers at the beginning of the reporting period and she spent $41,006, leaving a balance of $4,096.

Runnels and her husband, John B. Runnels, donated $4,000 to the campaign, according to the report. Of Runnels' expenditures, electronic media advertising and production led the list at $21,478.

Janice Hardenburger, of Haddam, who is challenging Graves and Gordon Schultz for the GOP elections officer nomination, reported ditures of $18,125, leaving her campaign with $10,514 in cash on hand at the end of the reporting period.

Her campaign received $2,400 inkind contributions and $19,000 in loans from William Hardenburger, her husband. Among the supporters who gave money to her campaign are Don Concannon and Dave Owen, both former state Republican Party chairmen.

Schultz, of Whitewater and former chairman of the state Board of Education, reported no expenditures or contributions during the reporting period. However, he said in a telephone interview he planned to amend the report to show his $500 filing fee as an in-kind contribution.

Schultz said his finance chairman had misunderstood state financial disclosure laws regarding detailed reporting of all contributions or expenditures greater than $50.

State Treasurer Joan Finney, who is seeking re-election to the post she has held since 1974, took in $7,691 during the reporting period in addition to about $806 she had beforehand, according to her report. Finney reported spending $7,985, leaving her a balance of $511.

Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell started the reporting period with $42,873 and added contributions of $127,746 to give him a huge $170.620 warchest. He spent $107,916, leaving him with $62,704 as he tries to win re-election for the sixth consecutive time.

Mountain bike craze races through Plains

By CYNTHIA JONES Collegian Reporter

Mountain bikes are the new craze in the country. What, you might ask, is a mountain bike? Well, it could be described as a cross between a 10-speed and a BMX bike, and it is for the eternal child.

John Hurd of The Pathfinder, 1111 Moro St., is the owner of two such bikes. He said the sale of mountain bikes accounts for about 19 percent of bike sales at the store.

He first became interested in mountain bikes while living in California, where the craze began

At this time, he said, there was no bike on the market, and that those wanting one of these rugged bikes would have to convert his own from an old Schwinn cruiser.

Today they are on the market but they are expensive, costing anywhere from $400 to $3,000, depending on the model, Hurd

One reason for the expense is that the bikes require a triple crank and more powerful brakes than are found on a regular bike.

The bikes are sold to most all age groups, with the most comyears of age. The bikes are sold also for the "older" ones, he said.

for different purposes, also.

Commission grants airline concessions

By KATHY CONRADT Collegian Reporter

In a special meeting of the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday, Capitol Airlines was granted lease rental concessions for an additional six months.

The airline, which had requested an extension on their rent deferral agreement, will begin to pay the usual fees in August along with the interest due from the past six months' deferred rent. Payment of the balance due is to begin in February.

In downtown redevelopment action, the commission approved the review of bids and awarding of contracts for Phases VI and VII demolition for the Town Center Mall. It also approved sign regulation changes in the redevelopment overlay district.

The commission also approved to continue funding for the South Manhattan Neighborhood Association newsletter.

In other business, property owners appeared before the commission to discuss the proposed improvements on Wreath Avenue. The improvements will continue as planned.

The first readings of two rezoning ordinances were also approved. The property located north of the Land Bank Offices on the west side of Seth Child's Road will change from a general agriculture district to a multiple-family residential district.

The other land affected, located south of U.S. Highway 24 and west of the city's sewage treatment facility will change from county agricultural zoning to heavy industrial district.

At the request of property owners, the commission approved considering the unilateral annexation of a tract of land located north of Kimball Avenue, west of Western Hills Subdivision. The request was made in order for the city to provide improvements to Kimball Avenue. The land is owned by Alvin Abbott.

Brigade promotes punk rock

By CONNIE WELSH Collegian Reporter

Alternative-music fans will have the opportunity to share a unique sound in music this fall as the Alternative Music Brigade gets ready to kick off a new semester.

"The Alternative Music Brigade is basically an organization to promote an underground music scene in Manhattan," said Krista Keiter, junior in elementary education and vice president of the organization. "It's music you don't normally hear, even on KSDB," she said.

The club began two years ago when several KSDB disc jockey's decided to form an organization that would promote more of a punk rock sound, Keiter said.

"Several people started AMB because they wanted to promote among students what they call 'good' music," Keiter said. "They also wanted to promote The Tour, which is a radio program that is mainly punk rock music." The 50-member organization is comprised of K-State students, high school students coming to K-State and Manhattan residents, Keiter

The AMB is reorganizing its program for next fall due to lack of organization among the previous officers. Keiter said.

"In previous years, they (the officers) planned on doing a lot of things, but nothing ever took place," she said. "This year, I plan to follow through on plans."

reorganization stage, many events already are being planned for the fall semester, she said.

"The first thing we need to do is raise some money," Keiter said. "We're planning on having a thriftshop type store and a used record sale. We're also selling T-shirts again this year, but they'll have a new pattern.' To help raise the necessary funds, the organization is also planning to charge a membership fee in the fall,

"We plan on having a couple of parties and some bands come and play," she said. The organization also plans to gather concert information on all soft-core and hard-core concerts in the area and distribute the informa-

While the group is in the tion to AMB members, Keiter said. "We'll supply information about concerts and hopefully take some road trips to these concerts," she

To further promote the organization's visibility on campus, the AMB will put out a monthly magazine that will offer updates on music, feature articles and student input such as poetry, art and comics, Keiter said. "Right now, we can only distribute the magazine to members because of funds, but we hope to give everyone a chance to read it in the fall," she

The club will have meetings once a month, Keiter said.

"It (the club) will not be a lot of business. It's mainly just for fun, and it gives people with the same taste in music a chance to get together."

Lower division courses to suffer due to staff, funding reductions

By SCOTT SEWELL Staff Writer

The College of Arts and Sciences is beginning to feel the pinch of the ever-tightening financial belt at

According to a memo from William Stamey, dean of the college, to department heads and the College Committee on Planning, some departments may have difficulty finding individuals to teach lower-division courses this fall because of a loss of $87,000 and three unclassified positions.

Bill Feyerharm, assistant provost for academic affairs, believes the loss of the three unclassified positions and $87,000 is a result of the creation of nine new student recruitment positions.

"I guess these are the funds that we are to give back to central administration to help pay for student recruiters," he said.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance said, however, that the new positions aren't the only reason for the reallocation of the money.

"We can't really track that specifically to any particular thing. That is what is called a university deficit," he said. "That deficit is being pro-rated to all University units; not just colleges, but every operation unit on campus that has a budget will be contributing to that deficit reduction,"

Miller said the loss of three unclassified positions by College of Arts and Sciences may be related to the addition of the recruitment

Stamey, who could not be reached for additional comment, said in the memo, "None of these actions contributes to the quality of instruction or to the support of the college's research and service responsibilities."

"The short-term goal is to assure that undergraduate students are not turned away by their inability to get into required courses," he

"For at least a decade," Stamey said in the memo, "departments with heavy service commitments have regularly employed temporary people to teach lower-division courses.' In the memo, Stamey said that because of a loss of money from temporary sources, some departments may have to make other arrangements to fill vacancies in lower-division classes before the fall semester begins.

Arrangements Stamey mentioned include increasing section size beyond the normal optimal numbers, canceling upper-division and graduate courses with modest enrollment to provide teachers for lower-division classes and increasing the number of sections taught by some faculty members.

Stamey also asked department heads to make no new commitments of salary dollars to anyone, including GTAs, either as a new offer or as an increase in salary without his prior approval.

He asked department heads to notify him if any uncommitted dollars are available that he may not know about.

Color scheme updates Union

By PAT REDMAN Collegian Reporter

Things are changing all over in the Union, even in the most subtle ways. The latest cosmetic adjustment of the student meeting ground is the color of the pillars in the main concourse. They've been painted white.

It's all part of a new new look the campus has been going through the past several weeks

"We're going to try and put a little more purple over campus. If people haven't noticed, the campus now has purple trash cans," said Walt Smith, director of the Union. "We're going to accent the white with purple bulletin boards and purple trim."

Just a few weeks ago, however, the pillars had been painted green, the same color that had been used in the Union for the last 13 years.

'There wasn't any real decision, it just happened. They were painted the same because they had always been green," said Jack Durgan, professor in interior architecture. Durgan has been working with Smith on the new color scheme for the

"After talking to President Wefald, Jack and I decided to change the color to an off-white," Smith said. "I've been here so long, and they have always been green so we thought it was time for a change."

The idea to incorporate more purple and white in the Union started when President Jon Wefald approached Smith after reading an article in The New York Times about the Union's selection as one of the top 10 student unions in the nation.

"President Wefald said he read the article in The New York Times about all the purple in the courtyard, but he didn't notice much purple," Smith said. "He made the comment that he goes out and visits prospective students and their parents, and when he returns he wants to see more pur-

Wefald, who has traveled the state extensively, wants to make people proud of K-State and remind them of what K-State is about.

"There's a certain heritage and history connected with Kansas State University that dates all the way back to 1863. Part of that history and tradition would be the school colors,' Wefald said.

"The most visited building on campus and the hub of the campus is our student union," he said. "I think incorporating the school colors in the Union is a nice way to remind alumni and show visitors the school colors are purple and white. Another reason for a change in color came about when the pillars in the bookstore were painted beige, it made the purple stand out more, Smith said. "That was one of our consultant's recommendations in the bookstore," Smith said. "He said we have too much green, and it kills everything."

The colors in the Union have primarily been green and blue since the second addition was completed in

"Dick Blackburn, who was my predecessor, liked blue and green so that's why the Union was decorated in those colors," Smith said. "I think the students will like white and purple better, and I think it will create a different atmosphere."

Women more susceptible to disease

Poor diet leading cause of osteoporosis

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Osteoporosis, literally "porous bones," is a crippling, painful affliction that affects one in four women above the age of 60, according to Calcium Currents, a publication of the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board.

One of the leading factors linked to osteoporosis is prolonged calcium deficiency, most frequently found in women, said Mary P. Clarke, associate professor and cooperative extension specialist in nutrition education. Characterized by dramatic bone loss throughout the skeletal system, osteoporosis usually goes unnoticed until late adulthood, when the damage is irreversible. Complications from the disease, particularly fractures of the hip, make osteoporosis the 12th leading cause of death in America, Calcium Currents reported.

In addition to building and maintaining bones and teeth, calcium is needed for muscle contraction (including heartbeat), blood coagulation and nerve impulse transmisenough calcium, the body draws calcium from the calcium reserves in the bones. When this happens for an extended period of time, the bones become weak and eventually porous, the publication reported.

"The research indicates the disease is clearly associated with diet. Calcium intake is extremely important, but there are also other contributing factors - vitamin D, phosphorus, hormones, fiber and exercise," Clarke said. "This is just more evidence that everyone needs to maintain a healthy diet throughout their lives. What happens when you're developing lays the groundwork on what will happen later on in life. These are all factors we can control, simply by maintaining a healthy diet," Clarke

Certain people are at a higher risk of developing osteoporosis, and these factors cannot be controlled. The disease tends to run in families. Because of their lighter frames, Caucasians and Orientals are at a the rate of bone breakdown increases.

Osteoporosis is sometimes considered the "little old ladies" disease, according to a publication by Daisy E. Atkinson, cooperative extension specialist in human nutrition. Several factors account for this

Men usually have a greater bone density than women do. Also, males consume much more calcium than women do. Large bone mass at maturity is regarded as the most important factor to prevent osteoporosis, according to Atkinson.

Women are more likely to go on risky reducing diets which lead to bone loss and are more likely to sacrifice proper nutrients because of calorie concerns. Also, women's ability to absorb calcium decreases during menopause, around ages 45 to 50, the same time their need for calcium increases, according to Calcium Currents.

Exercise is a vital factor in pro-because as estrogen production falls, walking, bicycling, jumping rope and skiing are effective exercise.

Clarke said the recommended dietary allowance of calcium is 800 milligrams per day for an average adult. Pregant women require 1,200 milligrams, while pregnant teenagers require 1,600 milligrams daily. Clarke recommends an average of 1,000 milligrams per day for adults and 1,200 milligrams for children and teen-agers.

Milk and other dairy products, including milk, buttermilk, yogurt, cheeses, ice cream and ice milk furnish about 75 percent of the calcium in the average diet. Other calciumrich foods include legumes, green leafy vegetables, tofu and canned salmon and sardines, with bones

Photographers to document life at K-State

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

During a hectic week in October, photographers from all over the nation will be scrambling to capture pieces of University life on 1,800 rolls of film - more than 28,500

Dozens of former K-State student photographers have been invited back to campus to shoot an array of activities happening this fall.

The photographs will be compiled into a 10-by-14-inch, 160-page "coffee table" picture book, depicting K-State college life in 1986, said Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc., the publisher and distributor of the project.

"It all came about at exactly the right time, that is why it was so well received," said Jeff Taylor, photographer for The Columbia Tribune, Columbia, Mo., and a coordinator for the project. The University is in a state of transition; there is a new president, vice president, and new coaches throughout the athletic department, said Taylor, a 1986 graduate.

The working title for the project is "A Week at K-State."

The idea for AWAKS began as a reunion for the former photographers and fireballed into a full-scale project whose profits will be funneled into a photojournalism scholarship.

'To a certain extent, it is a reunion, but I think the best thing will be to meet each other. We have a great deal of prominent people coming back, and we need to pat them on the back," said Tim Janicke, photo editor for The Kansas City Times and editor of the project.

The project has financial support from the KSU Foundation, the College of Arts and Sciences, the Alumni Association, University Relations, President Jon Wefald and others, Adams said. Foundation and Student Publications will be providing the initial funds to print the book, Adams said. The two contributing organizations will put up $25,000 each for the $50,000 project.

The sale of the book will be targeted toward the alumni, said Chris Stewart, editor of this fall's Collegian, and student liaison for the project.

Photographers will cover events from all colleges and a few offcampus programs. The photos which depict the missions of the University as well as serve as strong visual images will be included in the book, Adams said.

"I think it is going to be a very exciting project. We have some of the best photojournalists in the field today," said Stewart, senior in journalism and mass communications.

Professional photographers from Colorado, Florida, Kansas, Maryland, Missouri, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas, Washington state and Washington, D.C., will be flown in for the week of Oct. 12-19 for the project, Adams said.

"A lot of their employers are giving them time off and some are using their vacation time to be here," said Janicke, a 1976 graduate.

The week chosen for the project coincides with the K-State vs. University of Kansas football game, Oct. 18.

A seminar Oct. 15 will join the week-long project, which will be divided into two sessions. The seminar will feature presentations, to be finalized at a later date, from various returning photographers.

Tentative plans for the seminar include presentations from a White House photographer, photographer from a national award-winning show, a slide show from a photographer on assignment in Africa, a program on photographers who hold management positions and a presentation from Student Publications.

"A lot of talent has come out of K-State in the last 10 to 15 years and we intend to use it to make an A-1 quality book," said Pete Souza, White House photographer, project coordinator and 1979 graduate.

The photographers will have their choice of which session to attend. One session is from Sunday, Oct. 12 to Wednesday, Oct. 15. The second session begins that same Wednesday and ends on Sunday, Oct. 19. Some photographers will be attending both sessions, Adams said.

"This is an opportunity for a lot of people to work together and benefit from other people in their field," Janicke said. AWAKS will be set up as a documentary, where the photographs are not staged in advance. "This is a chance for us to practice pure photography," he

A committee of administrators, faculty and students was formed to organize the details, form a budget and present the idea.

The photographers were then sent a letter explaining the idea, and outlining roughly what would take place during the week. A reply card was sent along with the letter to encourage contact with the project organizers, Stewart said.

We had great response to the letter. I think these guys are proud of K-State and are more than willing to help promote it in any way they can," Taylor said.

An estimated 1,500 rolls of blackand-white film and another 300 rolls of color film will be used during the week, Janicke said.

As the editor, Janicke will be in charge of deciding which photos will appear in the final production. Those photos not included in the book will be stored in the University Archives by the Office of Photographic Services, Adams said. Prints will be available through Photographic Services after the book is published.

A bulk of the picture story ideas will come from the individual photographers. These ideas will turn into assignments after they are approved by the coordinators, Souza said.

Souza will be in charge of distributing photo assignments under the direction of Adams, who is acting as publisher of the book. Janicke will make sure all pages are designed and that the copy fits. Taylor will handle all student manpower, generate assignments, background research, film processing and print making.

Stewart will serve as student liason for the project, helping get the project organized and keeping the students updated on changes, progress or additions to the events planned.

Ronda Corle, senior in journalism and mass communications and editor of the 1986 Royal Purple, will be the designer of the book. Bill Brown, former director of Student Publications from June 1970 to June 1981 and former faculty member will be writing the copy for the project. Brown is a 1949 alumnus.

The book's copy will be sent to the printer in January 1987, and is expected to be available for distribution by fall 1987, Adams said.

A special section in the Collegian and Royal Purple will serve as a sneak preview for the project, Stewart said.

New work 'definitive'

Area plant life topic of book

By PAT REDMAN Collegian Reporter

Anyone who has ever wondered how many varieties of sunflowers there are or where a hairy vetch came from, can find out in a new hefty-sized book titled, "The Flora of the Great Plains.' The book is a definitive new reference work on plants in the region and has everything anyone ever wanted to know about plants of the Central United States. "It is the biggest book the University Press of Kansas has published," said Ted Barkley, editor of the book and curator of the K-State herbarium. "It has 1,408 pages and contains about 1 million words." One million words is equivalent to about eight average-size scholarly books.

A flora, as described by Barkley, is a reference work that systemically describes plants of a particular region, listing them by species and considering them as a whole.

This particular flora of the Great Plains is about one-fifth of the United States and is the only up-to-date one in existence for the area. It includes all of Kansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas west to the Rocky Mountains and east to Iowa and Missouri. It also includes the northern part of Oklahoma.

"The flora of the region is made up of many species of plants, and it was tury," said Barkley, professor of biology. "So the place where there is a great deal of agriculture and an economic advantage to knowing something about the flora, was never looked at with great enthusiasm."

In the late 1940s Ronald L. McGregor, a University of Kansas faculty member, began studying the flora of Kansas with the intent of writing a book on the region. McGregor collected more than 200,000 plants from throughout Kansas, and started the KU herbarium.

In 1972, McGregor approached Barkley with the idea to write a flora of the region.

"He said a regional flora, taking in the whole natural region would be worth more scientifically than would just a state flora. I agreed," Barkley

Together, the two formed the Great Plains Flora Association in 1973 and got the assistance of 14 botanists from universities in the region to help compile the flora.

'McGregor was the coordinator of the project. He was the person who coordinated the collection of the specimens, the gathering of material and the building of the herbarium. He did all the field work," Barkley said. "He had superb experience in this area."

As a result, in 1977 the association published an atlas of the flora of the tion data on the flora of the plains. It's just distribution maps," Barkley said. "What it does is tell you where the plants occur and where we had collected them. It doesn't tell you the range of the specimens.'

After the atlas was published Barkley began editing all the information needed to compile the flora.

"All 16 of us who participated in the project wrote different parts, the parts on which we are more or less specialists," Barkley said. "As a result. I took all the information and put it together."

Included in the book are general keys, ecological data, scientific names for ever plant conifer and fern known to occur in the region, about 3,800 in all.

Barkley noted the book is not for everyone. It will be used in plant taxonomy classes and as a sourcebook for naturalists.

Bosco to help recruitment effort

Pat Bosco, former assistant vice president for educational and student services, has been reassigned by President Jon Wefald to a newly created position as assistant vice president for institutional advancement/director for enrollment management.

Because Bosco was moved into the assistant position before the new vice president for institutional advancement has been selected, the transfer may seem a bit risky. However, Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said "generally, inherent people are already in place" when new vice presidents are selected.

Reagan said Bosco will take over as director as one of three functional areas under the new vice president. As director for enrollment management, Bosco must begin training the new admissions counselors — a task which President Wefald wanted to get under way as soon as possible. Reagan said the move was a "matter of timing." Addressing the recruitment problem has been a major concern of Wefald's since he became president.

This assistant vice president position is only one of many changes President Wefald has in store for the University.

Bosco has taken over a major area in the newly created office of institutional advancement, which should enhance overall organization within the University. Prior to Bosco's move, William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, handled so many branches of student services that appropriate dedication to all of them had to have been elusive. Bosco's new job will involve managing some of those "extra" burdons. It is expected Bosco will be able to give them appropriate attention.

An energy-crazed K-State alumnus who has generated positive development in the University since he was an undergraduate and student body president, Bosco has continually reached out to help students during his 15 years with the University. Last year he encouraged an academic awareness program for living groups by utilizing established campus resources.

By moving Bosco, Wefald said the University is utilizing one of its best resources.

Budget deficit hurts departments

Last week, William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, sent a memo to department heads and members of the College Committee on Planning saying that, because of a loss of $87,000 and three unclassified positions, the college may have trouble providing teachers for lower-division courses this fall.

William Feyerharm, assistant provost for academic affairs, said the $87,000 and the three positions are to be "given back to the central administration to help pay for the student recruiters."

George Miller, vice-president for administration and finance, says this may not necessarily be true.

According to Miller, the University budget has experienced a deficit and "every operating unit on campus that has a budget" will be contributing to the University deficit.

Miller did say that even though the $87,000 may not necessarily be reallocated for the new student recruitment positions, the three unclassified positions may be.

Finally, K-State President Jon Wefald, in a letter to new students (to be published in the Collegian's New Student Issue, August 1986), says: "This University provides the possibility of an exceptional liberal arts education — and I think every student should have a broad, liberal education."

These four men do not seem to be on the same wavelengths.

Wefald is trying to instill a fresh, new attitude about K-State; one that will benefit not only the University, but the state of Kansas as well. He is also implementing new programs and ideas that he hopes will make K-State an outstanding university.

But, if Wefald wants every student to have a "broad, liberal education," why would $87,000 and three unclassified positions be eliminated from the College of Arts and Sciences? After all, this is the very college that provides the basis for the education Wefald thinks every student ought to have Undoubtedly, the nine student recruitment positions which Wefald has created will increase awareness of K-State across Kansas, however, by creating these positions, part of the ability to provide a liberal arts education may be lost.

The addition of student recruiters across the state is a step in the right direction, but the educational opportunities available to those who have already chosen to attend K-State should not be the target for sacrifice.

Sport demands skill, concentration

Many individuals enjoy a variety of summer sports. Softball, baseball, swimming, tennis, water skiing are only a few of the recreational activities available to Manhattan residents.

But to some, one summer sport stands above the rest.

It is a game of skill and concentration where consistency is the ever-important key to coming out on top. The "playing fields" of this sport are often spectacular parts of nature which have been known to bring fine, upstanding men and women to their knees, begging for mercy.

Those who have tried it often become addicted, and those who haven't often complain about how "stupid" the game is.

Of course, I'm talking about the wonderful game of golf.

Many of you who have never tried golf are groaning, and probably on the verge of turning the page, only to read about the latest Royals loss. Don't.

The complaint heard most often about golf is that it is a stupid game where individuals chase a little white ball around a field.

That complaint is wrong in two ways.

First, the game has progressed to such an extent that players now have a choice of what colors they want their golf balls to be.

Colors range from the traditional white ball, to the more recently developed orange and yellow balls. Lady golfers can choose between pink and light blue colored balls and those into the new-wave of golf have a choice golf is that it is not played on "fields".

some of these "fields" happen to be the most beautiful sights in the world. To avid golfers, courses like La Costa, Torrey Pines, Doral and Pebble Beach, bring visions of beauty, as well as a challenge to shoot a low score. The beautiful scenery on some of the nicer courses often makes a difficult round of golf more enjoyable.

On the local scene, Manhattan Country Club and Stagg Hill Golf Course aren't the best golf courses in the state, however, they do give individuals the chance to work on their game and compete, to a certain extent, with others who are at the same skill level.

For a sense of what playing on a PGA course is like, Rolling Meadows Golf Course in Junction City is about the closest anyone can come in this area, short of becoming a PGA pro. The carpet-like fairways, neatly groomed sand traps and large, smoothed greens are dreams come true for northeast Kansas golfers.

Almost anybody can learn the fundamentals of how to play the game, but few can be consistent at playing well. It is rare to have one golf professional win more than one tournament in a season, let alone win back-to-back tournaments.

I think most golfers would agree that the challenge in the sport comes from learning the basics of the game and then applying that knowlege to play solid, consistent, low-scoring golf. It's not as easy as most non-golfers would imagine.

A major drawback for students who like the game is the cost. To play a round of golf in this area costs about $6 to $8. For those who can't stay away from the course for more than 24 hours, this can become an expensive sport.

Stagg Hill offers student memberships for K-State students at a cost of $40 a month. During the summer, this is a bargain, but when classes are in session, an avid golfer can miss quite a few classes because of the urge to chase that little white ball around a field

Former personnel officer testifies in case

KANSAS CITY — A former employment supervisor for Kansas City, Kan., testified in federal court this week that city employees live in fear for their jobs because of a system of political patronage employment.

Maureen Patton, a high-ranking city personnel officer until she was fired in May 1983, testified Tuesday and Wednesday that she observed the fear at city hall because of what she called an entrenched system of political patrongage employment and hirings.

Patton is suing the city and her former boss, Personnel Director Jerry Davis, for $500,000 in damages in connection with her dismissal.

She alleged that her efforts to resist patronage hiring practices led to her firing after more than two years with the city. She also alleged that she was a victim of sex discrimination.

Patton spent all day Tuesday on the witness stand before the jury and U.S. District Judge Earl O'Connor. She testified that on several occasions, she was instructed to accept applications and conduct interviews for jobs that already had been promised to friends of high-ranking city officials.

Daniel Denk, a lawyer representing the city, cross-examined Patton, and content

Daniel Denk, a lawyer representing the city, cross-examined Patton, and contended that she was fired because she frequently arrived late to work, took long lunch hours, left early from work and caused internal problems in the personnel department

Patton said that both she and her son had health problems that caused her to miss work. But she said her absences always were with permission from Davis, including permission on written documents signed by Davis that were put into evidence.

Man faces charges after accident with bus

VICTORIA, British Columbia — A North Saanich, B.C., truck driver has been charged with having an insecure load on his truck following an accident last Thursday in which a 440-pound section of watermain pipe fell off his truck and struck a bus full of Kansas tourists.

Police Sgt. Don Mann said J. W. Kokkelink was issued a ticket under the Motor Vehicle Act and must either pay a $50 fine or appear in Sidney, British Columbia, provincial court Aug. 15.

The accident occurred about two miles from Butchart Gardens on Vancouver Island when a section of scrap pipe fell off a truck as it went downhill, bounced off the road and smashed through the windshield of the bus.

Mann said the bus driver, Albert Strope of Arkansas City, Kansas, cracked a rib attempting to dodge the object coming through the windshield. The pipe section glanced off his head, hit a luggage rack and rolled down the aisle of the bus.

The vehicle was carrying senior citizen tourists from Kansas.

"I've never seen anything like it," Mann said. "If it had gone straight through at any height, it would have decapitated people."

Strope received eight stitches to his head and was released from hospital shortly after. Three passengers on the bus were released from hospital after being treated for minor injuries.

Infant born 7 weeks after mother's death

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — A healthy baby girl was delivered Wednesday by doctors who had sustained the life of the infant's brain-dead mother for seven and a half weeks to allow the fetus to develop.

The baby, Michelle Odette Poole, had been the center of a court fight between the mother's parents, who wanted doctors to disconnect life support systems when their daughter died, and the father, who went to court to protect the developing fetus.

The father, Derrick Poole, was at the Kaiser Permanente Hospital when doctors delivered his daughter at 8:53 a.m., according to hospital spokeswoman Denise Clarke. He had no immediate comment.

The haby weighed four pounds, five ounces at delivery and was 16 and a half in

The baby weighed four pounds, five ounces at delivery and was 16 and a half inches long.

Poole met his financee Marie Odette Henderson last year at a party. They were looking forward to their December wedding and Michelle's birth when a brain tumor caused the mother to collapse on June 4. The 34-year-old woman, six months pregnant, was declared legally dead three days later as a result of a stroke.

After learning her parents, Edna and Otis Henderson of Detroit, had decided to have her life support systems turned off, Poole obtained a court order to keep them on. He later reached a settlement with the parents that allowed the fetus to develop until it had a better chance of surviving outside its mother's body. The baby was 32 weeks old upon delivery.

Explosion sparks cruise ship fire, 19 hurt

LITTLE STIRRUP CAY, Bahamas — An explosion sparked a fire aboard a cruise ship Wednesday, injuring at least 19 people and forcing the 987 passengers to evacuate by lifeboat to two tiny islands, authorities said.

Coast Guard helicopters lifted victims from the Emerald Seas, which was anchored less than a mile offshore when the blast occurred around 10 a.m. in an equipment storeroom.

Passengers, many of whom were already on deck waiting to be brought here for snorkeling, sailing and windsurfing when the fire broke out, said evacuations were orderly after initial confusion.

The ship's crew extinguished the fire quickly, and by late Wednesday passengers were back aboard and the vessel was returning to Miami, about 130 miles west of this privately owned, beach lined island, said Bernard Chabot, president of Eastern Cruise Lines, which owns the ship.

The ship, with 395 crew members, was in the Berry Islands, about 50 miles north of Nassau, when the explosion occurred in an engineering locker on the sixth of nine decks, said Chabot. He said the nature of the explosion was unknown, and added that the company knew of no reason to suspect sabotage.

Seventeen passengers and two crew members required hospital treatment, said

Laura Bennett, a spokeswoman for Eastern Cruise Lines. She said one woman was reportedly in serious condition because smoke aggravated an asthma condition.

Explorer shows photos, videos of Titanic

WASHINGTON — If the stark undersea photos of the Titanic, striking as they are, don't look like people's visions of the great ship, the reasons are simple enough, the chief scientist on the Titanic expedition said Wednesday.

It's dark down there, 2½ miles below the surface, and the water's too murky to allow you to back up far enough to take a good overall shot — even if the ship were in one piece, which it isn't.

"It's like you're in a forest at night, standing up against a Sequoia with a flashlight, and you say, 'That's great bark,'" said Robert Ballard.

However, he said, enough photos were taken on the just-completed dives to make it possible to put together a mosaic-like photographic assemblage, a project set for the next month and a half.

Blue Jays bring out broom; sweep Royals for 3rd game

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Ernie Whitt and Jesse Barfield homered in a five-run fifth inning Wednesday night to help pitcher Joe Johnson to his first American League victory, and the Toronto Blue Jays completed a three-game sweep by beating the Kansas City Royals 7-2.

The Royals also committed two errors in the fifth as the defending World Series champions plunged to a season-low 10 games below .500 at 46-56. The Blue Jays had dropped three in a row and not scored in 30 consecutive innings entering the three-game series.

Johnson, obtained July 6 from Atlanta, scattered six hits through 63 innings. Dennis Leonard, winless since June 4, fell to 6-10. John Cerutti finished for his second Barfield led off the fifth with his 26th home run, then Willie Upshaw singled and Whitt followed with his 10th homer for a 3-1 Toronto lead. George Bell hit his 23rd homer, in the eighth, and Upshaw added an RBI triple.

Pinch-hitter Jim Sundberg hit his fifth homer, to account for the final Kansas City run in the ninth.

Chiefs' No. 1 pick ready to sit out

By The Associated Press

LIBERTY, Mo. - Offensive tackle Brian Jozwiak, the unsigned No. 1 draft choice of the Kansas City Chiefs, is prepared to consider other alternatives than pro football this season, his agent says.

The agent, Art Wilkinson, said from Philadelphia Wednesday that he is disappointed about his talks with the Chiefs, which he says have now broken off.

Jim Schaaf, the Chiefs general manager, said Wilkinson called him Wednesday but that there was no progress in efforts to get Jozwiak under contract and into training

"We just have to keep talking until sooner or later there will be progress hopefully," Schaaf said.

"I think I've thrown the white flag up in terms of trying to accomplish anything," said Wilkinson, who said he has made his last counter-offer.

Jozwiak, who was the seventh player taken in the draft, has been looked upon as a likely starter for the Chiefs. But Wilkinson said he'd rather see his client sit out the season than show up late and then be under pressure to try to catch up.

"He feels he can make a contribution, but he knows his value," Wilkinson said. "I think he's willing at this stage to ride the whole thing out." "There's probably a market out there for a 6-foot-6, 310-pound person," Wilkinson said of his client. 'He's done TV in Baltimore and West Virginia, and Hollywood. He's considering the wrestling alternative, and he's also considered working for me. If push comes to shove, I owe my allegiance to Brian.'

Jozwiak is among 17 top draft choices that have not come to terms with the teams that picked them, and Wilkinson said he wouldn't be surprised to see other players sitting out their rookie seasons.

The Chiefs hold NFL rights to Irv Eatman, an eighth-round choice in 1983 who played with the USFL's Baltimore Stars.

TOPEKA - Primary election contests in Kansas House districts are few and far between this year. but a handful of them have heated to near the boiling point heading into Tuesday's balloting.

Stakes are high in 10 districts, where the victors will be virtually assured a seat in the House next January because they are unopposed in the general election. In another seven districts, the primary will produce Democratic and Republican nominees to vie for seats left open by retiring lawmakers.

So far, the Democrats have been practically assured of retaining 21 of the 49 seats they held in 1985 and 1986, while the Republicans have a lock on 42 of the 76 seats they held for the last two years. Title to three of those Democratic seats will be decided Tuesday along with seven of the Republicans' seats.

However, the most hotly contested House race has not come in an "open seat" district or one in which the winner has no November opposition. It is for the downtown Topeka seat held by Democratic Rep. Bill Roy Jr., son of the former congressman.

Roy faces opposition from two Democratic challengers, including Margie Phelps, a member of a family of Topeka civil rights lawyers, and William E. "Bill" Richards Sr., a former official in the state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services. Three Republicans have lined up for the opportunity to cross swords with the Democratic nominee in November.

Phelps claims the large number of yard signs people have agreed to put up for her proves there is widespread discontent with Roy. But Roy, who has traded barbs with Phelps several times this summer in the Topeka news media, countered by launching a large-scale yard sign campaign of

Roy said the Phelps' signs 'create the perception of support when in reality it's very shallow." Phelps, who filed with petitions containing 1,870 signatures, denies her 700 yard signs have been placed deceptively and charges Roy, a freshman lawmaker, has voted to "preserve the status quo, or to enhance the position of the establishment."

Political observers say the race between Roy and Phelps is too close to call but the probable winner in the district's Republican primary is Mack McConnell, the only one of the three GOP contenders who has campaigned ac-

Housing hurt in Senate plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Pending tax overhaul legislation, while eliminating tax breaks for realestate investors, would also dry up money needed to build low-income housing, industry representatives

Many economists argue that current tax laws encourage construction of too many commercial buildings that have no economic value except to shelter the incomes of investors. These buildings help create a glut of office space in many large U.S. cities, economists say.

"You can get large negative tax rates" from investing in buildings that are "big vacancy money losers," said Henry Aaron, an economist with the Brookings Institution.

But by eliminating these tax shelters, housing industry officials warn, the tax law would also make it harder to attract investors to lowincome housing, and could drive rents up by as much as 30 percent.

"This bill will mean people won't construct any new low-income housing," said Linda Davenport, general counsel of the National Housing Partnership, a private company chartered by Congress to develop and manage privately owned lowincome housing.

"It will force us out of the development end" at a time when Congress and the Reagan administration have sharply curtailed federal expenditures to build new public housing units, she said.

Fewer new construction projects will mean higher rents for apartment dwellers, she said.

The tax bills, particularly the version passed last month by the Senate, have generated a great deal of uncertainty in the real estate industry, particularly among people who invest in rental property for tax

"We are finding there are fewer investors out there, we are acquiring fewer properties for syndication." said Jerry Reinsdorf, chairman of the Balcor Company, a Chicagobased commercial real estate firm that syndicates properties for taxsheltered investment. Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., a leading proponent of the Senate's tax bill, said shelters must be eliminated "to give the lowest rates to the greatest number of Americans.'

"People who have been avoiding paying taxes because of these provisions in the tax code will have to pay more taxes," Bradley said. And he said that eliminating the tax shelter will not drive up rents for low-income housing.

The Senate bill would eliminate or sharply reduce tax breaks costing the government $18 billion a year, according to industry estimates.

It would change depreciation rules, limit deductions for interest on debt and - most importantly severely limit the way investors could write off real estate investment losses against other income.

Under the current code, such losses can be written off against all types of income: salary, stock dividends and capital gains. But the Senate bill defines profits from rental housing and commercial buildings as passive income - that obtained from a limited partnership in which the investor does not take an active part in the business.

The Senate bill only allows writeoffs of losses from these investments against other passive income, such as a limited partnership in a movie production company. A major exemption from this rule is certain limited partnerships in oil and natural gas drilling ventures.

The House bill - unlike the Senate version - would enable real estate investors to write off their losses against other types of income. It would retain accelerated depreciation for low-income housing projects. The National Association of Home Builders predicts that if enacted into law, the Senate provisions would cause a 50 percent drop in the construction of apartment units. Bradley, arguing that the tax overhaul will not reduce the number of low rent units, cited a Department of Housing and Urban Development study showing that 80 percent of multi-housing projects were "family-type investments" that consisted of 20 units or less.

"Most of these don't even use depreciation," Bradley said. Larger scale projects which rely heavily on depreciation, he said, are "a very small sliver of the housing market.

Switch aids computer choice

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

A computer network is being created at K-State due to a recent acquisition at Cardwell Hall.

An Equinox Data PBX, also known as a data switch, was installed in Cardwell in June, said Mike Miller, associate director of University Computing Activities and manager of technical services.

The data switch itself is a computer. It doesn't do much more than be a traffic controller," Miller said. "The primary advantage of it is that it gives us a relatively inexpensive network facility. It gives the terminal users an inexpensive means of accessing multiple computers on campus.

A terminal is hooked directly to the data switch instead of being hardwired to a computer, he explained. When a person logs on at a terminal he can choose which computer he wants to use, Miller said.

Another advantage of the data switch is that it reduces the number of ports each computer requires, he said. Currently, terminals are connected to a computer port only when they are actively being used. When terminals aren't being used, they are connected only to the data switch port, he said.

There will be a much more efficient use of computer ports, he said. As a result, fewer computer ports will be required to support user de-

This actually makes the data switch system more cost-effective, because a data switch port is much cheaper than a computer port, he Currently, the academic computer in Cardwell is the only computer hooked to the data switch, Miller said. However, computers in the College of Engineering and in the departments of Computer Science and Statistics are planned to be added onto the system this fall, he said.

Plans have also been made to add terminals onto the system from those units as well as from the College of Education and the departments of economics, psychology, agricultural economics and electrical and computer engineering, Miller said.

"I estimate that we will be adding from 175 to 200 terminals (onto the system) within the next year," he

With the exception of Courier terminals, any computer terminal or microcomputer that was hooked up to the academic computer is now on the data switch, Miller said. Of the approximately 160 directly connected terminals on campus, almost all are located in private offices or are restricted to use by specific departments or colleges, he said.

There are 120 Courier terminals connected to the academic computer, but none of these go through the data switch, he said.

"A Courier uses a different communications protocol. It just physically can't be hooked up to the data switch," Miller said. The Courier terminals on campus now are "old technology" and are expensive to maintain, so they will gradually be replaced with inexpensive ASCII terminals or micros, he

Many departments on campus have computers, all of which are eligible to be hooked up to the data switch, Miller said. However, he noted the authority and security clearance needed to use a specific computer must still be approved by the department which has the com-

'The data switch just allows a user to get on the system and request a particular computer," he said.

The initial cost of the data switch system was $40,000, Miller said. The basic configuration of the system was designed to support the current number of terminals on the academic computer, plus allow for about 100 additional terminals, he said. However, as more requests are received to add terminals to the system, components can be added incrementally to support up to 1,350 ports, he said.

Study to locate book mutilators, find methods to prevent problem

By The Collegian Staff

Book mutilation is a problem most libraries face, but with the help of two librarians from Farrell Library, this problem may be prevented in the future.

Ann Birne, humanities reference librarian at Farrell and Sara Williams, head of the serials department, is undertaking a fiveyear reseach program to determine who mutilates books and why mutilations occur.

"It's depressing," Birne said. "Last year alone we spent $10,000 to replace just the journals. I think most people come here and say to themselves, 'Why not tear this page out?, the magazines aren't expensive to replace.'

Problems with material mutilation make it difficult for patrons of the library to find what they need, Birne said.

This project has never been done before, and they hope, with their help, other libraries will be able to prevent mulilation, she said.

"What we're trying to do is find the materials that have been mutilated and then link them with the individuals who we might think did this," Birne said. "For instance, if we find the education books have been damaged more than an engineering book, we assume the education people need more education on book mutilation than engineering students."

The library is also encouraging patron participation through wall posters notifying students of the existence of book mutilation.

"We are hoping the posters will encourage people to get even and not mad, and report the damage and not just toss the book aside," Birne said.

She noted that the most abused book or journal in the library is the swimsuit issue of Sports Il-

Anderson Hall loses power due to short in transformer

"There was a 100 KVA transformer that shorted out internally in the basement of Anderson," he said. He said not all of Anderson was without power because two other transformers supply power to the building.

Although he said he could only speculate, Slover said the heat may

Union offers students diverse services, food

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

The K-State Union, considered the hub of the campus, offers many services to students ranging from check cashing and school supplies to entertainment and recreation.

The Union, which is financed by a portion of the student enrollment fee, is designed to meet an array of student needs, said Walt Smith, director of the Union.

The Union provides a place where students can study, buy their books and school supplies, eat, watch a movie, go bowling or play pool, relax and watch television, or congregate with friends.

The Union Program Council, a student volunteer organization, is in charge of programming speakers, films, artists and events that take place or who appear in the Union. UPC does all of the advertising, public relations and promotion for the events offered. Some of these events include professional comedians, singers magicians, mimes and major touring artists

The Union's Forum Hall and Little Theatre have international and classic films, as well as current films and box office successes. In addition to the feature films offered on Friday and Saturday evenings, matinees, midnight shows and film festivals are offered, Smith said.

The recreation area, located in the basement of the Union, provides bowling, billiards, table tennis, video games, chess, checkers, backgammon, playing cards and Trivial Pursuit* . A big-screen television also is located in the recreation area.

The Union offers two dining areas and atering banquet facilities. The Stateroom features hot breakfast, lunch and dinner menus along with a salad bar, sandwiches, fruit, donuts, cookies and ice cream. The Bluemont Buffet is the second dining area. It is designed for persons wanting a quiet and relaxed atmosphere. The restaurant is open Monday through Friday and features a daily buffet including a salad bar, entrees, vegetables, hot bread, desserts and beverages

A two-level bookstore that carries school supplies, books and general merchandise is a main feature of the Union. The bookstore buys and sells books to students and provides a large selection of art and school supplies. Personal items, magazines and K-State paraphernalia also are part of the bookstore's inventory.

The Union is undergoing a number of changes during the summer including the remodeling of the Stateroom and the reorganization of the bookstore.

Students will be able to purchase textbooks in the upper level of the bookstore in the fall. The lower level will contain general merchandise, magazines and books

The Union is also in the middle of a facelift to incorporate the school colors and to update the original decor of the Union.

The Copy Center is located on the third floor and offers many services. Xerox copies on a large selection of bond paper, enlargement and reduction, spiral binding, lamination, binding books, blueprinting and transparencies are some of the services available. Free use of typewriters also is of-

With a valid student ID, students can write checks for cash at the windows provided on the second floor. Two-party checks can also be cashed if less than 10 days old. Automatic tellers from three local banks are located in the Union Courtyard and provide students with various banking services, Smith said.

Also located in the courtyard is a selfservice postal center. The center provides stamp machines, envelopes and post cards. There is a phone with a direct line to the post office if any additional information is needed. A scale is available for weighing

Meeting rooms may be reserved by phone or at the reservations office on the second floor. Most of the rooms can be reserved at no charge, and equipment such as microphones, projectors, blackboards, video equipment, and overhead projectors are also

Wefald offers welcome

Welcome to K-State. I am very excited about the start of this academic year. K-State is an excellent university and I am very proud to have been chosen as its 12th president. You, too, should be very proud of this University.

We have an excellent faculty - many of whom have national reputations in their fields. They are dedicated to giving you the very best instruction possible. They are supported by advisers and student service personnel - in the Department of Housing, the Counseling Center, Anderson Hall and in every college - who are committed to helping you be successful at the University.

The truth is, the K-State campus is one of the most beautiful campuses in the country. I am really impressed with the architecture of the buildings and the careful maintenance of the grounds.

K-State is a well-kept secret.

The people of Kansas may not know about all of the excellent programs we have at K-State. This University provides the possibility of an exceptional liberal arts education - and I think every student should have a broad, liberal education - as well as possibilities to study business, engineering, agriculture, architecture, and many other professional disciplines.

And the Students! K-State provides an excellent avenue for students to achieve in many avenues of interest. We have students who excel in every field. The University also has an incredible record of K-State students winning national recognition and fellowships, such as Rhodes, Truman and Fulbright.

I hope you will join me in getting the story out: K-State is an outstanding University. I know you will have an intellectually stimulating and enjoyable year. I look forward to the opportunity of meeting each of

Vice President George Bush delivers the 70th Landon Lecture on Public Issues, Sept. 10, 1985, in Ahearn Field House. Bush is one of the many dignitaries who have visited K-State for a Landon Lecture, considered one of the most prestigious lecture series in the nation.

Eminent leaders highlight lecture series

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

For 20 years, K-State has maintained one of the most prestigious lecture series in the nation.

The Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues has brought presidents, foreign leaders, congressmen and other dignitaries to the campus to speak before students, faculty and Landon Lecture Dignitaries such as President Ronald Reagan, Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz, House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, Senator Bob Dole, and President Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador have spoken to capacity crowds on an array of issues both conservative and controversial.

When Bush delivered his Landon Lecture Sept. 9, 1985, he said the series is "clearly America's most distinguished

"No other university has one like this series," said Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chairman of the lecture

The series was established in 1966 to honor former state Gov. Alfred Landon, as well as to fill a need for a lecture series at Landon was sworn in as governor of Kansas on Jan. 9, 1933, and was the Republican Party nominee for president of the United States in 1936. Landon delivered the first lecture in the series, "New Challenges in International Relations,"

Much of the credit for beginning the lecture series is given to former University President James A. McCain and William Boyer, then head of the political science department and first coordinator of the series To help celebrate Landon's 99th birthday, Sept. 9, William Bennett, U.S. secretary of education, will be featured as the 73rd Landon lecturer Franco Modiglaiani, Nobel Memorial

Prize-winner in Economic Science, will be a lecturer in April. Lecturers invited to be part of the series are usually people "who are in the news," Reagan said.

The series is financed by Landon Lecture patrons

"There are about 450 people (patrons) and they pay $100 per year per each member," Reagan said. Patrons are a "cross-section of Manhattan and area residents," he said. "What they get is seating in the patrons' area, which is four or five front rows," Reagan said. Patrons are invited to a luncheon with the lecturer following the lecture. A coffee before the lecture and a

Kickoff '86 to break the ice, increase spirit

By AMY TAYLOR Collegian Reporter

With the change in the drinking age, more and more K-State students will be affected than ever before, said Bill Arck, director of the K-State Alcohol and Drug Center and chairman of the Kickoff '86 committee.

"With approximately 90 percent of this year's freshmen class affected by the change, the University is offering an alternative activity to welcome students back to school," Arck said.

The activity is Kickoff '86, from 7 until 11 p.m. Aug. 23 at the KSU Football Stadium. The event is being sponsored by several University organizations.

"Kickoff '86 is a combination of many things. We plan to have appearances by the K-State football team and cheerleaders, Willie the Wildcat, and the K-State marching band," Arck said, "In addition, we will also be sponsoring a dance with the 'Best Sounds Around' providing the music."

But Kickoff '86 is more than a rally to increase school spirit, it also includes

Playfair, a series of get-acquainted activities designed to help put students at ease and allow them to make new friends, he said. "Playfair is a fun way for students to meet other students through small group games, which act as ice-breakers, and let them feel more at ease in their new surroundings," Arck said. Kickoff '86, open to all K-State students, is designed to give them a chance to meet new people in a new and different way, Arck

"Last year at the first Kickoff, there were approximately 3,000 students in attendance, and there was a cross section of students present. In fact, the largest group of students there were juniors," Arck said.

The fun part of Kickoff '86 is getting to know other students by participating in Playfair, a copyright activity based out of

New York "In Playfair, there is a person who acts as a group leader and leads the group in various games and activities like a group cheering contest or a role playing game.

K-State started using Playfair three years ago with the residence halls to help the new residents become acquainted, and last year it was suggested to use it with the welcome back activity," he said.

"Kickoff '86 is just a different way for students to know each other and to help them feel more at ease in their new college surroundings," Arck said.

University President Jon Wefald and Stan Parrish, new head football coach, are both scheduled to attend the event, he said.

Collegian Reporter

The average college student's day is spent in classes, watching television and studying, according to Ron Smith, counselor at the K-State Counseling Center. For an increasing number of University students, their day also includes a part-time

Instead of going home after class and relaxing, they must get ready to face another five to eight hours of time that cannot be used for studying or socializing.

Being a working student can create some stressful situations, such as having a deadline at work and also having an important test or paper due. To help alleviate this problem, students must learn to manage their time, Smith said.

"I usually have 15 to 16 hours of class a week. Plus, I have two jobs and work about 20 hours a week. This gives me little time for anything but school and work," said Denise Urbanek, senior in journalism and mass communications and political science, student writer at University Relations, and receptionist at Goodnow Hall.

"Sometimes the pressure can really get to me, so I've learned it's really important to not put things off. I have to do them right away or it won't get done," she said.

Realizing the amount of responsibility students take on when they decide to work, students should develop a "plan of action," and stick to it, Smith said.

"Discipline is important; the student has to realize there must be a balance between work and school. Some students can get that balance, while others overload themselves by taking too many classes and having too big of a work schedule," Smith

"I have found out that it depends on how many hours you are taking, plus how many hours you are working. I usually try to gear my work schedule to how many difficult or time consuming courses I have," said Darryl Kuhlman, senior in biology and employee at the K-State Beef Research Unit.

"When I first started working, I wasn't used to organizing my time, so I had a few problems at first, but after I realized what I had to do, things have been working out just fine," Kuhlman said.

Along with the pressures and stress of working while in school there are some beneficial outcomes too, Smith said.

Besides the many personal rewards such as the feeling of success and accomplishment, the working student gets important work experience and the opportunity to learn how to get along with people - skills which are needed for any type of job," he said.

"Working at the beef unit has given me an opportunity to learn things I would not have been able to if I wasn't working," Kuhlman said.

"For instance, all the cattle at the beef unit are on various types of weight gain or drug tests. The workers at the unit are in charge of determining rations, measuring and distributing the feed. We have to be accurate, and give them the precise amount of feed, or it may ruin the test," he said. "Knowing that, I have learned how very important it is to follow directions and get along with my co-workers."

The contacts and friends working students make now can prove to be beneficial in the future, providing information about employment prospects and opportunities, Smith said.

"Before I started working on campus, I was not as familiar with it and didn't know so many people. Now that I have worked here (at University Relations and at Goodnow and West halls), I feel much more secure as a worker and as a student," Urbanek said.

According to Smith, most students are working to pay their way through school; however, there are some students who are working for other reasons too.

"I'm working because I enjoy having something to do in my spare time, and being able to meet a lot of new people," said Mark Besinger. senior in marketing and student supervisor in the dishroom at Kramer Food Center. "I also work for the experience of dealing with people and being in a management situation.

"Working gives me a chance to get away from the pressures of classes. At Kramer, I can concentrate on other things, and worry about my classes later," Besinger said.

But education is still the most important component of working students' lives. They have learned that the emphasis should be on school, and not so much on work, Smith said.

"Since I've been working and going to class, I've learned to put priorities on things that are most important to my education, and letting the other things wait until I can get to them. I also feel I've gained a tremendous amount of experience," Urbanek said.

Holdings total more than $60 million

Foundation serves as fund-raising arm

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

The KSU Foundation is a major organization operating for the benefit of K-State, said Art Loub, the Foundation's executive vice presi-

"The Foundation is the official fund-raising arm of the University," Loub said. This fund has more than doubled in the past four years, with current holdings totaling over $60 million, according to Ways and Means, an official publication of the Foundation.

It is a popular misconception that the Foundation has total control over how and to whom the funds are dispersed. Loub said. He said the donors themselves have the final say on how 88 percent of the funds are distributed.

Donors make their wishes known through "Memos of Understanding," which describe in detail how the donation is to be used. Through these memos, donors can designate such things as eligibility requirements for recipients, who is to maintain custody of funds, and the time of choice and manner of distribution of the funds. The board of trustees and staff are responsible for insuring that the donors' wishes are carried out, Loub

The Executive Committee has control of the remaining 12 percent of the foundation's holdings. According to Ways and Means, this 12 percent is used for funding the operations of the Foundation, scholarships, and shortterm, interest-free loans to University personnel. These include 30-day travel loans, and payroll advances.

Assets of the Foundation include common and preferred stock, corporate bonds, certificates of deposit, U.S. treasury or agency obligations, urban and rural real estate, student loans and mortgages.

The income from these investments is expended either as designated by the donor or at the direction of the Executive Committee of the Foundation's board of directors, Loub said.

The original funds are secured by the Foundation through various Planned gifts are part of the Foundation's endowment. Included in planned gifts are wills, trusts, life estate contracts and life income agreements. Only the interest earned by investments is used for University programs, Loub said.

Agricultural land holdings include more than 11,000 acres in four states. often used as endowments for funding of loan and scholarship ac-

Foundations and corporations also hold an important position in the support of K-State. According to Ways and Means, these organizations often provide the University with machinery and equipment.

Telefunds, mail solicitations and all-University campaigns conducted by Foundation-sponsored organizations also raise funds for the University, Loub said.

Telenet offers many courses

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

Imagine receiving class credits through K-State without ever setting foot on the campus - or listening to an instructor lecture and interact with members of the class without ever seeing the instructor.

It may sound impersonal, but it's the ideal situation for a person wanting to pick up more classes but does not live close enough to the University to commute. The program that makes it possible is called TELENET.

"It is known as an audio-network," said Jan Kruh, director of TELENET. Darome conveners and push-to-talk microphones are located at each of 37 TELENET sites, allowing communication between the instructor and class.

"The purpose of TELENET is to take University courses to the people in the state who are doing their professional updating," Kruh said. The largest population served by TELENET is teachers who use the system to earn credit toward recertification.

"Most of our students are graduate students...about 70 percent," she through the Department of Continuing Education. Kruh said networks work well in sparsely populated states, like Kan-"This is a service to the state,"

Kruh said. "We try to deal with what the needs of the state are." More than 15,000 people were served by the system last year, she said.

'A lot of classes are offered through the College of Education. (And) we have at least one out of agriculture and one out of Human own readings for the class which can Ecology," Kruh said. Kruh said most every class offered by K-State through TELENET is for

"It would be possible to get a master's degree by TELENET, but it would take a long time. Most students take six to eight classes through TELENET and the rest is done at the University," she said.

"(TELENET) began in three locations and rapidly grew," Kruh said. "In 1972, all six state universities became part of it. All six programmed on it until 1984 and then went to the three who utilized it most.'

The system is now used by K-State, Emporia State University and Fort Hays State University.

Most of the daytime use of the network offers classes to high school students, with about eight to 20 high schools participating in TELENET,

"Alaska joined us last year and 50 students from 10 different Alaskan schools communicated with us. It was really a neat program. They won't be doing it this year because of decreased oil prices, which has affected their economy," Kruh said.

In the fall, the evening use of TELENET will offer classes to adults from 4 to 10 p.m. Monday The network is coordinated through Thursday and Saturday mornings.

Area residents near TELENET locations are informed about classes by news releases and brochures sent out by the Division of Continuing Education. Students can enroll and pay fees at the first class. Fees are $42 per undergraduate credit hour and $60 per graduate credit hour. A materials fee is usually charged because of the extensive materials use for a class.

"Most instructors develop their be 40 to 50 (pages) to 500 pages," Kruh said.

This year, TELENET will not charge the $5 per credit hour fee customarily charged for the use of TELENET, due to a budget supplement from the Legislature of $63,000.

A relatively new program that can be an integral part of TELENET, or used completely separate, is TELEbridge, which began in 1984.

TELEbridge links people together at up to 24 locations from anywhere in Kansas or the world for meetings or programs.

'Ours (TELEbridge) is so convenient and cheap," Kruh said. "That's what should sell people on it."

But the TELEbridge system isn't being utilized as much as Kruh would

"It's used quite a bit, but we still have lots of available time on it. Staff is one of our limitations, but we will hire more if the need is there," she Kruh pointed out the special low price offered to the six state universities and savings in travel expenses by having meetings on the TELEbridge system.

"People using TELEbridge the most are cooperative extension. Several national organizations use it a lot," she said. "The United Together handicapped organization has meetings once a month and uses our bridge. They've been using it for two years.

The TELEbridge allows four conferences to be held at the same time. It also allows a large conference to be subdivided into small groups.

The TELENET system and TELEbridge may be joined together for more extensive conferencing, Kruh said, noting that the use of both systems together gives access to a total of 59 locations

Center deals with women's issues

By The Collegian Staff

K-State offers a variety of services to supplement the classroom, one of which is the Women's Resource Center in Holton Hall.

The resource center provides students, staff, faculty and other members of the community with information regarding subjects that affect or concern women.

Throughout the course of the school year, the center provides a series of noon meetings on selected Fridays, called "The Friday Series," featuring different speakers for each meeting in the Union.

'This fall we will provide a wide variety of topics ranging from joint custody to women writers in East Germany and speakers including Mrs. (Ruth Ann) Wefald," said Caroline Peine, director of the Women's Resource Center. Ruth Ann Wefald is the wife of new K-State President Jon Wefald.

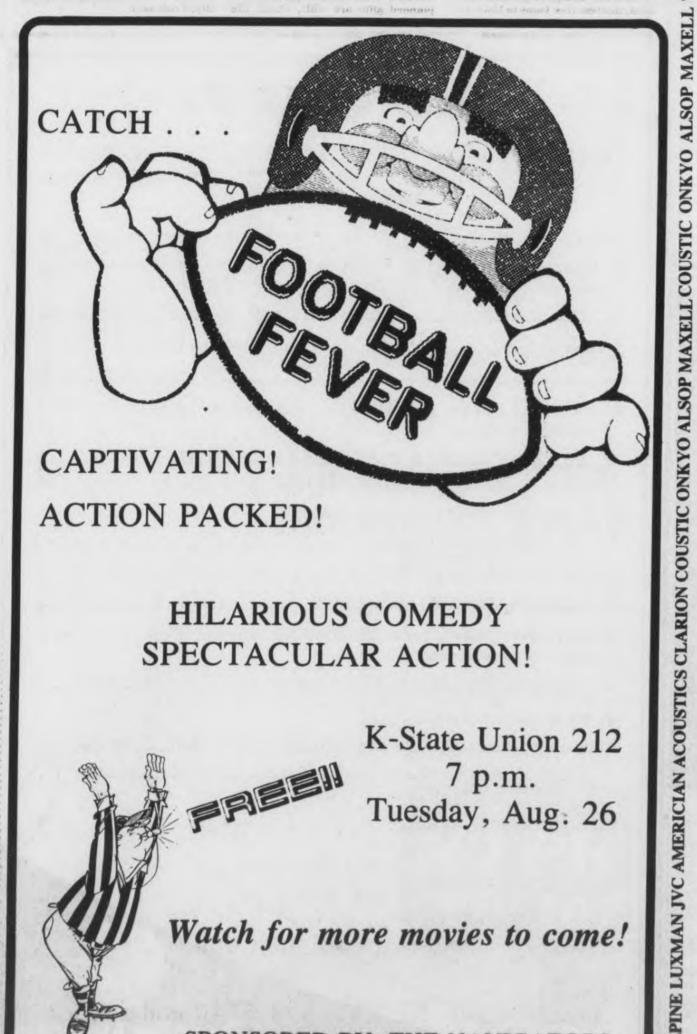

"The Resource Center also provides programming for living groups and other organizations upon request," Peine said. "If we do not feel qualified to speak on a subject, we find a speaker who is.'

Peine said programs will be available on subjects concerning date rape, assertiveness and sexual harrassment.

"We provide subjects that the students are more aware of and what they want to know about," she said.

The resource center has a complete library and set of files that cover a variety of women's issues. This information is available for anyone's use, she said.

Informal counseling is available for those who have a specific need or just need an understanding person to talk to. If a referral to a professional counselor is necessary, the center can provide that also, Peine said.

Easing stress goal of counseling center

By SHEILA HUTINETT Collegian Reporter

For some K-State students, college is not as simple as classes, tests and a social life.

Many students end up with more than they bargained for in college with either a drunk-driving charge or an unwanted pregnancy.

During the 1985-86 school year, 90 K-State students were arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol. In the fall, the grade-point average of students with DUIs was below 2.0 on a 4.0 scale, the Counseling Center reported.

More than 400 pregnancy tests were performed on campus alone last year, with nearly one-third of them testing positive.

In addition, K-State students declared an average of three changes of major during their college career, resulting in only one student out of four graduating with his or her original major, the center

These are a few of the many critical points for decision and adaptation K-State students encounter during their college careers. According to information supplied by the center, responses to these events will have effects on social, academic and career success

Fred Newton, director of the center, said it's a place where people can step out of their everyday situations and get an overview. This allows people to find options and make decisions in an objective and confidential manner, he said.

"Every student is going to be affected by something, even if it's just changing majors," Newton said. "I get to see these things close up, and there are a lot of traumatic things students have to deal with."

Most of these things could be helped if students would take advantage of the resources available, he offers counseling, workshops, special programs, credit classes, and a biofeedback laboratory.

The center, located in Holton Hall,

The lab has monitors that measure a person's biological functions such as skin temperature, muscle tension, brain waves and heart rate. This is useful to people who want to reduce stress and increase performance by self-regulation.

The center also serves as a liaison between students and academic departments, Newton said. Information is offered in many areas of interest: careers, time management, study skills and stress management.

One-third of the center's time is devoted to individual appointments. he said. This equals about 100 students per week during the fall and spring semesters.

Of all of the direct service requests, 45 percent are for career and academic reasons, with the remaining 55 percent of the requests for personal and relationship reasons.

In addition to individual counseling, the center offers a variety of group programs. Some of the group programs scheduled for the 1986-87 school year include "Women in Transition," "Children of Alcoholic Parents," "Assertiveness Training," "Career Life Planning" and "Social Skills Development."

Students to 'rush' into life as greek

By The Collegian Staff

For students who missed the sorority and fraternity rush deadline for fall semester, there are still opportunities to become involved in Greek life through one of the 12 sororities or 25 fraternities at K-State.

Women interested in joining a sorority have two different options to choose from. The first is to go through spring rush shortly after the start of the spring semester. This type of rush is not as structured as formal rush, and not all the chapters on campus participate, said Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs.

There have been anywhere from four to six chapters participating for the past several years, she said.

Spring rush consists of informal functions taking place at the various chapter houses over a two-week period, usually beginning sometime in February, Robel said. Interested students may register for spring rush in the Greek Affairs office located in Holton Hall.

The rushing procedure lasts throughout the school year and summer. Men interested in joining a fraternity need to fill out a biographical data card to go in the "Rush book," located in the Greek Affairs office. This information will be released to the various fraternities, which then make individual contacts, Robel

There will also be a fraternity mini-rush during the week of Aug. 20-24, Robel said. The mini-rush is designed primarily for men who live out of state or who were recently admitted to K-State.

During the week, prospective rushees stay in an assigned fraternity house while they are looking at the other houses.

Campus stations offer alternatives

By TRACY MAYHEW Collegian Reporter

If you like listening to a wide variety of music or a great news program, there are two radio stations located on campus that offer just about everything. KKSU-AM and KSDB-FM are both located in McCain Auditorium. Because they are non-commercial, both stations' formats are different from commercial stations.

KKSU is basically a news and information station, operating on a time-sharing agreement with WIBW-AM in Topeka. KKSU operates at 580 AM Monday through Friday from 12:30 to 5:30 p.m. When KKSU signs off, WIBW resumes broadcasting.

Ralph Titus, assistant manager of KKSU and professor in cooperative extension, said he believes the station's programming is interesting. noting the station receives letters of appreciation from fans living throughout the state.

"We are a very collective station," Titus said. "You can find out so much information throughout the KKSU has a 30-minute agricultural report which has been aired since 1924, when the station began operating. This particular program is funded by the federal extension service KKSU offers listeners an hour of local news each day as well as features and classical music.

"I'm not going to be modest," Titus said. "I think this is the best radio-news program on the air. Our listeners come away being very informed.

Kansas Business News Magazine ranked KKSU the second best radio station in the state for news informa-

On the FM side of the radio dial, KSDB-FM plays a variety of music, ranging from jazz to heavy metal. Most of the station's listeners tune in from noon to 1 a.m. to hear "New Album Rock," a program featuring groups such as REM, Tears for Fears, and INXS Michael Leland, operations manager for KSDB and graduate in journalism and mass communications, said the music department helps the station decide what should be played. The station also follows the College Music Journal for guidance through listings of upcoming new music.

On weekends, KSDB features specialty shows. "Jam the Box" airs urban contemporary music, basically dance-oriented. "Dr. Demento" is another specialty show that plays classic novelty recordings, while "The Tour" takes a look at music such as new wave and punk, Leland KSDB is usually six months to a year ahead of new songs coming out on the top 40, he said. The station has more than 6,000 albums from which it selects its music.

"Our philosophy is one in which we take an album, play a cut, then we stop playing that song once the top 40 picks it up. We play the music first when it's not so popular," he said.

Because it is non-commercial, KSDB receives most of its funds from the Student Governing Association. It also raises money through sponsors who underwrite programs.

This year KSDB will be celebrating its 36th anniversary. This fall the station is scheduled to change its frequency from 88.1 MHz to 91.9 MHz, Leland said.

Registration greets students

By The Collegian Staff

The end of August will mark the return of thousands of students from all over the country for the start of the 1986-87 school year.

Enrollment takes place Aug. 20-22 for new students who didn't pre-enroll, said Registrar Don Foster.

"Advisers will be present at enrollment," Foster said. "This will be very helpful for the student. About the only problem is students having trouble with closed classes.

All students who have enrolled can pay fees in Ahearn Field House Aug. 21 or Aug. 22, depending on their designated time in the line schedule. The enrollment time is determined by the student's last

Foster said tuition and fees have been raised from $625.50 to $651.21 for students paying in-state fees.

"Students who cannot be present at this time need to either get someone to enroll for them or get in touch with the registrar's office," Foster said. "If this isn't done, their class schedule will be drop-

Students will have other choices to make during registration. In addition to paying fees, students will have a chance to purchase a yearbook, athletic tickets and join numerous clubs. The Department of Financial Aid will also be at registration for distribution of financial aid checks, Foster said.

"It would be wise to bring more than one check to registration," Foster said.

To keep registration running smoothly, Foster said students should be certain to do two things.

"Students should be sure and come to Ahearn when they're suppose to, and they need to bring all the material needed such as their student ID, checkbook, etc.," he

Foster said even though enrollment at Ahearn may look disorganized, students should be fine if they get in the right lines.

Students wanting to drop or add a class need to obtain an appointment slip in the lobby of Farrell Library beginning at 8 a.m. Aug. 22. At the scheduled time, the student should bring a completed drop-add form and their student ID to the basement of Farrell Library, Foster said.

Amendments to constitution fill November election ballot

By KEVIN CHESTNUT Collegian Reporter

The general election on Nov. 4 could bring many changes to the state's political landscape. In addition to the election of new public officials, voters will have a chance to express their opinions on several "moral issues."

The issues to be decided include liquor-by-the-drink, pari-mutuel wagering, a state-run lottery, property classification and the future of the state Board of Education.

The controversial issues of liquorby-the-drink, pari-mutuel wagering and a state-run lottery have been hotly debated for many years, from the floor of the Legislature to the floors of some churches

Several previous attempts to pass an amendment allowing counties to decide locally on the sale of liquorby-the-drink have been defeated.

If the liquor-by-the-drink resolution is approved, individual counties would vote on whether or not liquorby-the-drink would be allowed in that

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, voicing support for the amendment, said the state should remove "arreasonable liquor controls."

"Buying membership cards is an unnecessary expense that we should end," Knopp said.

Kansans will also be deciding if counties will have an option on the allowance of pari-mutuel wagering this November.

If approved, Kansans would be able to wager on horse and dog races, although off-track betting would be prohibited.

The state lottery is another question that will be on the ballot. According to S.C.R. 1609, "This proposed amendment in the constitution would authorize the Legislature to provide for a state-owned and operated lot-

The lottery question is also one that Knopp personally opposes.

"The economists forecast that it would bring $100 million into the state's economy. That translates to $50 for every man, woman and child in the state," he said. "With the multiplier effect, that means that $10 to $15 million would be pulled out of the economy of Riley County."

Kansas voters will also be asked to decide on property classification.

tificial impediments and have ment would establish separate classes for residential, commercial and agricultural property, with each classification to be assessed at different rates for tax purposes.

The final issue on the ballot is concerned with the future of the state Board of Education.

The Kansas Board of Education, which is separate from the Board of Regents, supervises public schools, educational institutions and other educational interests of the state except those legally delegated to the

If approved, the proposal would terminate the constitutional powers and duties of the Board of Education.

Players plan Nichols, McCain shows

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

A woman plans suicide, people watch a war out of their windows and a wife deals with her husband's

These are some of the situations to be presented by the K-State Players this year in Nichols Theatre. In all, six productions by the K-State Players are scheduled at Nichols Hall and McCain Auditorium.

The K-State Players is the producing wing of the speech department specifically put together to produce theater, said Rhonda Miracle, promotion and box office director of the group and instructor of speech.

K-State Players productions generally are directed by faculty members in the speech department, Miracle said. The group is funded through the Department of Speech, Student Governing Association and by ticket sales.

"Any K-State student is welcome to audition for any K-State Player shows and/or to work backstage," Miracle said. "In each show, there's always someone new." .

Miracle said the only requirement is that a student must be enrolled at the University for a minimum of three credit hours.

Four of the six productions are scheduled for Nichols Theatre: "'night, Mother" by Marsha Norman, "The Constant Wife" by William Somerset Maugham, "Tomorrow, From Any Window" by Jean-Claude Grumberg and "She Stoops to Conquer" by Oliver

Goldsmith. The two musical productions scheduled for McCain Auditorium are "Oklahoma," the American musical classic by Rogers and Hammerstein, and Nicolai and Von Mosenthal's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," a German opera based on a Shakespeare comedy.

"The series as a whole is extremely varied," Miracle said. "It's a chance to see all types of theater. People who attend will be exposed to the many varied shapes and sizes that theater comes in to-

The season starts out in September with "night, Mother," a Pulitzer Prize-winning drama about the quality of life.

It's the story of a woman in her 30s who has decided to commit suicide because her life hasn't turned out as she wanted and it isn't getting any better. The play focuses on the conversation between the woman and her 60-year-old mother, who is fighting to hold on to life and doesn't understand her daughter's attitude, Miracle said.

"The Constant Wife" is a comedy written in the 1920s that explores how a wife becomes economically and emotionally independent because of her husband's infidelity, she said.

"Tomorrow, From Any Window" is an anti-war satire set in the dim future that tells about the power of the media. In the "theatre of the absurd" style, it portrays people who watch a war out of their windows and are eventually forced to become involved in the war. It draws a parallel between Americans who sit and watch the war on their televisions, which are giant windows, Miracle said.

"She Stoops to Conquer" is a delightful, classical 18th-century comedy in the style of "The Three Musketeers," she said.

A student season ticket for $17 is available for all six K-State Players productions, Miracle said. This is a savings of $5 over purchasing tickets individually.

Students who volunteer to usher for the performances can see them free of charge, Miracle said. Students interested in ushering can

Choosing a major can be one of the toughest choices a student has to make, said Susan Angle, director of the career life planning program at the K-State Counseling

"The Counseling Center offers a variety of services to help students figure out who they are and what they want to do with their lives," Angle said. "By seeing them one-to-one, we can listen to their views and give support in helping them make a decision."

In addition to one-to-one counseling, the career life planning program offers two courses to aid students in their decisions about major and career choices, Angle said.

'The first course we offer," she said, "is a two-hour career life planning class that helps students examine their values, interests and goals as a class, and then identifies what careers are available to them."

Included in this class is information about preparing a resume and job search techniques, Angle said. A second course is a onehour class that emphasizes independent study and is an abbreviated version of the first dent will be able to utilize career and interest testing methods to help identify the best option available to them, she said.

On a one-to-one basis, the stu- Angle said.

Many new students who come to the Counseling Center without a degree choice receive reassuring words from Angle.

"The first thing I tell a student is not to worry about not finding a major," she said. "I have found that the more time a student spends in planning a major choice, the more likely that major will 'fit' the student better."

At the career life planning program, students are allowed to make their own decisions about their careers and their lives.

"A good number of students come in here thinking we will be like their high school guidance counselor, and tell them exactly what to do. But we don't," Angle said. "We are here to provide a support system. We do not tell them what to do. We feel it should be the student's own decision.

"The best suggestion I could give to a new student about making a major choice is to consider all options, with one of them being the career life planning class. And another, becoming familiar with personal values and goals. By knowing interests and values, a student can be able to translate them into a major or a career,"

Insurance premiums cheaper

Health center offers new student plan

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

Many students find they have to supply their own health insurance while in college.

A new supplemental health insurance plan offered by Lafene Stu-dent Health Center will be available to University students this fall.

The new group insurance policy by Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Kansas takes effect on Aug. 22. It has a different deductible structure and is also available to international students, said David McKee, district representative for Blue Cross & Blue

The new policy replaces Keystone Life Insurance's policy and international student insurance programs. The annual premium for a single student under the current Keystone policy is $390, according to a brochure offered by Lafene. The same student would pay $339.12 for coverage under the Blue Cross & Blue Shield plan.

The cost for a student and spouse was $923 under the Keystone plan. The new plan will cost $794.52. Reductions also apply to students with dependents.

Any K-State student who pays the $60 student health fee each fall and spring semester and is registered at the time of enrollment is eligible for the new health plan.

Undergraduate students must be enrolled in at least seven credit hours each semester and graduate students must be enrolled in three or more credit hours. Doctoral degree candidates have no minimum credit hour requirement, McKee said.

If a student is treated at Lafene, the new policy will pay 100 percent of all costs. The current Keystone policy pays 100 percent up to a maximum of $200 for each accident or illness, according to the brochure.

Both policies have a deductible for treatment received anywhere other

"The new policy has a shared pay program," McKee said. "This means a single student will share 50 percent of the cost of services until he or she has paid $250. After that, 100 percent of covered services are paid by Blue Cross, up to $1 million."

The maximum amount of shared pay in a contract year for married students, single parents and families is $500, McKee said. Blue Cross pays 100 percent after $500.

The deductible applies only to services not received at Lafene and is not a "per accident or illness deductible," McKee said. The $250 or $500 is for the term of the contract. Coverage terminates Aug. 27, 1987.

The policies differ on their treatment of pre-existing conditions. Keystone's policy limits coverage to sickness or disease which is first diagnosed after the insurance policy is in effect, and bodily injury which is directly caused by a specific accident during the insured person's period of coverage.

McKee said Blue Cross treats a pre-existing condition as treatment of, or medication taken for, an accident or illness within 90 days of the effective date of the policy. After eight months of continuous coverage, pre-existing sicknesses and accidents will be covered as any other sickness or accident, he said.

For example, if a student is injured Aug. 1 and enrolls in the Blue Cross plan Aug. 22, the injury is considered a pre-existing condition. Treatment for that injury somewhere other than Lafene would not be covered by insurance until April 22, 1987 - after the student has eight months of continuous student health insurance coverage.

If the same student was enrolled in Keystone's plan and enrolls in the Blue Cross plan on Aug. 22, there will be no lapse in coverage between the two student health insurance plans. Treatment outside Lafene would be covered.

"As long as there is no lapse in coverage during the summer, the eight-month waiting period will be waived," McKee said. "This applies to the Keystone and the foreign student insurance programs."

Students carried on their parents Blue Cross insurance, enrolled in a non-group Blue Cross plan or directly enrolled in Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Kansas will receive credit toward the eight-month waiting period for pre-existing conditions, McKee said.

Ninety percent of the doctors and all of the hospitals in Kansas are received at Lafene.

Competitive Allowance Program providers, McKee said. CAP providers cannot charge students insured by the new policy more than Blue Cross will pay. Outside of Kansas, the new student health insurance policy will pay the maximum amount allowed by that state's Blue Cross & Blue Shield. McKee said new brochures and application forms were to be mailed to all enrolled students during July. Brochures and applications should also be available in the Student Governing Association office in the Union and in the International Student Center.

During fall enrollment, seven Blue Cross representatives will be in Ahearn Field House so students may enroll in the student health insurance plan, McKee said. The last day to sign up for the plan in the fall semester will be Sept. 12. Monthly, quarterly and semi-annual payment plans are available.

The Blue Cross plan will not pay for any out-patient prescription drugs or psychiatric care. Dental treatment is limited to surgical procedures and treatment of injuries to natural teeth caused directly by an accident. Fillings, cleaning and straightening of teeth are not covered.

Inpatient care for the diagnosis or treatment of nervous or mental conditions will be covered for a total of 120 days for each contract year. The limitations do not apply to care

Horse treadmill aids research

By MORGAN CHILSON Collegian Reporter

Sports medicine has become a popular field of study, but at K-State, the interest developed an unusual twist. The subjects are horses, not

Evaluating a performing horse is normally a difficult task, said veterinarian Howard Erickson. Erickson heads the basic science area of the research and teaches anatomy and physiology in Veterinary Medicine. While some study is done as the horses workout on the track, K-State has acquired a horse treadmill to facilitate the research.

The researchers are studying the basic physiology of the athletic horse and evaluating the performing horse to assess if the animal is overexerting or if there is some disease process present.

The treadmill is one of three in the United States. The other two are located at Washington State University in Pullman and Tufts University in Medford, Mass.

The cost of the treadmill is between $25,000 and $36,000. The price and the relative newness of equine sports medicine accounts for the small number of treadmills in the United States, Erickson said.

The treadmill works much as a human treadmill works. The main difference is the size, which is accommodated to a horse. There is also a safety harness which straps around the horse in case it should stumble or fall while galloping. The researchers can control the elevation of the treadmill to simulate an incline, Erickson

The treadmill measures the heartrate of the horse as he increases

'The heartrate is a good indication of the excitatory state of the animal," said Kipp Erickson, graduate student working on his doctorate in exercise physiology. The horse's resting heartrate is 30 beats per minute, but can increase to as much as 250 beats per minute.

The horse starts on the treadmill at a walk, and gradually increases speed to a full gallop. The researchers try to re-create the effect of an actual horse race to aid their studies. Kipp Erickson said. Though it is difficult to start the horse off as quickly as it would at a race, the horse will run at speeds of 20 to 30 mph.

After running the horse on the treadmill, the horse's lungs are checked to see if there is any

"Exercise-induced pulmonary hemorrhage is evident in 70 percent of thoroughbreds after racing, so we are interested in pinpointing the cause of the bleeding," Howard Erickson said.

"We think it may be caused by high pressure in the pulmonary artery," said Kipp Erickson.

Another phenomenon associated with horse racing is sudden death, Howard Erickson said. Sudden death is just that. Highly trained horses die from no apparent reason. This does not happen as often as the exercise-induced bleeding, but it occurs often enough to be a cause for concern. Researchers are attempting to discover the reason for the sudden collapses.

"We use the same sort of techniques as a human athlete. The racing industry is a big one," Howard Erickson said. "We want to prevent injury and improve performance."

The training methods used in horse racing have not changed much over the years. There has been little progress in speed records. Humans, for instance, have increased their times in the mile run over the years. With the research being conducted at K-State, horse racing may now become a more progressive in-

The program was developed three years ago under the direction of Howard Erickson. Jerry Gillespie, professor of surgery and medicine in Veterinary Science, works with the clinical area of the research.

"It's a team effort, though. We all work together," Howard Erickson said, noting that there are several other veterinarians and graduate students associated with the study.

Network offers information resource for students, staff

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

New students often have a multitude of questions concerning various topics but don't know where to turn for assistance. There is a service at K-State that may be able to help them.

Students, as well as anyone in the University community, can turn to the University Learning Enhancement and Resource Network, an information and resource center under the direction of the Counseling Center.

Tracy Fraser, director of U-LearN, said the service is the result of a merger between the University Learning Network and Sex Educational Counseling Services. U-LearN has been under the direction and supervision of the Counseling Center for three years, Fraser said.

According to a pamphlet distributed by U-LearN, the aim of the organization is to answer any question, but its knowledge is concentrated in five major areas: career exploration, sexuality, condition interacting, study skills, and general information.

The career exploration area is designed for students who are unsure about a major or who want to explore more about the choice they have made.

A microcomputer program, Kansas Careers, clarifies interests, values and aptitudes and compares the student's profile with possible careers. The Alumni Learning Exchange provides students with specific information supplied by alumni currently working in the "real world."

Sexuality is another area covered by U-LearN. It offers information on contraception, sexual health concerns, dating and relationships, and unplanned or unwanted pregnancy. This information is provided on a confidential basis, Fraser said.

U-LearN also offers information dealing with how a person's mental, physical and emotional conditions interact. The service offers information on nutrition, stress management, exercise and biofeedback, as well as information on alcohol and other drugs.

Study skills are also an area covered by U-LearN, through assistance with note taking, time management and test taking. Help is available to improve study habits and discover the cause of such problems, along with an upto-date list of tutors available on U-LearN is available for assistance concerning general information, covering everything from changing a person's major to finding a town's zip code. U-LearN also keeps a list of typists, babysitters, and individuals in the community who do odd jobs.

Fraser said only 4 percent of the questions answered by U-LearN deal with the general information

According to the pamphlet, U-LearN is operated by students, most of whom are volunteers. Fraser said paraprofessionals are present to help peers with career exploration and study skills. These paraprofessionals have been trained in a class, Guidance of the Paraprofessional, offered by the College of Education.

Information is available on a phone-in basis by calling 532-6442, or by visiting the office located in the basement of Holton Hall.

SGA provides legal services

By AMY CARROLL Collegian Reporter

Many K-State students may find themselves in need of legal assistance at one time or another in their college career. But many may not realize there are legal services available to them on campus.

Student Governing Association provides funding for students' attorney Diane Urban.

Urban has served as the students' attorney at K-State for the past three years. Student Governing Association created the position in 1971 to help students understand their legal rights and responsibilities.

The students' attorney is able to provide legal assistance and advice to students, as well as to provide consultation and written letters or phone calls for the student, Urban said. But, she said, she does not have the power to represent a student in court.

Urban noted the largest share of her cases deal with universityrelated problems. The second most frequent problem for students has to do with landlord/tenant relations, followed by traffic violations, criminal cases and other problems.

One of the those problems is dealing with student employment contracts. Also, many students who are starting their own businesses seek legal services to educate themselves on the legal complications involved.

The attorney's services are available to various campus groups, such as the Consumer Relations Board, that may need her advice on following guidelines.

Services are paid for through the student activity fee, providing students with office visits and any special services necessary at no additional charge.

Urban said it is important for students to know they do not have to be in trouble to seek her services. If a student comes to her with a possible legal problem, she can help by researching the issue to see if the student is really in need of legal Approximately 30 hours per week of Urban's time are allowed for student consultation. All information attained is strictly confidential and is used only to determine the nature of the problem, to prepare statistics regarding the service, and to schedule appointments.

Questions can be answered and appointments made by calling or visiting the Student Government Services office on the ground floor of the

Supplemental stage remains active

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

The Purple Masque Theatre hasn't been abandoned. It's just gained a big sister."

Although the speech department moved last fall to Nichols Hall, giving the department a new and larger theater facility, performances will continue at the Purple Masque in East Stadium, said Rhonda Miracle, promotion and box office director for the K-State Players and instructor of

"The Purple Masque has always been used as a supplemental theater," Miracle said. "Because it's small, we can produce relatively cheaply there. It's a wonderful experimental stage.'

Miracle said the Purple Masque seats about 100 people, compared to 236 seats in Nichols Theatre. There were three shows in the Masque last year, and four shows will be scheduled for this year, she said.

There are four K-State Players productions scheduled in Nichols Theatre for the 1986-87 season, and two more are scheduled in McCain Auditorium, Miracle said.

"In the past, the Purple Masque was primarily used for speech and theater production and for classes," said Harold Nichols, head of the speech department. "It was very overscheduled. The theater at Nichols took some of the pressure off the Purple Masque.

"Most of the performances on our regular schedule will be at Nichols. The Purple Masque will still be used for graduate thesis productions, Ebony Theatre, Lunchbag Theatre and some K-State Players productions.'

There are two main differences between the Purple Masque and Nichols Theatre, Miracle said. The cost of production at the Purple Masque is lower, she said. Also, productions at the Masque run for three days while productions at Nichols run for seven days, she said.

"The Purple Masque budget is usually $100 per show," Miracle said. "That's nothing."

Although not a lot of money is put into productions there, lots of effort and love are put in, she said. 'We still aim for the same high standard of production (as for the other facilities)," she said. Miracle said that the Purple Masque has become recognized as a place where new actors, directors and playwrights get the chance to be "Compared to McCain Auditorium, the Masque is like being off-Broadway," she said.

Since last fall, the Masque has been jointly used by the speech department and the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies, Nichols said. Scheduling of the facility is now done by the dance section of PEDLS, he said.

Student fee supports Lafene Health Center

By MARY TOMELLERI Collegian Reporter

When new students enroll for fall classes, they may wonder why they have to pay a health fee. The answer is the fee supports a hospital located on campus.

Lafene Student Health Center is an accredited medical facility designed to provide cost effective, professional medical care to the University community.

A $60 health fee, included in the total fees paid at registration, entitles full-time students to numerous services available at Lafene. Parttime students have the option to pay an additional fee for Lafene ser-

There are some user charges that are extra, including lab work or medication from the pharmacy, said Cindy Burke, Lafene health educator. "But the user fees are considerably less than what you would have to pay in the real world," she said.

Among services offered to students are an allergy/immunization clinic, a clinical laboratory, diagnostic x-ray services, a wart treatment clinic, pharmacy services, and physical therapy services.

Lafene also houses LaFemme Clinic, which provides women's examinations and information about family planning and human sexuali-

Burke said the health center is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. It also is open during Christmas break and spring break. The only time Lafene is closed is during the first two weeks of August, when there are no students on campus, she said.

Student spouse coverage is also available during registration and payable at the cashier department at Lafene.

Before students can be treated at Lafene, they must complete a medical health history form provided by Lafene.

"Until we have the medical history of a student, we have no medical information on them at all," Burke said.

New students must provide Lafene with the results of a tuberculosis skin test, which is to be completed within the 10 months prior to entering college, she said. Students may have the test done at the health center after classes start for a $3

Lafene is staffed with eight fulltime physicians and one full-time registered physician assistant. All are licensed to practice medicine in Kansas and are qualified to treat most medical problems.

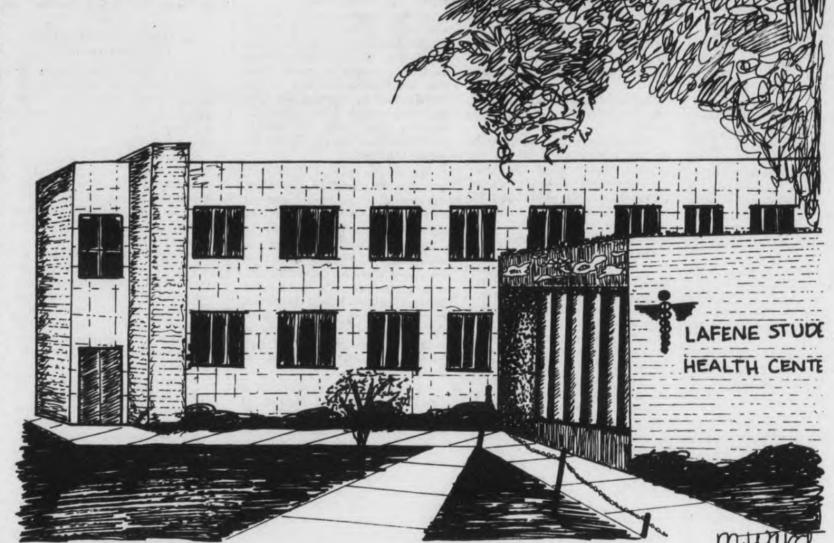

There is also a psychologist and a psychiatrist on staff at Lafene, Burke said.

"We don't treat real extensive medical problems and don't perform any surgery or obstetric care," Burke said. "We do work with the community to provide services, and patients with special medical needs can be referred to a local health facility for necessary treatment at the discretion of the attending physician."

Students are encouraged to make appointments for their doctor visits. Appointments are made on a first come, first serve basis and the staff does try to accommodate student's needs, Burke said. An acute care clinic is available for students on a walk-in basis when necessary. "On the average we see almost 200 students a day during a regular semester," Burke said.

It is recommended that students have some form of health insurance to help defray medical expenses that might be incurred while at Lafene or any other local health facility, said Eric Muehleisen.

Lafene administrator.

Students should check their family insurance policy because some policies will cover a dependent while in college or until a designated age, Muehleisen said. K-State does offer a Student Health Insurance plan at a reasonable premium, he said.

"The medical insurance available for students is a comprehensive Blue Cross & Blue Shield plan and is highly recommended," Muehleisen said. Information and application forms are available at registration. Health insurance coverage is stressed because "until a medical bill is paid, students can't enroll for the next semester," he said. 'Students wouldn't have the big bills if they had insurance."

This fall Lafene will be offering a new sports medicine clinic for students, Muehleisen said. It will offer "not just curative, but preventative medicine as well," he said. The sports clinic services are covered in the $60 health fee included in students' tuition.

The clinic will be named for Conrad Eriksen, a retired professor of business administration who donated funds to establish the clinic, Burke said.

In conjunction with the sports medicine clinic is a plan to place a flagpole in a prominent area on campus frequented by runners, Muehleisen said.

Flags hoisted up the pole will indicate to passers-by heat and humidity conditions which relate to heat stress factors, he said.

Union programming involves students

By SANDY WINTER Collegian Reporter

Getting an education doesn't mean that all knowledge must be learned in the classroom. Many times, extracurricular activities can provide students with personal and creative development.

Union Program Council provides students with many opportunities and experiences for creative development through programming, said Sylvia Scott, program director. UPC volunteers help in producing and promoting the artists, films, exhibits, speakers, trips and events that take place at K-State.

UPC, which has been a part of the Union since its opening in 1956, is comprised of eight committees, supported by four professional staff members. The committees are Arts, Eclectic Entertainment, Feature Films, Issues and Ideas, Kaleidoscope Films, Outdoor Recreation, Special Events, and

In addition to the eight committees, there is a promotions committee that takes responsibility for general UPC promotions, publications and public relations.

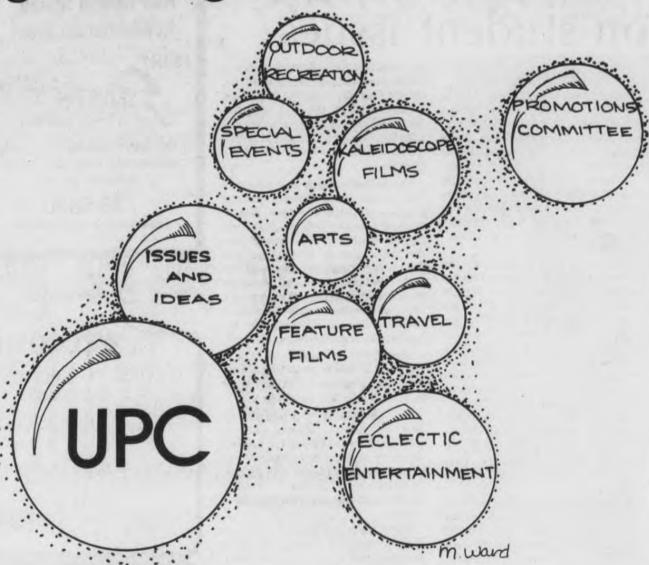

The Arts Committee provides students with an opportunity to experience all facets of the arts, Scott said. The committee coordinates the majority of the Union Art Gallery exhibitions, including selection of artists and installation. The committee also is responsible for print sales, art rentals, the Second Floor Showcase, the annual UPC Photography Contest, Mid-Day Arts Programs and the annual Arts and Crafts Sale.

The Eclectic Entertainment Committee provides live entertainment. Scott said whether the program is a dance, a comedian, a live band or a bluegrass, country or rock artist, the result is always the same - quality entertainment.

Feature Films provides current films and box-office successes on weekends and various week nights in the Union Forum Hall. Other programs include midnight shows, weekend matinees, film festivals and an annual Academy Awards contest.

The Issues and Ideas Committee strives to meet the challenge of keeping the campus informed on world issues. The goal of I&I is to bring programs that will be informative and enjoyable, Scott said.

In addition to two or three major speakers per year, the committee also coordinates the "Let's Talk About It" programs. These currentissue programs are informative presentations by local authorities, and provide an informal atmosphere to discuss the current concerns on campus and in the surrounding area, she said.

As a kaleidoscope produces different images, the Kaleidoscope Film Committee brings a diverse selection of movies from every corner of the world. Films are shown weekly in Forum Hall and Little

The Outdoor Recreation Committee coordinates a wide variety of challenging and rewarding outdoor programs for K-State students, Scott said. Each of the activities is based on a "cooperative wilderness adventure" structure and operates on the philosophy of participatory learning and cooperation.

Most of the ORC trips are open to those with little or no prior experience, said Jill Daniels, ORC chairperson and junior in physical education. Some of the programs offered in the past include canoeing, backpacking, caving, trout fishing, and cross-country skiing.

The Special Events Committee promotes a variety of entertainment. The committee is responsible for the booking, advertising, promotion and presenting of performing artists on campus. Along with major concerts, they also provide the campus with comedians, mimes and any other activity that doesn't fall under another committee areas, said Julie Stevens, Special Events chairperson and freshman in business administra-

Education graduates do well in job search

By The Collegian Staff

Job opportunities for elementary and secondary school teachers graduating in 1986 continue to expand across the nation, according to a recent publication by Jim Akin of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The report, compiled annually by Akin, traces the supply and demand of graduating teachers and is based on a survey of teacher placement officers at universities across the nation.

Akin said the picture is bright for the state's education graduates.

"I think the outlook for K-State graduates and for those of other state schools is quite strong. Almost all graduates who want to teach will be in classrooms this fall," he said.

The teaching fields of physics, mathematics, chemistry, bilingual education, multiple handicapped, and mental retardation are reported nationally to have the greatest demand of the 40 subjects and fields surveyed. The greatest increase nationally in teacher demand has been at the elementary level. However, at K-State, special education teachers are in the greatest demand, Akin said. "It has been overwhelmingly difficult for our placement office to find enough candidates to fill special education teaching vacancies," he said.

Akin's report indicated that while opportunities for teachers continue to expand nationally, placement officers in the Northwest and Midwest/Great Plains are less optimistic.

"The increase in demand locally is coming at a slower rate. Many of our teachers, particularly at the elementary level, are considering relocating to the Sunbelt, where opportunities for teachers are increasing more rapidly," he said.

Academic programs available at center

By KRISTY EAKIN Collegian Reporter

Many new students often find that maintaining good grades is one of the biggest problems they face their first year in school.

The Academic Assistance Center in Holton Hall offers K-State students a variety of services that can help their college careers - especially the first year - go more smoothly.

"It's easier to stay off probation than to get off probation," said Mike Lynch, director of the center. The minute students get into academic trouble, they should come in and get the problem under control, he said.

Four formal programs to help students maintain their grades are managed by the center, Lynch said.

The learning skills seminar is designed for new students. This seminar assists students in studying for the basic courses like social studies, math and English composition, he said.

One day a week is spent by the student in the study skills lab. Approximately 400 to 500 students are scheduled to participate in the learning skills seminar this fall, he said.

Another program is the study skills class, an eight-week course that centers on managing time, note taking, and reading a text ef-

The third program offered by the center is academic counseling on an individual basis. The program tries to help students overcome any problems that may be causing their grades to suffer, he said. If the problem is not of an academic nature, Lynch and the other counselors will refer the student to other campus counseling

The course supplemental program is the last of the center's formal programs. The center runs help sessions to supplement many courses including sociology, psychology, history and biology courses

Students participate in these help sessions on a voluntary basis, Lynch said. Students need not enroll in these sessions and will be informed about them in their classes. The sessions are taught by professors, graduate students and undergraduates.

The center also is responsible for administering the credit by examination tests. K-State has more than 50 classes that a student can "quiz out" of, Lynch said. Students can take these tests and if they pass, credit is given for that class without the student attending it.

The center also assists students in locating tutors.

Lynch said the center does a lot

SGA allows input on student issues

By The Collegian Staff

Student government is a great way to get involved at K-State and have a say in issues that affect students, said Student Body President Steve Johnson, junior in agricultural

"Student government is made up of us all (K-State students) and we as elected officials are always open to input and concerns from students. We need them and want them," Johnson said.

Once a student enrolls at the University, he automatically becomes a member of the Student Governing Association. This membership gives the student voting rights to elect Student Senate in February. In the SGA elections, students also vote for a student body president who represents K-State students to the Board of Regents and University administration.

Through SGA, students' concerns, suggestions or grievances are heard. Through the organization's constitution, SGA is divided into three branches: legislative, judicial and executive. The legislative branch is made up of Student Senate and its several working committees. The committees include academic affairs, communications, finance, personnel selection, senate operations, social services, state and community affairs, and student affairs.

Senate is responsible for the "laws community," the constitution states. These laws include changes in the constitution's by-laws, the Honor and Conduct Code of the SGA and Student's Rights. Senate is also responsible for allocating the student activity fee, according to the constitution's

The judicial branch is made up of the various living groups' judicial boards, Student Review Board, Judicial Council, Tribunal and Traffic Appeals Board. The boards handle non-academic grievances and disciplinary cases between students and administration and between students. Though they do not act as a court of law, the boards can deliver sanctions against students, the bylaws to the constitution say.

The executive branch of SGA is made up of the student body president and a selected cabinet which acts in an advisory capacity.

Any full-time undergraduate student or graduate student with at least six hours may run for Student Senate or student body president, the constitution states. However, students may get involved in student government without being elected to

There are more than 200 positions open to students during the year. Students may apply to be on a standing committee of senate, a judicial board or the student body president's cabinet. Openings for students to be on these committees and boards are advertised in the Collegian following the general election.

Several sites show Manhattan's history

By VALERIE JOHNSON Collegian Reporter

Most new students entering K-State this fall have visited or at least heard of Aggieville, the popular shopping and entertainment district just to the southeast of campus.

However, many students may not be aware of the historical sites to see in and around Manhattan.

When a student has a consumer problem, whether it is with a landlord or a door-to-door salesman, the Consumer Relations Board can

The board is a service designed to help students resolve many types of consumer problems, said Kelli Carr, director of CRB and senior in journalism and mass communications. The board advises students on subjects such as landlord/tenant problems, buying clubs and mail order fraud.

The most common problem handled by the board is landlord/tenant disputes, Carr said. But the board can also provide rental advice, which can be obtained before a lease commitment is made.

Other services offered include the investigation of a business's reputation, which may assist the consumer in avoiding problems. Other areas of include subjects such as credit, insurance, health, nutrition, and car crime prevention.

The board is staffed by a director and students enrolled in the consumer relations practicum course. The class, offered through the College of Human Ecology, includes attending a weekly lecture and working in the board office two hours per week for each credit hour.

The service is free of charge to students, Carr said. She said that during the summer there are more landlord/tenant problems, while there are more consumer-related problems during the regular school

One of the things often associated with college life is drinking.

A recent survey conducted by the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service at K-State indicated that 84 percent of University students drink alcoholic beverages, with 20 percent noting that their drinking has resulted in "sufficient negative consequences.'

The Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service is an organization that is trying to put "responsibility" back into drinking, said Bill Arck, director of the center.

Arck said the main goal of the center is to educate students on some of the consequences that can occur with irresponsible drinking.

"Education is the only way that people will see what problems drinking can cause in their lives," Arck

Arck said because the minimum legal drinking age in most states is changing to 21, a vast majority of students, who might have otherwise choosen to drink, cannot do so legal-

The alcohol and drug center actively promotes party hosting, alternative beverages and creative nonalcoholic programming, Arck said.

The center will also sponsor "Kickoff '86" Aug. 23. The celebration is to include the K-State football team, band, cheerleaders and a twohour dance with a disc jockey.

"The 'Kickoff' is kind of a promotion showing the students that you can have fun without having to drink," Arck said.

Band, vocal ensembles

Campus musical groups offer variety

By CONNIE WELSH Collegian Reporter

Of the many different activities to choose from on campus, none may be more exciting than one of the University bands or choral

K-State offers a variety of different bands to choose from including a jazz band, concert band, symphonic wind ensemble and perhaps the most well-known, the "Pride of Wildcat Land" marching

Students interested in vocal music can choose from a variety of vocal ensembles, said Rod Walker, associate professor of music.

"We ask all freshmen and new students to enroll in Collegiate Chorale, Music 121, which meets at 10:30 a.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday," Walker said. "Auditions are held the first three days of classes in the fall."

The ensembles offered to all students include the K-State Choir, Collegiate Chorale, Men's Glee Club and Women's Glee Club, Walker said. Those interested in Chamber Singers are selected from the Collegiate Chorale.

K-State's largest music ensemble, either instrumental or vocal, is the marching band.

The week before school begins each fall, marching band members get together and rehearse music for the upcoming season, said Stanley Finck, assistant professor of music and director of bands.

"The marching season starts off with what we call 'Howdy Week," Finck said. "This is a time to work on marching skills and rehearse music. It's also a time for members to socialize and get to know each

Along with the trimmings and trappings of an official visit - briefcases, secret service agents in three piece suits Secretary of State George Shultz carries around a small reminder of his recent visit to K-State.

Shultz delivered the 72nd Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues April 15. The lecture series honors Alf Landon, the former govenor of Kansas and the Republican party's 1936 nominee for president.

According to Jerry Anderson, one of the secretary's aides, Shultz always wears a sweater instead of a suit coat while on the airplane. Anderson said that in the heat of the preparations before Shultz boarded the airplane to Manhattan he forgot to pack his travel sweater.

"Secretary Shultz had one of his aides go to the (Union) Bookstore and buy a sweater," Anderson said.

"The Secretary still occasionally wears his sweater, and he said tell you that he enjoyed his visit to K-State very much," Anderson said.

"If (the student) is interested in joining the band, then they should contact the band office at 226 McCain Auditorium," Finck said, noting that practice for the 1986 marching season begins Aug. 20.

Finck said the Concert Band and Symphonic Wind Ensemble are also open to all K-State students.

'The Concert Band organizes after football season and performs during the spring semester," he said.

No audition is required to join the Concert Band. However, students must audition for the Symphonic Wind Ensemble at the beginning of

Through gifts and purchases, 12 pieces of artwork have been added to the K-State permanent art collection. The collection was founded by John Helm in 1929.

Helm, a professor of architec-ture, started the collection with just two oil paintings. The collection has since grown to well over 1,000 items, said Jessica Reichman, curator of art for the Department of Art.

Of the 12 new acquisitions, three were gifts. The first was "Landscape," a 1930 oil painting by Birger Sandzen. It was a gift from the estate of James Farrell, son of former K-State president Francis Farrell.

The second gift was a 1963 untitled ceramic plate by Henry Varnum Poor. It was a gift from Mary Helm of Manhattan, John Helm's

The third gift was a 1978 woodcut on paper titled "Flowing," by Japanese artist Hideo Muranka. It was a gift from Drs. Roy Leeper and Gaylord Hall, both of San Francisco.

Funds from the Friends of Art organization, a support group founded by John Helm in the 1930s to support the art department, aided the purchase of the nine other art pieces. All of the pieces were done by reknowned regional artists, Reichman said.

The collection began with two oil paintings by Lindsborg artist

University gains 12 works of art Birger Sandzen. One of these is currently on display in President Jon Wefald's reception area. It is called "Autumn Gold" and was completed in 1926. The second oil by Sandzen, "Stillwater," is on display in the Union's Bluemont Room. It was completed in 1927. "Since 1929 we have continued to collect artwork, as gifts. Some were willed to the University, or we were able to purchase them from artists," Reichman said. Most of the gifts are from people who have some affiliation with the University, usually K-State graduates or former professors.

Helm began the collection on the premise that it should contain notable art by regional artists, Reichman said. The backbone of the collection is made up of paintings by Thomas Hart Benton from Missouri, Kansas native John Stewart Curry and Grant Wood of These three make up a trio of Midwest artists working in the 1930s and 1950s.

"Mr. Helm had the foresight to collect art by these three artists. We hope we will have the same foresight when collecting contemporary art," Reichman said.

Various pieces of the collection are loaned to other institutions and museums throughout the country.

"In the last three years we have loaned pieces of our collection to the Wichita Art Museum, The Kansas Museum of History in Topeka, University of Oklahoma Art Museum, University of Nebraska in Lincoln and the Riley County Historical Museum, just to name a few," Reichman said.

On campus, a large portion of the collection is on display in the Union, mainly on the first and second floors. There are also paintings on display in the administrative offices in Anderson, Fairchild and Eisenhower halls and other campus buildings.

Charles Stroh, head of the art department, recently returned from a six-month tour of India. He brought back 53 pieces of graphic artwork created by contemporary East Indian artists.

"I think it's unusual for a University to have such dimension in its collection," Reichman said.

"We also have a collection of 125 photographs by Gordon Parks. A native of Fort Scott, Parks was a photographer for Life magazine," Reichman said. "We have created a traveling exhibit of 53 of Parks' photographs."

Friends of Art was established as a support group to promote collecting of fine art at K-State. When Stroh came to K-State in 1980 he revived this group. With his leadership, Friends of Art has become an active organization again, Reichman said.

"The executive committee of the Friends of Art help Professor Stroh and myself decide the direction the art collection will follow. It also helps us make policy decisions concerning the Friends of Art organization," Reichman said.

Pell Grant first step

Aid available to students

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

Students applying for financial assistance should be aware of a recent federal government require-ment regarding financial aid.

The federal government is requiring that students seeking financial aid must first apply for the Pell Grant. According to James Upham, associate director of Student Financial Assistance, the government originally meant for the Pell Grant to be the first step in applying for financial aid. Upham also said the government felt students weren't aware they could be qualified to receive a Pell Grant.

The Pell Grant is a gift from the government and need not be repaid, Upham said. Other forms of financial aid such as the Guaranteed Student Loan must be repaid. The government pays the interest on the loan for as long as the loan recipient is still in college. Students applying for types of aid such as the GSL were hurting not only themselves but also the federal government, by making it pay the interest, Upham said.

The most advisable way to apply for student aid is through The American College Testing Program, because financial aid is distributed on the basis of need, Upham said. According to the ACT 1986-87 Edition on Applying for Financial Aid, "The ACT Student Need Analysis Service has a system for figuring how much each student and his or her family can afford to spend on post-secondary education.'

The Financial Assistance Office prefers that students fill out the ACT packet because it covers students for other forms of student aid in case it is needed in the future or if the student is not eligible for the Pell Grant. Some of the financial aid programs covered by the ACT package are: The Pell Grant Program, College Work-Study Program, National Direct Student Loan Program, Supplemental Education Opportunity Grant Program and the Guaranteed Student Loan Program.

According to the ACT booklet, "The largest federal student aid program is the Pell Grant Program. Its purpose is to make sure that all eligible students have at least some of the money they need to continue their education after high school.

"Under the work-study program, the employer pays a small part of the student's wages, and the government pays the rest. Students may apply for work-study jobs through the Financial Assistance Office

"Under the National Direct Student Loan Program, students borrow money at a low rate of interest from the federal government. Repayment and interest begin six months after a student graduates. leaves school, or drops below halftime enrollment," the booklet said.

"Under the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Program, grants are provided to a limited number of undergraduate students with financial need. "The Guaranteed Student Loan Program allows eligible students to borrow up to $2,500 a year from any participating lender, and a state or other private nonprofit agency will stand behind the loan. The federal government pays the interest on the loan while the student is in school. Repayment and interest begin six months after the student graduates, leaves school, or drops below half-time enrollment," the booklet said.

There is a $5.50 fee for the ACT package and it takes an average of five weeks to process. The money goes to the American College Testing Company for the processing of the application, Upham said. If a student does not wish to pay the $5.50, there is an application for Federal Student Aid which covers only the Pell Grant, he said. These applications are available in Fairchild Hall, 104.

Ministries provide fellowship

By DENISE URBANEK Collegian Reporter

New students at K-State may not be aware of the fact that there are a variety of campus ministries and religious organizations available to students desiring fellowship.

More than 30 campus ministries and religious organizations are available to K-State students. Some of the main organizations include:

Ecumenical Christian Ministries Ecumenical Christian Ministries is a campus organization comprised of four mainline Protestant denominations, said the Rev. Rod Saunders, campus minister for ECM. The denominations are United Methodist, Presbyterian, United Church of Christ/Congregationalist and United Brethren.

The purpose of ECM, Saunders said, is to "enable a sense of Christian community, to openly study, discuss, and reflect on what it is to be Christian and how it applies to everyday life."

ECM activities include a Sunday supper program offered every week, he said. A home-cooked meal is provided by a local church followed by a recreational or educational program. Speakers are often invited to discuss a contemporary issue, Saunders said.

"Living Ethical Wills" is a program sponsored by ECM each semester. Faculty members are invited to speak on what they would leave to the world in a will if they were to die tomorrow

Students in ECM may also participate in a discussion group held twice a month. The subject may be a campus issue, a magazine article or any other topic students wish to discuss, Saunders said.

Although ECM is sponsored by the four denominations, any student is welcome to participate, Saunders said. ECM cooperates with several other church groups including the Baptist Campus Center, Lutheran Campus Ministries and St. Isidore's Catholic Church. ECM often cosponsors programs with these organizations.

Lutheran Young Adults

The Lutheran Young Adults is a fellowship group comprised of students and young adults from the Lutheran community, said the Rev. Bob Schaedel, pastor of St. Luke's Lutheran Church (Missouri Synod).

The group meets Sunday evenings at the church for discussion and recreation, Schaedel said. Members of the group participate in Bible studies, which are often held in students' residence hall rooms or apartments.

Another part of Lutheran Young Adults is the group's traveling worship team. Students plan, rehearse and lead worship services in district Lutheran churches, Schaedel said. The services are often musical or dramatic presentations.

Jewish students can find fellowship in B'nai B'rith Hillel, the campus Jewish student organization.

Allan Bailey, adviser for the Jewish group, said the organization brings in speakers, films and sponsors other events each month. Regular meeting times for the group are planned each semester, he said.

Bailey said he is available to help students in the group, whether it's helping them with a personal problem or assisting them with finding a

Farrell provides numerous services

By DENISE URBANEK Collegian Reporter

As new students become familiar with buildings on campus, Farrell Library is often one of the first buildings they become acquainted

But when using the library for the first time, finding the information needed sometimes can be a baffling and frustrating experience.

One way to alleviate the confusion is to stop by the information center located on the first floor. Here a student can find brochures, location guides and other materials that will familiarize one with the library. There is even a self-guided walking tour that guides students through the building.

Virginia Quiring, associate dean of libraries, said there are many reference materials and services available for students. Among these is the computerized periodical index known as InfoTrac.

The InfoTrac database contains more than 500,000 citations in business, social sciences and general interest topics, Quiring said. Citations in physical sciences, life sciences and humanities are also in-

Each floor of the library has viewing machines for reading the serials list on microfiche. The serials list is an alphabetical listing by title of all the periodicals materials received by the library, Quiring said.

Current magazines and other periodicals are located in the periodicals reading room on the second floor. Older issues are bound in hardback form or are on microfilm.

Another reference tool offered at Farrell is the "After Dark" service, so named because it is available during the evening hours throughout the week, Quiring said. Students may use the service to scan years of journal articles in a matter of minutes. The subjects covered include agricultural journals, chemical abstracts and mathematical reviews. A small fee is charged for Inter-library loans are available to secure materials not among Farrell's volumes. To use the service, a student fills out a request form and Farrell will contact other libraries in Kansas or in the nation to borrow the material.

The Special Collections department collects, maintains and preserves books and other materials that are rare, unique or extraordinary, Quiring said.

University Archives is a specialized collection that contains the historical records of the University. Photographs, newspapers and other materials in the archives date back to 1863. None of the materials in special collections or University archives are circulated because of their valuable and often fragile conditions, she said.

The K-State library system includes four branch libraries located on campus. These are the Architecture and Design, Chemistry, Physics, and Veterinary Medicine

For many students having an urge to get away from the books and out of town for a short break, they may find a variety of sites in the surrounding

West of Manhattan about eight miles is Fort Riley, home of the 1st Infantry Division. The Fort Riley can be found by going west on K-18 to the west edge of Ogden.

There you can visit Kansas' first territorial capitol, the U.S. Cavalry Museum or the Custer House, built in 1854 and named for Gen. George Custer. Custer was second-incommand of the 7th Cavalry when it was formed at Fort Riley in 1866.

Milford Lake, the largest lake in Kansas, is northwest of Fort Riley and Junction City off of U.S. 77. Tuttle Creek Lake, another water recreation area is north of Manhattan on K-177 and U.S. 24. Several camping and picnicking areas can be found in the Tuttle Creek system. One of the most popular areas for students, known as "The Rocks," is route for bicyclists to Tuttle Creek is Casement Road in east Manhattan.

Twenty miles northwest of Manhattan is the small town of Riley. There one can find several antique shops. Those partial to barbecued ribs may want to check out the Calico Inn on a Friday or Saturday night. At the small, homey, eating establishment one can still get soft drinks in 10-ounce bottles.

Abilene, located about 45 miles west of Manhattan on Interstate 70, is most famous as the boyhood home of Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34th president of the United States. At the Eisenhower Center, one can visit the Eisenhower Museum and the Presidential Library. The Museum of Independent Telephony and Old Abilene Town are also in the town of nearly 7,000. Also of interest is the history of the greyhound and greyhound racing at the Greyhound Hall of Fame.

West of Abilene, in the Smoky Hills, Salina offers several historical sights including a prehistoric Indian burial pit and the Smoky Hill in the Tuttle Cove area. A popular Historical Museum. Salina is also the home of the world-famous Land Institute, a school dedicated to research and development of sustainable agriculture. The institute is generally open to the public only on designated weekends.

To the south of Manhattan, on K-177, one can visit Council Grove, known as the "birthplace of the Santa Fe Trail." In Council Grove is the Hays House, the oldest continuously operating restaurant west of the Mississippi River, Council Oak and several other historic sites.

To get to Council Grove, use the Third Street viaduct to cross the river, and take Highway 177 south.

Wamego

If the comfortable feeling of a small town is what you're yearning for, Wamego is the place to go.

Wamego, located 13 miles east of Manhattan on U.S. Highway 24, is a clean, pretty town of 3,700 with a bit of history and a western clothing store that is the largest boot retailer in Kansas.

For those interested in western wear, Wamego has Vanderbilt's, the largest boot dealer in Kansas.

Along with history and clothing, Wamego is the home of the Bit o' Gold Cheese factory and retail store. It is located on U.S. Highway 24.

In conjunction with its Fourth of July celebration, Wamego also observes the Walter P. Chrysler Walter P. Chrysler, president of the Chrysler Corp. was born in Wamego. Each year the town celebrates with a carnival, parade and an antique car show.

During the second week in October the town celebrates Octoberfest. This is observed with a big German beer garden, arts and crafts booths and German food.

At the end of May, Wamego is host to the Johnnie Kaw Art Fair which features arts, crafts and food booths. Abilene

Abilene, located 40 miles west of Manhattan on Interstate 70, is the home of a number of historical exhibits, including Old Abilene Town and the Eisenhower Center

Abilene is famous as the boyhood home of Dwight D. Eisenhower, the 34th president of the United States.

The Eisenhower Center is devoted to the life and works of Eisenhower. It is a complex of five buildings, located approximately two miles south of Interstate 70 on Buckeye

The center includes the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library, museum, a visitor's center, the family home and a place of meditation.

Abilene also gained early fame as a rough, wild-west cattle town. In the late 19th century, Abilene was discovered by cattle traders and grew almost overnight from a small village and stagecoach stop to a booming city of more than 3,000 peo-

From 1867 to 1872, more than 3 million head of cattle were moved through the Abilene stockyards to destinations in the East. Abilene became a popular entertainment center and was the home of several hotels, nightclubs, gambling houses and more than a dozen saloons.

Directly south of the Eisenhower Center is Old Abilene Town, a recreation of the downtown area as it was in the early days. Included are replicas of the buildings of the era, as well as a number of the original structures.

The Dickinson County Historical Museum is located east of the Eisenhower Center. The museum's exhibits are devoted to the lives and settlements of early pioneers and also the early childhood of Dwight Eisenhower.

The Museum of Independent Telephony, located in the Dickinson County Museum, is a museum of early telephone history.

The L.P. Washburn Recreational Area, located on the northwest part of campus, houses the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The building consists of 16 handball/racquetball courts; gyms for basketball, volleyball, tennis and badminton; weight and exercise rooms; a room for dance or combatives; men's and women's locker rooms, each equipped with a sauna; and

Although the exact class times have not been announced, there is usually a morning class, one during the lunch hour and one each evening Monday through Thursday, said Raydon Robel, director of recreational services. Sign-up for intramurals is also done in the Rec Complex. Intramural activities include team sports such as flag football, volleyball, basketball and softball. There are also many individual sports like handball, racquetball and tennis.

Outside the complex are 20 acres of field devoted to intramural sports. In the fall, the field is made up of eight flag football fields, and eight softball fields in the spring. When the fields are not in use, they may be used for most any activity, said Assistant Director Joyce

Strong criteria face vet med hopefuls

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

Will Rogers once said that a veterinarian must be smarter than a physician because a physician can ask a patient where he hurts, but a veterinarian must find out on

This could be one reason for the high expectations K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine demands from its students.

To enter the college, a student must have a minimum of 71 prerequisite hours.

"It's very, very rare that someone can do it (get admitted) in less than three years," said James Coffman, dean of veterinary medicine.

Students enrolled in the college can come from a variety of majors, average in his 71 prerequisite but most are in the pre-veterinary

"We also get a fair number of people who have been in some other line of work that are coming back to take some pre-veterinary classes," Coffman said.

About 60 percent of each class is admitted at the end of three years, he said. The average number of times a student applies is about 1.2. The average number of years before entering vet school is 4.3.

The criteria for entering the school is one of the highest in the nation, Coffman said. "(K-State) and one other school have the highest criteria for interviewing and application in the United States," Coffman said.

"A student must maintain a 3.0

undergraduate hours and a minimum of 3.0 in the last 45 hours of undergraduate work to be considered. Then they are scored on their knowledge of veterinary medicine, their background with animals and whether they really know what veterinary medicine is. Then we have a group that can be interviewed," he said. The veterinary college is 80 years old but has been in its current location on the northern edge of campus only since the late 1970s. Previous locations were Leasure, Burt and Dykstra halls.

The vet complex was built between 1972 and 1978 and includes three buildings: the Veterinary Medicine Sciences Building, the Veterinary Clinical Sciences Building and Trotter Hall, formerly the Veterinary Medicine Teaching Building.

Coffman said the college currently does about 60 percent teaching, 20 percent service work and 20 percent research.

"We need to increase specialty services and research so that it is one-third, one-third and one-third," he said. "But we want to do this by increasing the other two areas (services and research) and not by cutting back on teaching.'

The college's main goal, Coffman said, is to build from within the faculty.

"Our No. 1 priority is building our faculty up," he said. "Right now we are about 20 faculty short. The positions are there but we just don't have the faculty to fill them."

Crisis center helps students in need

By JERRI CHRISTENSEN Collegian Reporter

College brings many changes to new students' lives. While many changes are pleasant and rewarding, some are agonizing and often lonely. For those, FONE Crisis Center is available for K-State students.

FONE Crisis Center is a listening and crisis counseling service provided for the Manhattan and K-State communities, said Paul Nelson, FONE director.

FONE got its start in March 1970 when a telephone was installed in the basement of a house on Laramie

The center, known as the Laramie House at its inception, was started through the efforts of Joe Engleken, an education student at K-State. Laramie House was operated entirely by student volunteers.

In June 1970, the expanding organization was in need of a more formal structure. A steering committee of four students was formed, the name FONE was conceived, and the organization was incorporated. The service is located in the University for Man house, 1221 Thurston St.

The original goals of the center were to provide a facility for the expression of problems, to give professional referrals when necessary, and to create an awareness of serious social problems.

According to Charlene Nichols, assistant coordinator of FONE, the center's basic goals have not changed. Nichols said the center's philosophy is to not judge people. The service is confidential and the volunteers do not ask for names when they receive calls, she said.

In addition to phone counseling, FONE also sponsors DIAL, a telephone information system. By calling the DIAL number, a caller can request to hear tapes on such topics as dealing with jealousy, sexuality and mental health, Nichols said. A complete list of the DIAL tapes can be found near the front of the campus directory, she said. The phone number for DIAL is 532-6907. Nichols said the majority of the calls FONE receives deal with loneliness and depression, but FONE also handles many calls concerning all kinds of relationships.

"We will talk to anyone about anything," she said.

With the exception of the coordinator and assistant coordinator positions, FONE is staffed entirely by volunteers. Nichols said. Volunteers must complete a training session of approximately 15 hours. This training session is conducted under the supervision of Nichols and FONE's operating hours are 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. Nichols said FONE does not operate during the day because professional services are available at that time. FONE volunteers can be reached at 532-6565 during operating

Greek Affairs office coordinates living groups

In the social category, the office oversees all greek events, such as Greek Week in the spring and University Sing during the fall semester. It is also involved in Homecoming in helping pair the fraternities and sororities for the weeklong spirit competition.

Greek Affairs also holds leadership seminars for the different fraternity and sorority officers.

Another important service involves the selection and training of housemothers, Robel said. The office advertises in the major papers, does the initial screening and sets up oncampus interviews of housemothers.

The two governing bodies, Interfraternity Council for men and Panhellenic Council for women, also are organized by Greek Affairs, Robel said.

The two groups, which are made up of members from all of the houses, mutually develop and enforce policies and standards of behavior for the living groups, she said. The groups also design special policies for such issues as hazing or use of alcohol.

Another activity which involves people from different chapters is the publication of a greek newspaper. Published once a semester, it contains news from the different houses and the greek community.

The Greek Affairs Office is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Bakery, meat, dairy goods

Groups sell food products

By KAREN SCHULER Collegian Reporter

Though most students would not think of buying food on campus, it is possible. Shellenberger Hall, Weber Hall and Call Hall all house stores where a variety of food can be purchased.

On Wednesday afternoons in Shellenberger, the home of grain sciences and industry, the aroma of freshly baked breads, cookies and pies is prevalant. The Bakery Science Club sells the fresh-baked goods from 3:30 p.m. until they are sold out.

"The Bakery Science club organizes and runs the bake sale," said Joseph Ponte, professor in grain science and industry. Most students in the club are bakery science majors but it is not re-

The students begin about 6 a.m. and bake all day. They sell several varieties of bread: French bread, a couple kinds of rye bread, natural meal bread and raisin bread. Ponte said. Cookies, doughnuts and cake items are also

"During the Christmas season they try to make fruitcakes and they sell bread at the Octoberfest every year," he said.

Donuts are the most popular item with a selection of chocolate frosted. cinnamon-sugar, powdered sugar or plain. The most popular breads are raisin and French, Ponte said.

Most of the ingredients used are donated by industry, he said.

The money raised from the bake sales is used for operating expenses and to send club members to professional meetings.

"The American Society of Bakery Engineers holds a meeting in Chicago each March. Last year they went to one in Las Vegas," Ponte said. "They also use the money for their annual Christmas party and they buy small pieces of equipment for the department for the bakery labs."

Another food store is in Weber where fresh-cut meat is sold. Weber is being renovated so the meat counter will be closed until the fall of 1987.

The meat is from cattle grown at K-State and is used in classes. Students learn how to evaluate live animals and then the animals are slaughtered so the students can compare the live evaluation with the actual structure of the animal. After the animal has been slaughtered, it goes to the meats lab where it is processed for packaging and sale, said Bob Danler, research assistant.

"We also sell cured meat. We make hams, bacon and summer sausage," Danler said.

The meat is also USDA inspected and approved, he said.

The dairy bar in Call Hall is best known for its ice cream. The students who work behind the counter serve more than 40 flavors of ice cream, half-gallon, gallon, and 21/2 gallon containers of whole and 2 percent milk. They also sell more than 10 varieties of cheese.

The dairy bar also has eggs from the University poultry farm, soft drinks, candy bars and coffee.

The bar is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. Monday through Friday. All of the dairy products sold are made from milk from the University dairy herd.

The students are not the only people who buy products from the dairy bar. People in Manhattan and the surrounding community also purchase milk, cheese and eggs there.

Bread, meat and dairy products are not the only food sold on campus. The Horticulture club sells pecans around Christmas time every year, said Ed Hellman, assistant professor of horticulture.

"People look forward to it and are glad we sell them," he said. "We sell whole and half pecans and

The pecans are Kansas grown and come from the southeast part of the state. "There is a region that grows pecans and a company called Conrad's shells and packages them. Since they are Kansas pecans we like to go with them," Hellman said.

The pecan sales are a major fund-raising event for the undergraduate horticulture club. "Everyone is welcome in the club, they don't have to be a horticulture major," Hellman said.

Unusualness, memorability and the suitability for publication are three criteria which the editors of the Kansas Quarterly, a literary journal edited and published on campus, look for when reading manuscripts.

By BECKY HOWARD

Collegian Reporter

Harold Schneider, associate professor of English at K-State and one of the Kansas Quarterly editors explained that "a story or poem has to be memorable and fresh and have the full support of all the editors before we will publish it in the Kansas Quarterly.

"For example, in the issue just released, we have two 'restaurant stories,' which were so fresh and different from anything we have ever received before, we knew that we would publish them," he said.

Nineteen short stories and 104 poems by writers from throughout the country fill the pages of the latest issue of the Kansas Quarterly, a magazine which has been rated by Writer's Digest as the No. 1 nonpaying literary market in the country. Kansas Quarterly editors, in addition to Schneider, include Ben Nyberg, associate professor of English who was the main editor for several years; John Rees, professor of English; W. R. Moses, Steve Heller, associate professor of English; and Schneider.

'All of the editors read manuscripts that are sent in and we all confer together on what should be published," Schneider said. "We get manuscripts from all over the country and abroad and if it weren't for the diligent work of the editors in reading the material, we'd have more than just a box and a half of manuscripts to read through at this point.

"Right now we have enough read and accepted material for two year's worth of issues," he said.

Schneider said Kansas Quarterly has been published on the K-State campus since 1968. The magazine, which began in 1872, was originally known as the Kansas Magazine, but the name was changed in 1933 "partly to reflect its change to a magazine published four times a year and partly because it was getting confused with another magazine under the same title," Schneider said.

A different volume number of the magazine is produced each year, with four different numbers under that volume. Two or three of those numbers are devoted to creative writing - short stories and poems. Schneider said Kansas Quarterly also has special numbers with guest editors, with topics focusing on literary criticism, art criticism and history.

Magazine seeks 'fresh' stories "Coming out this year we will have two new special numbers, one which is called 'Perspectives on Women's Roles'. The other is a literary criticism on William Inge, a writer from Independence...," Schneider

Topics for special numbers are usually selected on the basis of their relation to this region, he said.

Schneider said the current number, which is fourth under volume 17, is the first to be printed using a new method.

"Previously we used a method where the type was printed photographically," he said. "But this current issue was actually set and printed on a press at K-State Printing Service. The magazine looks a lot better and has a better quality of Approximately 1,500 copies of each number of Kansas Quarterly are printed, with up to 1,250 of these copies being sent out to subscriber, contributors and bookstores. Schneider said that most of the work printed in Kansas Quarterly is by authors who have been published

"Most of the contributors are published writers, although we have had some who have never been published before. The writers want to have their work published in a literary magazine of high standing,"

Although Kansas Quarterly does not pay writers individually for their work, two monetary awards are given to writers in Kansas Quarterly on the basis of work they have had published in the magazine. "For writers from Kansas there are the Seaton Awards, which were established as an endowment from Richard M. and Mary Holton Seaton of Coffeyville,"Schneider said, "And there are also the Kansas Quarterly/Kansas Arts Commission Awards which can be awarded to Kansas or non-Kansas writers.'

The KQ/KAC awards are announced yearly in the winter-spring numbers of Kansas Quarterly, and the Seaton Awards are announced in the summer number of the magazine, he said.

"Because of the Seaton Awards, Kansas writers have two chances at winning a monetary award for their writing and so more Kansas writers will attempt to get things published in Kansas Quarterly," Schneider

UFM rouses participants' curiosity

By LYNETTE KOLSKY Collegian Reporter

Area residents and K-State students can take classes in Dungeons and Dragons, stonemasonry, premarital enrichment and glass etching. The class atmosphere is relaxed and there are no grades.

These are not University classes, but are just a few examples of the many classes offered by the University for Man.

UFM offers non-traditional classes to anyone who wishes to take them the only prerequisite is curiosity.

UFM is a way for the community to share its resources within the community. UFM considers its resources to be the people in the community with skills and knowledge and an interest in sharing them.

"Everyone has something to offer," said Neil Schanker, assistant director of UFM. "There is always something different happening around here.

The UFM's philosophy is anyone can teach and anyone can learn.

"The classes are relaxed and informal so that people will feel comfortable learning," Schanker said.

MANHATTAN

776-RENT

419 E. POYNTZ

UFM has been operating in the community since 1968, moving to its present location at 1221 Thurston St.

For a membership fee, UFM offers the public the use of a darkroom, woodshop and pottery studio.

The fees vary for each of the studios, with varying lengths of time. "The more time you purchase, the cheaper it gets," Schanker said. The darkroom has equipment to develop and print both black and white and color photos, with the fees including all materials with the exception of the paper. For those who do not wish to purchase a membership, the darkroom is available for $2

"It's a great deal," Schanker said. The pottery studio is open to anyone with experience in pottery and who feels confident working alone, due to no instruction being provided. The fee allows the member access to the studio for four hours a week, 121/2 pounds of clay, kiln space and glazes.

The woodshop is equipped with a wide variety of power and hand tools. The membership fee is for equipment and facility use only. There is a mandatory organizational meeting for those puchasing a membership.

"The main emphasis is on safe equipment use," Schanker said. "As far as I know, no one has hurt themselves yet.'

UFM offers five catalogs a year in the fall, spring, summer, mid-fall and mid-spring. The classes offered in fall, spring and summer coincide with the University semesters.

UFM catalogs are available at the Union, Farrell Library, the Manhattan Public Library and several Manhattan businesses

The fall catalog will be available Aug. 18, with registration for fall classes beginning from Aug. 18 and continuing until Sept. 5 at the UFM

Public input plays a major role in what kind of classes will be offered by UFM. Schanker said they also get ideas from newspaper articles and current trends. Often people will contact UFM and offer to teach a class.

The Manhattan-based UFM has assisted more than 50 Kansas communities in developing their own UFM programs, with Schanker noting that Kansas has more free universities or community education programs than any other state.

Farm crisis apparent in counselor's dealings

By LORI BREDOW Collegian Reporter

The farm crisis is drastically affecting people all over rural Kansas. Farmers, farm wives and small business owners are all feeling the stress of a depressed farm economy. It has even reached the University.

Tony Jurich, clinical director for marriage and family therapy and professor of human development and family studies at K-State, has become intertwined in the farm counseling and crisis situations. crisis. He feels the stress not as a farmer, but as a counselor who listens to the farmers and understands the problems they face.

Jurich is the "back-up" person for the FACTS hotline on campus. FACTS, or Farmers Assistance, Counseling and Training Service, is a telephone hotline for troubled farmers and is now in its second

Jurich assists the hotline with

"I'm into a lot of different things, crisis work being my bag," Jurich said. "I gravitate toward real people type of things." The farm crisis is one of those things.

But Jurich's interest in farm issues didn't result from his growing up on the farm as one might expect.

"I'm a kid from Brooklyn," he said. "I had to walk five blocks to see a tree." After receiving his doctorate at Pennsylvania State in 1972, Jurich chose to come to K-State because of the department he would be working Jurich spent a lot of time studying farm issues.

"It took me four years to become familiar with it," he said.

Jurich is now quite familiar with the farm crisis. In the last year alone, he has seen a 300 percent increase in working with farm suicide threats and attempts.

"In previous years, one out of 50 suicide calls would be a farmer. Since Reagan took over, it has risen from 52 to 92 to over 100 a year," Jurich said. "I've gone out on 128 suicide calls this year. A little less than half of those are rural people. We've never had a suicide problem like this before.'

Although the farm crisis hits close to home for a lot of Kansans, and rural America feels the crunch of the situation, counselors like Jurich cannot come up with national statistics on just how bad it really is.

National statistics are not available because the government is not funding research, Jurich said.

"Almost all of the information we have is based on families in urban and suburban areas. We just don't know that much about farm families," Jurich said.

In researching the farm crisis, Jurich has found one other research project on the farm crisis and four articles out of professional journals.

The rest of the information he obtained "came out of the popular media," he said.

Jurich has gone to the USDA twice to plead his case about the farm crisis.

"They told me, 'there is no farm crisis.' Everyone knows there is a farm crisis, and the government says there isn't. Then people ask me why I am so angry with Reagan," Jurich said.

"So when we talk about the farm crisis, we just don't know that much," he said.

But what Jurich does know is that the problem is a real one.

"Farming is one of the most stressful jobs there is. It is more stressful than most white-collar jobs," Jurich said.

In his own experiences, Jurich has seen the farm crisis grow.

"In 1978, I did a farm stress workshop in northeast Kansas. Only one active farmer showed up. I did the same workshop in the same town again last fall and 120 people showed up, 60 percent of those being active farmers," he said.

One of the things counselors like Jurich are up against is the way farmers deal with hassles, he said.

"Farmers won't ask for help until it's too late. They say, 'we can deal with it," Jurich said.

Area offers activities for K-State students

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

Because of changes in Kansas drinking laws, most K-State freshmen and many other students will be looking for alternative types of entertainment. This fall, there are a variety of activities planned as well as interesting places to visit in Manhattan.

Union Program Council will sponsor its second All-Campus Dance in the Union Catskeller from 9 p.m. to midnight Sept. 12, said Sylvia Scott, UPC program director. For a minimal charge, students and guests can dance to top-40 music played by a disc jockey. Movies sponsored by UPC will run every Wednesday through Saturday night in Forum Hall on the ground floor of the Union, Scott said. There will be matinees on Saturday and Sundays and midnight movies on Saturday. Tickets are $1.75 for evening movies and $1.50 for matinees. For sports fans, the K-State football team has six home games scheduled this fall, said ticket manager Carol Adolph. The first is against Western Illinois University Aug. 30. Student season tickets cost $24. Students buying tickets for individual games will be charged varying prices depending on the opponent.

There will be two volleyball tournaments played on campus as well as six home matches. Fall baseball begins Sept. 6 with 10 home games scheduled. There also will be two cross country meets held in Manhattan this fall.

Students can get more information about sports events by contacting the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics in Ahearn 101.

Manhattan Sunset Zoo, located on Oak Street near Manhattan High School, is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. every day, said Steve

Mathews, director. Zoo exhibits include the Primate Building — which houses apes from around the world — the Large Cat Exhibit and different species of bears from the United States and other countries. For those wanting a little exercise, the Skate Plaza Roller Rink, 400 Tuttle Creek Blvd., has sessions from 1 to 4 p.m. on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Admission is $2 and skate rental is $1. Lessons are available for beginners. The Manhattan Civic Theatre has scheduled performances of "Who's Life is it Anyway?" Oct. 10, 11, 17 and 18. Tickets are $4. "Fiddler on the Roof" is scheduled to be performed in December. Two other performances are to be held in February and April. Season tickets for the performances are available at the City Administration Building or City Auditorium.

The Union Recreation Area, located in the lower level of the K-State Union, has fall bowling leagues for students and faculty. The recreation area also features video games, pool tables, a bigscreen TV, and vending machines. Games which can be checked out include Trivial Pursuit®, chess, checkers, cards and dominos.

Non-violent textbook buying

Feeling as if you were signing your life away with every pen stroke, you signed that check for tuition and

"I'm a real student, now," you pro-udly think to yourself. You feel as if you had survived a most unspeakable horror. You feel like you're home free.

Not quite. There's something else - textbook purchasing. It's a process some people dread, fear and hate more than fingernails on a chalkboard. But it doesn't have to be all that bad.

As a veteran student and a past employee of one of the two bookstores that sell textbooks, I've picked up some non-violent, textbook-purchasing survival techni-

But, a few warnings are in order. First, be prepared to pay more than you thought would be necessary. It's not that the bookstores - Varney's Book Store in Aggieville and the K-State Union Bookstore - are trying to rob you; the books are simply expensive. Some classes use more than one book. Books for technical courses cost more than books for non-technical courses. New books cost more than second-hand books. The dollar signs add up.

Second, wear a coat of armor and bring something cool to drink. The bookstores are hot battlegrounds. Invariably, everyone else will purchase texts at the same time as you. Both stores have air conditioning, but with so many people packed in you'd never know it. Be prepared to wait in line and fight a crowd.

In addition to your coat of armor,

you need to bring your class schedule. With the schedule and a little reasoning you'll be a happy

On the schedule are two essential pieces of information: the course number and the reference number. The course number, a series of letters followed by three numbers, tells you which department teaches the class and the course level. The course number is a zoning device that brings you to the area where the books can be found.

In both bookstores, the texts upstairs in the Union Bookstore and downstairs at Varney's - are arranged by the college. The colleges are arranged in alphabetical order. Within each college, the departments or divisions are arranged in alphabetical order. Within each department, the classes are arranged from the lowest course number to

Since you have already enrolled in the class you should have a rough idea of which college and department offer the course. Using the signs that indicate their location, point your pony in that direction and ride. Soon you'll be in the area where your textbooks will be. The course number will help pinpoint the area.

into play. A department may teach several different sections of each class. Each class has its own reference number. A good example is Economics I - there may be 10 or more classes being taught and each class may require a different book. It may feel like a Sesame Street deja vu, but match the reference number on your schedule with the reference number that indicates the books needed. Make sure the two match exactly. If they do, sing hallelujah for you have succeeded in finding the books for the course. Check to see if the texts are required by the instructor or only recommended. Some students, very strange ones, swear by recommended books and can't live without them; others avoid them at all costs.

Repeat the process until you have the books for all of your classes. Occasionally, no book will be required for a course so don't panic if you can't find anything. If a book is required for a class and the bookstore doesn't have it, try the other bookstore. If neither bookstore has the texts, don't drop out of school, just tell the course instructor copies of the books are unavailable.

If you manage to make it past the cashier with some money left in your checking account, remember to save your receipt. It will make returning books even less of a battle than finding them. Without it...well, that is an unspeakable horror.

Now, you're one step closer to being a real student. You'll become a real student after you let the book sit on the shelf for a whole semester without ever opening it.

Annual event's theme honors K-State parents

By MARY TOMELLERI Collegian Reporter

From Roots to Wings is the theme for this year's Parents' Weekend. The annual event, which is coordinated by the Chimes Junior Honorary, is scheduled for Nov. 7-8, said Jada Allerheiligen, Chimes publicity chairman and junior in journalism and mass communica-

The theme was derived from an anonymous quote which says, "Good parents give their Children two things: One Is Roots, The Other Is Wings.'

Parents' Weekend is a K-State tradition over 50 years old in which the students and faculty of K-State invite parents to visit the campus. It is a special time set aside to recognize the parents of K-State students, Allerheiligen said.

One of the special events of Parents' Weekend is the selection of K-State's Honorary Parents, to be announced at half-time of the K-State football game Saturday, Nov. 8. The selection is made through a essay application from students nominating their parents, Allerheiligen said.

Some of the activities scheduled for Parents' Weekend, beginning Friday, Nov. 7, are an art exhibit in the K-State Union Art Gallery from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.; a pottery display in the K-State Union second floor showcase; and at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m., the film "Murphy's Romance" will be shown in the Forum Hall, located on the lower level of the Union. Tickets for the film are $1.75 and go on sale 30 minutes before the movie begins at the Forum Hall box

Included in the scheduled activities for Saturday, Nov. 8, are campus tours departing from the K-State Union throughout the day, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.; three miniclassroom sessions presented by K-State faculty at 10 to 10:45 a.m. on the second floor of the Union; a pregame luncheon buffet from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Bluemont Room, located on the second floor of the Union; and from 5:30 p.m. to 7 p.m., a dinner buffet in the Union Ballroom, located on the second floor of the Union.

The K-State vs. Oklahoma State football game kickoff is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. Saturday at the KSU Stadium, 2201 Kimball Ave. Tickets can be ordered through the athletic ticket office at K-State by calling 913-532-6920.

Allerheiligen recommends that reservations for overnight accommodations be made as soon as possible since local motels are likely to be filled early.

Chimes Junior Honorary is an organization for juniors only which recognizes academic achievement of students with a grade point average of 3.0 or higher, said Mark Buyle, Chimes president and junior in marketing and pre-law.

Area lake offers sun fun for many

By CARRIE ROSENCRANS Collegian Reporter

For fun in the sun, many K-State students take off for Milford Lake.

It takes approximately 35 minutes to drive to Milford, the largest body of water in Kansas.

Rolling Hills is the most popular day attraction, said Greg Worst, ranger for the Milford Lake Corps of Engineers. It has a sand beach and good facilities.

Thunderbird Marina is located at Rolling Hills. It's one of the four boat docks at Milford.

For the real outdoorsman, Milford offers School Creek. It has the most primitive camping facilities on the lake, Worst said. An off-road motorcycle course going through a stone quarry is a popular attraction of this site. Cost is $3 a night.

Within the city of Wakefield is another campsite called Clay County Park. On the east side of the part is the Wakefield Marina.

Historical sites help relive University's past

By BECKY HOWARD Collegian Reporter

Before Kansas had become a state, a cornerstone was laid for what would be a lone three-story building at the edge of the newly developed townsite of Manhattan. That building was Bluemont Central College, the "ancestor" of K-State and the beginning of a history filled with legend and controversy.

The location of the first college was actually a mile west of the present campus. The first president of the "Little Methodist School" was the Rev. Joseph Denison, a Methodist minister. Its first enrollment in 1860 was 53 students.

In 1861, President Lincoln signed the Morrill Act, which provided land grants to fund state agricultural colleges. Bluemont Central College became one of these state institutions, and in 1863 its name was changed to Kansas State Agricultural College. It opened with an enrollment of 52 students - 26 men and 26 women.

Shortly before this, the founders of Bluemont Central College had petitioned the Legislature to accept the college and the land it was on to establish the first state university. This was vetoed by the governor, and the first state university was established in Lawrence. K-State did not officially become a university un-

The present campus was purchased in 1871 because it was thought to be a better site for experimental agricultural farming. The first building on campus, the Farm Machinery Hall, was erected in 1873 and demolished in 1963.

Early education for students included the basics of reading, writing and arithmetic and military training for both men and women. The military training was stressed because of the Civil War. But as those first years passed by, many people were unhappy with the college's academic progress. It was said the college lacked adequate textbooks and trained professors.

When John Anderson became president of the college in 1873, he changed the academic programs to Act more accurately. He felt the college was wasting time with the teaching of "ologies" and "osophies."

Anderson implemented more practical instruction saying the "objective of this institution" was to "give prominence...to school branches of learning which relate to agriculture and mechanic arts according to the directness and value of their rela-

Anderson began three courses of study. The first was for students who wished to be farmers, the second for those who wished to be mechanics or industrial citizens and the third was for the young ladies of the student

Anderson Hall was one of the first academic buildings erected on the new campus. The north wing of the hall was built in 1879, the central portion in 1882 and the south wing in 1884. Several courses, including early home economics classes, were taught in Anderson.

Other early campus buildings were the industrial workshop, now part of Seaton Hall, and the chemistry building, now Holtz Hall. Over the years, Holtz has served as the women's gymnasium and the home for the Department of Mathematics. It currently houses the Career Planning and Placement Center.

At the turn of the century, the college was developing a physical and academic personality.

Most campus buildings were built under K-State's fifth president, E.R. Nichols. Among those was Nichols Gymnasium, which is now Nichols Hall. The gymnasium was gutted by fire in 1968 and sat unused until recent reconstruction.

With most of the buildings on campus completed not long after the turn of the century, the college was developing a style and traditions were established. Regular commencements were held on the lawn of Anderson Hall. Sheep were borrowed from the agricultural farms before ceremonies to graze on the lawn in an effort to control the hated dandelion. Literary societies and social fraternities were established, as was a college newspaper.

In 1914, the campus newspaper follow the provisions of the Morrill became the Kansas State Collegian.

The year of 1943 saw Milton Eisenhower take over as K-State's ninth president. Eisenhower, brother of Dwight D. Eisenhower, has been credited with taking a major step toward developing physical sciences, biological sciences, social sciences and the humanities.

The 1950s and '60s, with James Mc-Cain as president, brought more change and development to the University. During the McCain years, construction of Ahearn Field House, the K-State Union and KSU Stadium was completed. K-State also celebrated its centennial in 1963 and former Gov. Alfred M. Landon

Bell provides local service

Phone customers find many choices

By KELLY SMITH Collegian Reporter

Before the breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in 1984, the hardest part of establishing phone service was deciding the color and style of telephone desired. Now there are many choices to make. So many, in fact, that the choices are as confusing as the network of cables that make it possible to talk to the other side of the world in seconds.

Southwestern Bell is the local company responsible for hook-up, billing, dial-tone, service, directory assistance and long distance calls within the Local Access Transport Area. Calls within Manhattan's LATA are most of those numbers with the 913 area code. Area code 913 numbers in Kansas City are the exception.

If residents are going to make calls beyond their LATA, they are asked to choose a long-distance company. Those choices are AT&T, Microwave Communications Incorporated (MCI) and US Sprint. US Sprint is a new name in the telephone business due to the July 1, 1986, merger of USTelecom and GTE Sprint.

Initial connections with Southwestern Bell cost a minimum of $44.15. This cost will activate all outlets in the household, as long as no extra work is required. If additional outlets are desired, the customer may opt to install the outlets or pay a Southwestern Bell employee to do the work.

Any work done inside the house by Southwestern Bell costs $32 for the first 15 minutes and $16 for each additional 15 minutes.

Because of the new option for outlet installation by people other than Southwestern Bell employees, the company is no longer responsible for inside wiring. Therefore, an 'optional home maintenance service" is offered.

This maintenance service, which costs 90 cents per month, puts the responsibility of inside wiring on Southwestern Bell. Before requesting this coverage, a renter should check with his landlord, as the landlord may accept respon-

Other charges added at initial hook-up are household listings, with several options available for the customers. They may choose to be unlisted, a feature costing $1.75 a month that keeps the customer's number from being printed in the phone book. The number is also not given out when someone tries to get it from directory service.

A customer also may choose to be directory accessible. One free listing comes with the initial order, but if additional listings are desired, there is a one-time charge of $5.75 per listing and 60 cents per name per month. Southwestern Bell also offers four custom-calling services: call waiting, which gives a signal when an incoming call is being attempted while the phone is in use; call forwarding, in which a series of numbers are punched into the home unit that make calls ring at a different number; speed dialing, in which the touch of two buttons will dial a pre-programmed number; and three-way calling, where three people from three different numbers can connect and talk at

There is a $7.50 connect charge for each of these services. A person can have any number of the four custom-calling services. One service is available for $2.55 a month, two for $4.30, three cost $6.40 per month and all four services cost $8.50 per month.

Customers do not have to choose a long-distance company if they do not plan on making any calls outside of their LATA.

Each student should talk to a representative from each phone company before choosing one.

After deciding which longdistance company is preferred, the customer needs to call Southwestern Bell to sign up for Information a student should have before calling Southwestern Bell to request service are source of income; a contact name and phone number; where that contact person works and their work phone number; landlord name and telephone number; student's social security number; and a knowledge of where the outlets are in the apartment or if any other outlets

McCain attractions to highlight season

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

Those wanting to see world-class perfomances don't have to go to the big city. Instead, this high caliber of entertainment can be found at K-State.

Since its opening in 1970, McCain Auditorium has hosted an average of 15 to 16 world class performers each year as part of the McCain Performance series.

Former McCain Director Richard Diehl said the performers are chosen on the basis of quality, variety and distinctiveness

"Since we have two different groups to deal with - the students and community - we try to find performers who will appeal to both,' Diehl said. "Our aim is to provide a wide variety of entertainment that includes something for everyone."

Diehl's last day as director was July 31. He has taken a position as director of audience development for the School of Fine Arts at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio.

Each year is different depending on who is touring in the area, Diehl said. After attending two conventions a year, he talks with agents of the performers he would like to invite to McCain.

This season, a variety of acts have been scheduled including a return engagement by the Houston Ballet on September 29 to open the 1986-87 season. They will be performing "The Sleeping Beauty."

Magician David Copperfield is scheduled for two performances on November 15. Copperfield has been named Entertainer of the Year by the Amercan Guild of Variety Artists and Magician of the Year by the Academy of Magical Arts.

Airjazz, a dancing and juggling comedy group, will be performing at McCain March 28. The Los Angeles Times calls Airjazz "a juggling troupe whose rhythms are musical and whose comedic attire is refreshing."

The New York City Opera National Company will perform Madame Butterfly March 31. Traveling with a 30-piece orchestra, the company returns to Manhattan for its fourth consecutive season.

Other musical acts scheduled to perform this year include singer Mel Torme, The Young Americans musical review, The Franz Liszt Chamber Orchestra and The Arden

A package of five performances is available to K-State students at a special rate. The "Lucky 7-11" package, for students wishing to attend seven or more performances, provides a 10 percent discount. After season ticket sales end Aug. 29, Mc-Cain will begin selling tickets for individual performances.

McCain is a seven-story structure that houses the 1,815-seat auditorium, its lobbies and offices, a backstage scene shop and costume shop, the Department of Music, and radio-television facilities.

Center offers hearing evaluations

By The Collegian Staff

Free hearing evaluations are available to K-State students and their dependents through the Speech and Hearing Center located in Leasure Hall.

The center offers a wide variety of services including hearing aid evaluations, speech-language evaluations, speech-language management, and aural rehabilitation management for the hearing impaired, said Lori Cross-Elliott, instructor in speech and director of clinical services.

A vocal communication improvement class for two credit hours is also available to students with speech and hearing disorders. Students are first evaluated, and if a specific disorder is found, they are allowed to enroll in the class. Individual class times are then arranged with a therapist, Cross-Elliot said.

"The clinic deals with a variety of disorders from articulation to voice problems," she said. The therapists at the clinic are graduate and undergraduate students who are enrolled and working as part of a practicum course. These student clinicians are under direct supervision of a certified staff member, Cross-Elliot said.

During the fall and spring semesters, a walk-in clinic is offered to students as a convenient way to have their hearing tested. Students who wish to have their hearing tested during the semester should call the clinic at 532-6879 for an appointment.

Book to depict K-State week

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

During a hectic week in October, photographers from all over the nation will be scrambling to capture pieces of University life on 1,800 rolls of film - more than 28,500 frames.

Dozens of former K-State student photographers have been invited back to campus to shoot an array of activities happening this fall.

The photographs will be compiled into a 10-by-14-inch, 160-page "coffee table" picture book, depicting K-State college life in 1986, said Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc., the publisher and distributor of the project.

"It all came about at exactly the right time, that is why it was so well received," said Jeff Taylor, photographer for The Columbia Tribune, Columbia, Mo., and a coordinator for the project. The University is in a state of transition; there is a new president, vice president, and new coaches throughout the athletic department, said Taylor, a 1986

The working title for the project is "A Week at K-State."

The idea for the AWAKS began as a reunion for the former photographers and fireballed into a full-scale project whose profits will be funneled into a photojournalism.

"To a certain extent, it is a reunion, but I think the best thing will be to meet each other. We have a great deal of prominent people coming back, and we need to pat them on the back," said Tim Janicke, photo editor for The Kansas City Times and editor of the project.

The project has financial support from the KSU Foundation, the College of Arts and Sciences, the Alumni Association, University Relations, President Jon Wefald and others, Adams said.

The Foundation and Student Publications will be providing the initial funds to print the book, Adams said. The two contributing organizations will put up $25,000 each for the $50,000 project.

The sale of the book will be targeted toward the alumni, said Chris Stewart, editor of this fall's Collegian, and student liaison for the

Photographers will cover events from all colleges and a few offcampus programs. The photos, which depict the missions of the University as well as serve as strong visual images, will be included in the book, Adams said.

"I think it is going to be a very ex-best photojournalists in the field today," said Stewart, senior in journalism and mass communications.

Professional photographers from Colorado, Florida, Kansas, Maryland, Missouri, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas, Washington state and Washington. D.C., will be flown in for the week of Oct. 12-19 for the project, Adams

"A lot of their employers are giving them time off and some are using their vacation time to be here," said Janicke, a 1976 graduate.

The week chosen for the project coincides with the K-State vs. University of Kansas football game. A seminar Oct. 15 will separate the week-long project, which will be divided into two sessions. The seminar will include presentations various returning photographers to be announced at a later date. Tentative plans for the seminar include presentations from a White House photographer, a photographer from a national award-winning show, a slide show from a photographer on assignment in Africa, a program on photographers who hold management positions and a presentation from Student Publica-

"A lot of talent has come out of K-State in the last 10 to 15 years and we intend to use it to make an A-1 quality book," said Pete Souza, White House photographer, project coordinator and 1979 graduate.

The photographers will have their choice of which session to attend. One session is from Sunday, Oct. 12 to Wednesday, Oct. 15. The second session begins that same Wednesday and ends on Sunday, Oct. 19. Some photographers will be attending both sessions, Adams said.

"This is an opportunity for a lot of people to work together and benefit from other people in their field," Janicke said. AWAKS will be set up as a documentary, where the photographs are not set up in advance. "This is a chance for us to practice pure photography," he said.

A committee of administrators, faculty and students was formed to organize the details, form a budget and present the idea.

The photographers were then sent a letter explaining the idea, and outlining roughly what would take place during the week. A reply card was sent along with the letter to encourage contact with the project organizers, Stewart said.

"We had great response to the left term a think there guy the property citing project. We have some of the K-State and are more than willing to help promote it in any way they can," Taylor said.

An estimated 1,500 rolls of blackand-white film and another 300 rolls of color film will be used during the week, Janicke said.

As the editor, Janicke will be in charge of deciding which photos will appear in the final production. Those photos not included in the book will be stored in the University Archives by the Office of Photographic Services, Adams said. Prints will be available through Photographic Services after the book is published.

A bulk of the picture story ideas will come from the individual photographers. These ideas will turn into assignments after they are approved by the coordinators, Souza

Souza will be in charge of distributing photo assignments under the direction of Adams, who is acting as publisher of the book. Janicke will make sure all pages are designed and that the copy fits. Taylor will handle all student manpower, generate assignments, background research, film processing and printing of the final shots.

Stewart will serve as student liason for the project, helping get the project organized and keeping the students updated on changes, progress or additions to the events plan-

Ronda Corle, senior in journalism and mass communications and editor of the 1986 Royal Purple, will be the designer of the book. Bill Brown, former director of Student Publications from June 1970 to June 1981 and faculty member will be writing the copy for the project. Brown is a 1949 graduate.

The book's copy will be sent to the printer in January 1987, and is to be available for distribution by fall 1987, Adams said.

A special section in the Collegian and Royal Purple will serve as a sneak preview for the project, Stewart said.

The book is expected to sell for $20. University budget units and commercial bookstores will be allowed advance purchase copies at a reduc-

"We're looking forward to a lot of work, a lot of fun and a quality book to show for it," Janicke said.

By TIM FITZGERALD Staff Writer

Norris Coleman has made up his mind and what seemed like an impossible dream to many K-State fans has come true.

After visiting five schools which he was interested in transferring to, Coleman announced June 9 that he would remain at K-State and sit out a year - barring any court action against the NCAA to reinstate Coleman's eligibility.

The 24-year-old Army veteran, led the nation in scoring for freshmen last season averaging more than 20 points a game for the Wildcats. The NCAA ruled him ineligible in late February over a technicality from his high school transcript of 1979.

After K-State lost an appeal in late May, Coleman visited Maryland, Virginia, Jacksonville, Louisiana State and Kentucky. Coleman had told the Collegian after the first ruling that "(I) couldn't see myself sitting out a year at my mel, in Topeka. "I have spent a lot of time in the last 30 days looking at the options that are available to me in light of the NCAA's ruling concerning my eligibility," he said. "Those options included a possibility of turning pro, transferring to another school and being immediately imately 25 interested schools down to five and I visited all five. "K-State has had faith in me and the people here have stayed with me through the whole affair...I have established a good academic eligible or remaining at Kansas

State. I narrowed a list of approx-record at K-State," Coleman said. Coleman was ruled ineligible by the NCAA because Coleman's transcript K-State used from Paxon High School in Jacksonville, Fla., was for eight semesters when - in the NCAA's interpretation -Paxom was under a six-semester system at the time of his graduation. Coleman's six-semester grade point average was 1.9, which is below the required 2.0 to be eligible for financial aid at a Division 1 school. Under that ruling, Coleman must sit out until Feb. 27, 1987, if he remains at K-State. Coleman averaged more than 20 points and eight rebounds for the Wildcats in Jack Hartman's last season as K-State coach, Kruger said Coleman will be eligible for financial aid while he sits out next season. Under terms of the NCAA ruling, he will not be eligible until late February, but Kruger said he was not planning on using Coleman at all during the next season. He would then have two remaining years of eligibilty.

"We're very pleased with Norris' decision, and with the confidence he has in Kansas State's people and the community." Kruger said. "I think his decision reflects a great deal of appreciation for the kind of basketball fans we've got."

'Cats coach Kruger says KSU fans best

By The Collegian Staff

Lon Kruger is the new head basketball coach for K-State. As a former K-State player and assistant coach, Kruger says he is glad to be home.

"I'm excited about the basketball program at K-State. Kansas State fans are the best anywhere," Kruger

Kruger is one of only two K-State basketball players to be named Big Eight Conference Player of the Year twice. He was Sophomore of the Year in 1972 and was called the league's best player in the 1972-73 and 1973-74 seasons. Kruger averaged 17.6 points a game his senior year and ranks on the K-State career free throw charts with an 82.6 percentage.

Kruger has been an assistant coach at both K-State and Pittsburg State University. He was assistant coach for the U.S.A. basketball team which won the gold medal in the 1983 Pan American Games in Caracas,

For the last four years Kruger has coached basketball at Pan American University in Edinburg, Texas.

Coaching at K-State was a chance for Kruger to come back to a home area. He is originally from Silver

"I like the tradition at K-State, and the people. It's a great opportunity," Kruger said.

Baseball squad readies for new diamond coach

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's new head baseball coach is Mike Clark. Clark is replacing Gary Vaught, who is now head coach at Oral Roberts University.

"We're pleased to have a man of Mike Clark's character and coaching ability. He has a great record, he's a great teacher, and we know that he'll continue to give our baseball program the type of commitment he has with others in the past," said Larry

Stress

"Don't try to go it alone," Jurich stresses to farmers. "No man is an island and neither is a farmer."

Jurich does get angry about the farm crisis because "everyone is looking for a quick fix," he said.

"Instead of looking at a long-term answer, everyone is looking for Band-Aids. That is what is happening to American agriculture," Jurich

A quick fix will not work for the farmer because of the devastation experienced by the loss of a farm. Losing a farm is a "death, divorce and loss of a job all wrapped up in one," Jurich said.

"Death is the No. 1 stressor in our country," he said. The loss of a farm is like a death because "a farm is not something like a car; it is a living, growing thing."

"Divorce is our No. 2 stressor," Jurich said. Losing a farm is also a divorce because the farmer is divorcing himself from previous and future generations.

Jurich will agree, though, that a quick fix is better than no fix.

Travis, K-State director of athletics. Clark attended Southern Utah State College his freshman year and then transferred to Missouri Western State College for his remaining three years. During those years, he lettered three times as a pitcher.

Clark was District 16 pitcher of the year in 1975. He holds the Missouri Western record for the fewest walks in one season at 22 in 103 innings pitched.

Clark's coaching career is varied and extensive. He was assistant baseball coach in charge of pitchers at Missouri Western and then served as head baseball coach at Coweta High School in Arkansas. He was also a physical education instructor and worked as a scout for the Kansas City Royals.

Gridiron attitude positive

By The Collegian Staff

Stan Parrish succeeded Jim Dickey as K-State football coach. Dickey resigned follow-ing the second football game during the 1985 season.

Parrish received his bachelor's degree in physical education from Heidelberg College in Heidelberg, Ohio. While serving as a quarterback coach for Purdue University, he received his master's Prior to the position at Purdue, Parrish was quarterback coach and recruiting coordinator at Wabash College in Wabash, Ind. He eventually took over as head coach and had a 94.2 win percentage.

Parrish comes to K-State from Marshall University in Huntington, W. Va. He led his team through two back-toback winning seasons. His 1984 season was the first winning season at Marshall in 20 years.

"Our goals are very, very high. We've made some big gains in our program. Winter conditioning went well and we've carried that over into spring training. The attitude of the players is positive," Par-

Being a Midwesterner, Parrish enjoys Kansas and K-State.

"It has solid academics, good people and a good work environment," Parrish said.

New harrier coach begins track duties

By The Collegian Staff

John Capriotti is returning to K-State as track and cross country coach. He replaces Steve Miller who resigned his position effective July 1.

Capriotti was assistant in men's and women's track and cross country programs at K-State from 1981 to 1984. Since then, he has been head coach of the women's track and cross country team at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill.

"John is looked to by coaches as one of the top recruiters in America and as having one of the really outstanding distance minds in the country," Miller said.

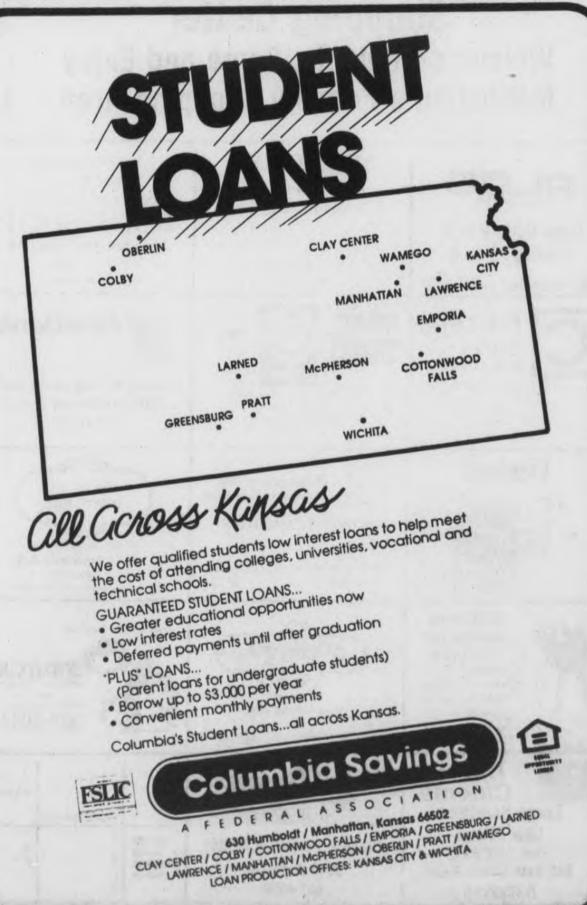

Capriotti attended Lincolnland Community College in Springfield, Ill., where he was a four-time junior college All-American in the one-mile and the three-mile runs. He earned All-American honors four times at Cal Poly State, where he graduated with a bachelor's degree in physical education in 1979.

"Education is No. 1. I want them to leave here with a degree because kids need to have a good education to get anywhere. "But you can also run at a high level. I want to win. And I'll spend my time coaching athletes and not John Capriotti's ego," Capriotti said.

Commissioner says trolleys 'inexpensive' transportation

By STACEY DARRELL Collegian Reporter

Old-fashioned trolley cars complete with brass bells and light fixtures could be a common sight in Aggieville by next spring.

City Commissioner Gene Klingler said he hopes to have trolleys in Manhattan by spring 1987, but right now it's just at the stage of seeing if the project is economically feasible.

"I was at the League of Municipalities meeting in Seattle and there was a booth there about these trolley buses," Klingler said.

Klingler said he thought it was a fairly inexpensive form of public transportation that would work well in Manhattan.

The major source of financing for the trolley car would be through a fare system. Klingler said federal government funding would also be available. The type of trolley being considered would have advertising slots on the sides that could serve as another form of financial support.

"The main thing we want to stay away from is funding through general taxing," Klingler said.

The main purpose of the trolleys would be to aid the Manhattan public, Klingler said. Certain routes, possibly from Aggieville to downtown and Aggieville to Westloop, would form a city public transportation system.

"Through the tolley buses, we hope to create a Manhattan public crease convention and tourism trade," he said. "We want the Manhattan public to be able to get where they want to go as easily and as inexpensive as possible."

The trolley cars under consideration are from Ocala, Fla. The price range is from $85,000 to $100,000, depending on options selected. The 36-passenger trolleys run on diesel motors and have rubber tires. Plans now call for the purchase of two or three tolley

"The vehicles we are looking at just have the basics - an intercom system, a heater, possibly advertising on the outside and one or two will be handicapped accessible," Klingler said.

Students learn 'hands on'

Publications provide training

By SANDY WINTER Collegian Reporter

K-State students with writing or photography talent, and an interest in communications should take part in Student Publications Inc., a handson experience in producing awardwinning yearbooks and newspapers at K-State.

Student Publications is responsible for the production of the Kansas State Collegian newspaper and the Royal Purple yearbook as well as the Campus Directory.

Student Publications also hosts several high school journalism workshops throughout the year. Students who have a background in high school publications may wish to get involved on the college level and can do so by contacting Dave Adams, adviser to Student Publications and associate professor in journalism and mass communications, or by applying in the Student Publications office located in Kedzie Hall 103.

"Usually, students must be at the sophomore level before it's practical for them to join one of the staffs, but there have been some unique individuals who get involved as freshmen," said Adams.

The K-State Collegian has three complete staffs: a news staff, an advertising staff as well as a photography staff.

During the academic year, the news staff has reporters assigned to eight desks: campus, city, govern- $85,000 from student fees," Adams ment, business, agriculture, editorial/opinion, sports, and arts/entertainment. Students in journalism and mass communications who are required to enroll in the Reporting II class provide the Collegian with a majority of its reporting staff. Aside from Reporting II students, Student Publications maintains staffs by employing 150 students, some of whom aren't communications majors, Adams said. "A lot of students can get involved on the Royal Purple yearbook staff as freshmen because of their high school layout experience," Adams

An editor and an advertising manager for The Collegian are appointed each semester by the Board of Student Publications.

The Board of Student Publications consists of four students elected during the annual student government elections, three faculty members and an ex-officio member. The same board appoints a new editor for the Royal Purple each year. The editors, in turn, choose their own staffs from applications.

Student Publications is a non-profit corporation chartered by the state of Kansas in 1937, Adams said. Since then the organization has become the Royal Purple Corp. and currently operates on a budget of just under $1 million, Adams said.

"Student Publications gets about said. "That sounds like a lot, but it is only about 10 percent of our budget."

The dedication of the student publications staffs has paid off in the recent past. Both the Royal Purple Yearbook and the Collegian were named Five-Star All American Publications recently by the Association of Collegiate Press. Five-Star nominations are then eligible for Pacemaker Awards, which the Royal Purple was awarded in 1981 and 1984 for top collegiate yearbook publication. The Collegian was a regional Pacemaker winner for 1985, Adams said.

Adams said many careers in the communications field are very competitive and that experience in student publications can give University students an edge.

"Especially in the field of photography, I urge students to get all the experience they can," Adams said. "Some of our photographers have had five or six years experience

"John Sleezer, a former K-State student from Olathe won Collegiate Photographer of the Year in 1985 and went on to work for the Philadelphia Inquirer. Andy Nelson, junior in journalism and mass communications, was a runner-up for Collegiate Photographer of the Year in 1985, and is currently on an internship at the Seattle Times," Adams said.

Center assists in job searches

By The Collegian Staff

The Career Planning and Placement Center, located in Holtz Hall on the University campus, provides a useful facility available to students, alumni and prospective students.

The center's main function is to assist people in developing and attaining career plans, said James Akin, associate director of the center.

Services provided by the center include: letter, resume and interview preparation; on-campus employ-formation; employer information and contacts; summer employment assistance; a career resource center; and career information dissemination.

Although the center caters mainly to seniors and graduate students, freshmen and other new students are encouraged to take advantage of the services provided, Akin said.

"Incoming students need to seek out people early, not wait until they're in their junior year," said Kathleen Lowman, assistant direc-ment interviews; job opportunity in- tor for the center. "By then it's usually too late.

"(Students) need to take the initiative to seek out services like ours to get answers to their questions,"

The center does not have an organized program for new students, but does offer a computer-assisted program - System of Interactive Guidance and Information - to help students with career-related options.

"SIGI is a computer-assisted interactive career guidance program. It helps the student to determine his or her real values, goals and priorities," Lowman said.

While SIGI is available to all students, the system is more useful to freshmen and sophomores.

"The system works better for the student who is at the early stages of his or her college career, rather than in the later stages," Lowman said. "By the time the student is a junior or senior, it's really too late to help them with choosing a career.'

Program can help older students

By KRIS ALLAN Collegian Reporter

Students 25 years old and older have an organization on campus just for them. The Fenix office was organized to meet the needs of adult students entering or returning to college.

Ruth Hoeflin, director of the Fenix program, has her office in Holton Hall. Hoeflin and assistant director, Beverly Laskey, assist the older students in reaching their individual goals upon returning to Older students have special problems traditional students — those 18 to 21 years old - most likely haven't had to deal with yet, Lasky said. These problems can include supporting a family and finding child care during classes. Fenix attempts to help students deal with these problems and also have a successful college career.

Other services for the older students include advisers in each college who are sensitive to their situation and a student club, Association of Adults Returning to

The objectives of AARTS, according to the Fenix handbook, are to: acquaint the re-entry undergraduate with K-State and its functions; promote camaraderie and supportive friendships; enhance faculty understanding of adult problems; serve as an advocacy group on issues of concern to adults returning to school; and to promote changes in the educational system for the benefit of all students.

"The Fenix Handbook: A guide for adult undergraduates" is an informative publication that contains information on everything from how to drop and/or add a class to car pooling and ride shar-

"We have a variety of people coming in...single parents - both male and female - farmers that have lost their farms and early retirees from the military to name a few," Laskey said.

Although its offical charge is to serve adult students, the Fenix office will help anyone who comes to it, Laskey said.

The symbol of the office, the Phoenix bird, comes from an ancient Egyptian myth about a beautiful bird with the power to renew its life. Adult students are "renewing" their lives by returning to school, and the Fenix office feels they are a vital part of the University.

'They have lived long enough to have a wealth of information that they and the University can benefit from," Laskey said.

Fair entertainment for all tastes, ages

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

Although the final grandstand act wasn't booked until early this month, officials of the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson boast that this year's entertainment will have something for everyone.

Ten evenings of entertainment, beginning Friday, Sept. 5, and concluding Sunday, Sept. 14, highlight the fair. The Fair Boards' Entertainment Committee has announced that single shows will begin at 7:30 p.m., while showtime will be 5:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. for nights featuring two

Sept. 5 is Preview Day of the state fair with John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band. The group is most famous for its role in the soundtrack of the movie "Eddie and the Cruisers," the story of a fictional rock group playing '50s-influenced rock 'n' roll.

The Oak Ridge Boys will perform two shows Sept. 6. The quartet gained national recognition as a top country/rock act with the release of "Y'All Come Back Saloon" in 1977. The group's opening act will be Exile, a band that first became known for its popular category music, changing later to country-western Air Supply has been signed for one show at 7:30 p.m. Sept. 7. Although the group's name does not appear on the Official Daily Program, mailed in early July, or on the order forms inserted in Kansas newspapers, persons ordering tickets for the show can do so by writing the group's name into the space allotted.

The rock group Survivor originally had been scheduled to appear Sept. 7, but representatives for the group notified the fair that the group's tour had been cancelled.

The fair board had then announced a Merle Haggard/Brenda Lee show for the first Sunday of the fair, but Haggard's agent notified officials a scheduling conflict would keep Haggard from appearing. Country music star Willie Nelson will give his fourth Kansas State Fair performance Sept. 8. In 1982, the grandstand was sold out for his show, the first sellout in the fair's history, according to fair officials. Mr. Mister, a rock group that formed three years ago, will perform

The State Fair Truck and Tractor

Pull will be at 1 and 7 p.m. Sept. 10. The Statler Brothers will be performing in the grandstand for a single show Sept. 11. Members of the quartet, longtime favorites of the fair, were voted "Entertainers of the Year" in 1985 by the Music City

Tammy Wynette, with opening act Michael Martin Murphey, will present two shows Sept. 12. Wynette has been named Country Music Association's "Female Vocalist of the Year" for three consecutive years.

Comedian Red Skelton is scheduled to appear for one show Sept. 13. His performing career has spanned vaudeville, burlesque, showboats, motion pictures, radio and 20 years on television. Frankie Avalon, Fabian Forte and Bobby Rydell, three teen idols of the late '50s and early '60s, will be performing together on Sept. 14, the final day of the state fair. Calling themselves "The Golden Boys of the Bandstand," the trio will appear for Ticket order forms are available in the Official Daily Program which were distributed in various newspapers in July.

To order tickets without a form, purchasers must include all necessary information, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope and add $1 to the ticket total for postage and handling, said Bob Gottschalk, executive secretary of the

Information needed to process orders is the date and time of show, the artist performing, the ticket price, the number of tickets wanted, and the number of gate tickets

The fair has two special ticket packages available to save fairgoers money, Gottschalk said.

The "Family Fun Pack," selling for $15, entitles the purchaser to four outside gate tickets, 20 ride tickets, four tickets to the Old Mill and four rides on the State Fair railroad. The "Superticket" is a sheet of 10 outside gate tickets costing $20.

These ticket packages, as well as gate tickets, are available at all Dillon's stores including the Manhattan stores.

Alumni share careers with undergraduates

By The Collegian Staff

The Alumni Learning Exchange is a program, sponsored by University Learning Enhancement and Resource Network, designed to give students practical information about a wide range of careers options.

With help from the KSU Alumni Association, alumni give U-LearN detailed information about their job experiences and their education.

Tracy Fraser, director of U-LearN, said alumni are mailed an informational brochure asking them to fill out a job profile sheet. This is a detailed questionnaire concerning many aspects of career development. The completed forms are kept on file at U-LearN.

Students wanting to use the program are shown specific profile sheets that match their career interests and goals. Because these files contain alumni home phone numbers and addresses, they are monitored by student paraprofessionals who work at U-LearN.

"The files are frequently used during pre-enrollment time," Fraser said. "The students can get information on what classes were most useful to people who are not in the working world."

Fraser said there are approximately 85 profile sheets now on file in U-LearN.

"One of our fall projects is to increase the number of sheets and expand our range of occupations," Fraser said. Advertisements will be placed in the K-Stater, the Collegian and other college newspapers in hopes of encouraging more alumni to participate, she said.

Another goal this fall is to market the Alumni Learning Exchange more effectively to students. Fraser said this will be done using fliers and ads.

Regents OK satellite system

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

In mid-May, K-State was encourage by the Kansas Board of Regents to submit a priority budget request for a $5.1 million satellite telecommunications system.

K-State requested a multimillion dollar appropriation to be spread over four years, said Charles Hein, former director of communications. The appropriation request was written into the Regents' budget request prepared in June for later legislative consideration.

The Regents' Special Committee on Agriculture and Economic Development, which recommended K-State be the home of the proposed system, also recommended that other Regents schools be allowed to utilize the system when necessary. The committee stipulated that all courses - both credit and non-credit be coordinated through the Regents office in Topeka.

The project - sought after by all of the Regents institutions - was awarded to K-State which proposed telecasting of Cooperative Extension and Continuing Education courses, as well as programs from other state schools and agencies. If funding is granted, the system will be known as the Educational Communications Center, Hein said.

Among other possible uses, the center, which would be able to broadcast both live and videotaped programs, could be used by the College of Veterinary Medicine and the University of Kansas Medical Center to transmit health care information and to conduct in-service training for their respective professions, the project proposal says.

"The uplink transmitter and 105 receive-only dishes located in Cooperative Extension offices in every county and five more at area health centers for use by the KU Medical Center, would be the nucleus

"Using the Regents Telenet and Telebridge telephone conferencing apparatus already in place at K-State, the Center would provide one-way video/two-way audio conferencing, classes, meetings and other programs," the proposal says. With the installation of fiber optics currently underway on campus, technology would allow transmissions to be sent to every building on

If the budget plan is approved by the Legislature, K-State would receive $1.5 million in fiscal year 1988 to begin setting up the telecommunication facility, Hein said.

"The initial request is for the equipment and personnel we would need to run the facilities," said Hein,

Literary review: original idea

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

Creating a magazine that would review literary work from all over the world and be distributed throughout the United States and Canada was a dream that became a reality in 1982 for a K-State English

Gary Clift, editor of Literary Magazine Review, has designed the magazine with an original concept. Clift said his publication is the only one that gives an in-depth review of literary work.

"We print reviews that are 1,500 words, and the others are writing under 300 words, and people used to think they were lucky to get them," Clift said.

The magazine, which is funded through a $10 subscription rate, grants and donations, has a circulation of 500. Most copies go to institu-

"Everybody in the Big Ten and Ivy League schools have access to the publication," Clift said. "Any place people are interested in poetry and short fiction, they have recourse to the directories.'

The reviews are edited by Clift and sent back to the writer, who OKs the corrections and sends it back to Clift for publication. The reviewer receives $20 for each review appearing in the magazine.

Even though the publication is not funded through K-State, it acts as a learning tool for graduate students in the English program.

"It gives us a chance to see contemporary literature that we don't get to see in the classroom," said Karen Kaiser, an associate editor and graduate in English. "It shows us how literature is created. That is something that will never be taught, but something will grow from it."

Clift said he is tentatively planning on a commercial magazine review issue for this fall. Magazines to be reviewed would include publications such as Redbook, The New Yorker and Playboy.

The magazine is currently reviewing literary art that is not widely distributed and is read mostly by writers, he said.

"Sometimes the best writing doesn't have the widest reading,' Clift said.

Minority Affairs offers activities, assistance

By GONZALO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

The University's Minority Affairs Office in Holton Hall may not be the first place students look for help, but it could be for some.

And many may not realize the office serves two publics.

The office sponsors cultural activities which help minority students learn about and celebrate their culture, said Anne Butler, assistant dean and director for educational supportive services.

In addition, she said, minority affairs offers the Educational Suppor-tive Services program, which is designed to provide academic and supportive services for students from low- income and physically handicapped backgrounds.

Butler said most students don't understand that Educational Supportive Services is a division within the Minority Affairs Office. "People hear the word minority and just assume that the services are just for that population," she said. Butler said eligibility for the support services is determined by federal guidelines based on a stuprogram offers, among other things, tutoring, aid in study skills, information on financial aid, and career and guidance counseling.

The office assists students in making the transition to school and supports them by building on their strengths, Butler said.

"Our greatest priority within the group are those students who appear underprepared for the university ex-perience," Butler said, adding that many of these students are the first in their families to go to college.

Minority Affairs also serves the

"Our mission is to increase the number of minority students entering and graduating from the University," she said.

Presently, fewer than 5 percent of the students at K-State are minorities. Butler said the number has been holding steady for the past seven years even though University enrollment has been declining.

She said national figures show that even at times of declining enrollment, minorities are still a viable
